The weakest thing about the argument for the committee provision is that the speeches in favor of it do not ring true in the support of the administration in this war. They do not sound as though they were in earnest. They have an undertone of "perhaps this will do, or maybe this is good enough, or let us try this first." History teaches us that the common mistake of all nations—particularly the freest nations—in entering a war is to underestimate the difficulties and to be dazzled with an unfounded optimism of the chances of success. We are prone to think that we will not need very many men, that the war will not last very long, and that the enemy will be speedily defeated. In this war we are facing an enemy who has brought military science and national efficiency to the highest point—an enemy who knows the value of universal training and preparedness. If we were facing such an enemy single-handed, we would soon be rudely awakened from our dream of an easy and early victory. The only thing that will save us from such a disaster is the fact that the enemy is already busily engaged with other effective forces.

When we passed the war resolution we pledged in express terms all of the resources of our Nation for the successful prosecution of the war. This meant our resources of men as well as of money, and did not mean such resources as chose to volunteer for service. I am quite convinced that selective conscription is the only scientific and effective way of raising an army worthy of the name and of any use in the present emergency. In my judgment, gentlemen who argue otherwise are simply arguing that we are not going to have a real war. Even the men who want us to try the volunteer system first are careful to say that if we have a real conflict and prolonged struggle conscription must shortly come. Why not, then, prepare for such a struggle and start right?

HEADQUARTERS FARRAGUT-THOMAS POST, No. 8, G. A. R.,
DEPARTMENT OF MISSOURI,
Kansas City, Mo., April 23, 1917.

Hon. W. P. BORLAND, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: This Grand Army post, the largest in Missouri, most cordially indorses your action on universal compulsory military service.

I herewith, by direction of this post, inclose you copy of resolutions u[illegible]sly adopted on Saturday, April 21, 1917.

Very respectfully,

C. A. MORRIS, Commander.

KANSAS CITY, MO., April 23, 1917.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at a regular meeting of Farragut-Thomas Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic, the largest Grand Army post in Missouri, April 21, 1917.

C. A. MORRIS, Commander.
R. J. EDMONDS, Adjutant.

Resolutions by Farragut-Thomas Post.

Whereas a majority of the members of the House Committee on Military Affairs is adverse to the plan of "selective draft" for raising an army, a majority of said committee having voted in favor of a combination of volunteer system and selective draft for raising the required army; and not believing this system advisable: Therefore

Resolved, That Farragut-Thomas Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Missouri, expresses disapproval of a combination of volunteer and selective draft for creating an army, for the reason that the conscript, associated with the volunteer, will be discredited throughout his term of service. In view of this, we favor universal training and equitable conscription, as this would require every man, irrespective of station, color, or wealth, to do his duty, while under the volunteer system the load falls to the "willing horse" upon whose services the country relies, while the slacker slumbers in security.

Resolved further, That we adhere to and emphasize the resolutions adopted by this Grand Army post over a year ago, viz, February 10, 1916, on national defense and transmitted at the time to the authorities at Washington, advocating the greatest Navy in the world, increasing our standing Army to 250,000 men, universal compulsory military training and service by every able-bodied citizen—the rich and poor alike—on a plan to be devised by the Army General Staff, all under the authority and exclusive control of the National Government. Also the establishment of gun and munition plants at interior points in the country secure from coast attack.

We recommend the adoption of the foregoing resolutions.

C. A. MORRIS,
H. B. KELLY,
R. J. EDMONDS,
Committee.

ST. LOUIS, April 25, 1917.

Hon. W. P. BORLAND, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It was my pleasure and good fortune as a Texan to have the pleasure of casting my first vote in Missouri in your district and of voting for the greatest of the Presidents and for yourself. This fact gives me further satisfaction when I note, from time to time, how cordially you support the well-thought-out policies of the President.

Any Member of the Congress who may be doubtful of the position of the American public at this time has but to take a trip most anywhere to find that there is practical unanimity of opinion back of the Wilson policies. The mosquitolike buzzing of pacifist and pro-German in his ears may make him think that there is opposition, but an intelligent effort to obtan an insight into the real feeling of the country will soon convince him differently.

I have just made a trip south as far as Florida, and everywhere it was evident that the people are with the President and want to see his plans and policies quickly put into effect. In reading the editorials of the big dailies of the southern cities all were found to be unequivocally for conscription as urged by the President and to be working heroically to increase the food crops of the South this year. They are organizing canning clubs, backed by a proper vegetable acreage therefor; calf and pig clubs, backed by the bankers; gardening clubs, backed by the officers and people of the cities and towns, and everywhere holding meetings with the farmers and planning for increased corn and foodstuff acreage. And, notwithstanding all of this effort, they are not behindhand in the work of securing volunteers for the various branches of war service, as is attested by the high percentages along this line now accredited to the southern cities and States.

It does one good to note the whole-hearted support of the Government there everywhere apparent and leads to wonder that any Congressman from that section should be willing at this time to delay urgent and needed action by seeking to impart his personal and impractical hobby into pending legislation. Conscription is fair, and it is democratic. It will not prevent the high idealism that actuates the volunteer, but will protect those possessing it by making the slacker of high and low degree do that duty due to the Government by all citizens in its times of stress.

Success to you.

Cordially, yours, R. H. WESTER.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DUDLEY DOOLITTLE,
OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, to me the question of a volunteer system or selective conscription—draft system, if you please—is now answered plainly and clearly. I have reached my decision, in the main based on the following facts:

Our Republic is the greatest of all democracies. It is the duty of every citizen to fight for his country if he be required. Every patriotic, red-blooded young American would respond to a call for volunteers. The praise of neighbors, comrades, and Government accompanies those who go to the front. But no man who would volunteer is deprived under the draft of an opportunity to prove his patriotism, and the slacker is made to do his share.

Not all the red-blooded young men are needed in the Army, however; millions are needed on the farms. A nation or an army can not exist without sustenance. A doctor is of more value just behind the firing line than in the line. On the firing line he would have but one life to give to his country. Behind the lines he might save hundreds of lives for his country. A young chemist on the firing line might kill a half dozen of the enemy; kept at work in the powder factory he would aid in furnishing ammunition to destroy a thousand. And so we could go on.

The patriotic citizen should not have to decide whether, to serve his country best, he should stay at home or go. If he determines it himself and patriotically decides that he can render more service to his country by staying at his employment, his own neighbors may charge him with lack of patriotism and being a slacker and a coward.

The United States is at war. The essence of national service in these trying days is to place oneself at the disposal of the Government for whatever the Government may think best. The individual can not for himself decide where he is most needed; the Government alone can decide. Herein lies the weakness and the unfairness of the volunteer system. It is not a matter of personal choice; it is a matter of national obligation. The fundamentals of democracy demand that what is the business of all must be the duty of all. Democracy means that all shall be treated the same.

The willing patriot should not be sacrificed on the altar of duty because the unwilling shirker prefers to stay at home and let others take the risk. Selective conscription is the only method that puts all citizens on the same equal basis, regardless of social status. It is the democratic scheme, because influence or position in life would be of no avail in seeking to escape a plain duty to serve the Republic. In a land of equal opportunity and favor there shall also be equal liability and equal obligation resting upon one and all alike when the Nation needs its sons on the battle field. Selective conscription, as defined by the President, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, is not a last alternative; it is a first choice. The Government in time of war should say who it wants for the Army and who to stay at home to balance the fighting efficiency of the Nation.

Opportunity is now open for approximately 600,000 volunteers in the National Guard and Regular Army. Patriots who prefer to be known as volunteers can enlist as such. The volunteer soldier is a real patriot and makes a wonderful fighter. History shows there is nothing the matter with the volunteer soldier; it is the system under which he serves that is one-sided and ineffective for the greatest good.

Mr. Speaker, I have reached this conclusion in favor of the selective draft in war time, as against the volunteer system, in spite of my former prejudice against the draft and my strong leaning toward the volunteer system. I had failed to distinguish between the historical excellence of the volunteer soldier's service and the woefully imperfect system, honeycombed with partisan politics, favoritism, and chance, under which the private volunteer served.

I am certain my conversion places me with those whose stand best represents the lasting welfare of the United States.

Resolutions Against Conscription.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a dispatch from the Central Labor Union of Toledo, 10,000 strong, announcing the adoption of resolutions against conscription and similar reslutions passed by the Machinists Union and the Glass Workers Union, of Toledo.

The following telegram received from the Central Labor Union of Toledo, representing 90 locals and 10,000 industrial workers, signed by John J. Quinlivan, business agent of the Central Labor Union, on the question of conscription.

The Machinists Union, 2,700 strong, passed a similar resolution with only one dissenting vote.

The Glass Workers Union, one of the strongest unions in Toledo, unanimously passed a resolution which is appended hereto, also a letter from a veteran soldier and officer of the Civil War.

The resolutions are as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 27, 1917.

Hon. I. R. SHERWOOD,
Congress Hall, Washington, D. C.:

The Central Labor Union of Toledo at its last regular meeting, April 19, went on record unanimously against the conscription or selective-draft bill now before Congress, and instructed the undersigned to ask you, on behalf of over 10,000 trade unionists, to work and vote against the above measure. We note by to-day's press reports that you have been requested to resign by some of our so-called citizens if you see fit to vote against the conscription bill. If you will take time to scrutinize the membership of these organizations to which these citizens belong you will find that none of them represent labor. We take this opportunity to congratulate you on your stand against militarism, and further request that you continue your efforts to defeat this measure. Labor wants you on the job, and knowing you as we do we feel confident that you are coming out on top. The voters, or at least the great majority of them in your congressional district, are back of you.

TOLEDO CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
By JOHN J. QUINLIVAN, Secretary.

TOLEDO, OHIO, April 7, 1917.

Hon. I. R. SHERWOOD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Following resolutions adopted by Local Union No. 81, American Flint Glass Workers:

Whereas there has been or is being prepared a bill called the selective conscription and military-training bill, to be submitted to Congress and Senate to draft young men into the military service; and

Whereas to enact such a law would establish military autocracy in the United States, such as has ruled the people of the German Empire with an iron hand, and has been one of the reasons for the United States in plunging into the awful conflict which has been raging in Europe for nearly three years: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Local Union No. 81, American Flint Glass Workers Union go on record as being opposed to the enactment of conscription and compulsory military training laws; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Hon. I. R. SHERWOOD, National Representative at Washington, D. C.

With best wishes for your health and happiness, I beg to remain,

Truly yours,

FRANK B. MACKALL,
Secretary Local Union No. 81.

LOUISVILLE, KY., April 25, 1917.

Gen. SHERWOOD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: During our national life our Army and Navy (and which, practically speaking, is our militia) have fought more battles and gained greater achievements in the same length of time than any other army and navy, as every historian knows. A sample of the courage and valor of our militia may be cited at the Battle of New Orleans in 1815, where Gen. Jackson, with 6,000 new volunteers, defeated the English veteran army, 12,000 strong, and killed and wounded 2,600 of his enemy, while Jackson's loss was only 8 killed and 15 wounded, and no man can say from that day to this that we have ever sent one of our militia armies to a battle field where they displayed less courage and valor and less tact and coolness than Gen. Jackson's army did on this occasion. We call our Army and do our fighting and go home. We do better fighting because every man has an interest in what he is fighting for, while other countries have, by their system, got to keep an army of 600,000 or 700,000 men all the time tented on the field, waiting for possible war, while if we had a common-sense universal training law, where the man could be trained in his own neighborhood, every man taking his turn alternately in drilling. The militia was organized, trained, and officered by the States in the Civil War, before they were turned over to the Federal Army, the United States paying all expenses for this, and President Lincoln and our greatest generals never made any objections to this, but always encouraged it, and President Lincoln honored his soldiers above other men and said at a sanitary fair, at Philadelphia, in part, on June 16, 1863, "For, say what you will, the most is due the soldier who takes his life in his hands and goes to fight the battles of his country." What a contrast in this and what President Wilson said in his speech of April 15, 1917, where he makes the man who stays at home and works to produce supplies equal to the man who goes to the front with his gun.

These rights of the States as specified have always been adhered to, and if this is doubted I stand ready to prove it. What other nation with its military system has done half as well in its accomplishments?

I am for the war, but for it according to the Constitution. It is broad enough to whip the Germans or any other nation. I know something of this up-to-date system of which we hear so much, and it means power for a few men only and a lock on every man's mouth, and if he criticizes wrong, as every true, loyal citizen has the right to do, a squad of soldiers will be knocking at his door.

The Government authorities have no right to establish training camps to train officers to be appointed over the militia, whether they are volunteers or drafted men, or to train the militia itself; and if the universal-training bill becomes a law the States and not the Government have the right to do the training. In my opinion, any attempt on the part of the Government to establish training camps to train officers to be placed over the militia, or to train the militia itself, or to be operated as a universal training camp for any of the militia or for officers of same, will meet with widespread dissatisfaction, as this right belongs to the States; and the day those in authority break over the Constitution, as they have announced in the newspapers they would do, by opening training camps on the 1st of May, that day the glory and liberty of this country will start on a downward grade. We now have the best military system in the world for our own people, notwithstanding its enemies.

Yours, truly,

L. W. LINDLER.
Late First Lieutenant Company A, Seventeenth Indiana.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HARRY C. WOODYARD,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Speaker, this bill as reported from the Committee on Military Affairs gives the administration in the first place everything it asks for except one thing, viz, selective conscription; and, in the second place, it gives it all it asks for should the volunteer plan prove unsuccessful. In that event the President is clothed with all the powers he now demands.

Aside from this one issue there is practically no difference of opinion here. There is a difference as to the minimum and maximum age provision, and in that particular, too, the committee has improved on the bill by fixing the minimum at 21 and the maximum age at 40, instead of 19 and 25. Even as to the matter of "selection," upon which the administration so strongly insists, that is a right which the Government may exercise under the volunteer plan fully covered by law. It may exclude men who are not fitted for the service but are more suitable elsewhere.

The advocates of conscription contend, Mr. Speaker, two things, namely, that conscription is more "democratic" and that an army of the size asked for can be the more quickly raised. In support of the latter contention they assume that the volunteer plan will fail and erroneously declare that it has proven a failure in the past. All of which I most vehemently deny.

I deny that a conscripted army will be a more "democratic" army than a volunteer army. The armies that have fought our wars have all been volunteer armies, and they certainly have been democratized to the maximum. I deny that a conscripted army can be more quickly raised, trained, and outfitted, if the people's heart and soul are in this war—and I hope that to be the case—than a volunteer army. I contend that a volunteer army will be a fighting force of finer morale, greater efficiency, higher patriotism and intelligence, and possessed of a deeper inspiration of enthusiasm at all times than any army which is raised under the draft. If efficiency is what is being aimed at, it is far more likely to be had from men who volunteer than from men who are the unwilling and discontented results of conscription.

Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this bill which is calculated to retard the upbuilding of the army of 1,000,000 which the President and his advisers are asking, for the Government is in no condition to take care of an army of that size if it could be enlisted to-morrow. Either way—volunteer or conscription—it will take time. In my judgment, the Army, so far as the requisite number of men is concerned, will be ready long before the Government machinery is constructed or adjusted to handle it. I feel as justified in that opinion as those who disagree with us on this question have a right in arbitrarily assuming that a call for volunteers will fail to result in a prompt and satisfactory compliance.

There is abundant evidence before us that a call for volunteers will be heard and heeded up and down the land. Every day since we declared a state of war there have been offers without number on the part of men anxious and willing to volunteer in this war, to raise companies, regiments, and even divisions and turn them over to the Government. I know personally of two friends of mine who came to Washington and offered the War Department not only to raise a regiment each, but to fully equip them at their own expense and then turn them over to the Government. We all know of an ex-President's patriotic offer to raise a division of experienced fighting men, men above the age which the administration's conscription law would touch, and turn that division over to the Government when it was raised. And I can readily imagine, from what I know, of how chilly the patriotic offers of my two friends were received at the War Department, what will come of Col. Roosevelt's volunteer division.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that in a time like this, when men everywhere are offering themselves with that fine spirit of self-sacrifice and patriotism which has always characterized our men when the country was at war, that they should be held at bay until it could be ascertained whether or not a law could be secured to draft them? Why a draft anyway? I confess that I am mystified, that I am at a loss to account for this demand, when there is no apparent necessity to resort to it now. Should that necessity arise later, well and good. This bill provides for that, and provides amply. It gives the President in all those respects everything he is asking this Congress to grant.

But they say your volunteer plan is a failure; that it has failed before. When, pray? The only time the draft was resorted to by this Government was in the third year of the Civil War, and we had already raised an Army of over 2,000,000 as brave men as ever followed a flag. They say that we should fasten the odious and un-American and undemocratic draft upon the men of our country because England had to resort to it. And so England did, but not until she had raised 5,000,000 of her 6,500,000 under the volunteer system. It would have taken England just as long to train and equip her first army to send to France to supplement her little army of regulars dispatched there at the beginning of the war had they been drafted as it did to train and equip her first army of volunteers. It was not until near the third year that England dared to resort to the draft. She dared not do it in her colonies—in Canada and Australia. Should this war continue three years longer, which hardly anybody believes it will, conscription may come, but there is no excuse for it in the United States now, I care not how strenuously the War Department contends that there is, or what other reasons—and there are many, and the roots grow deep and extend far—why there is, among a certain class of people, other than the Army officers, whose desire in this matter we can more clearly understand and analyze, a determined effort to change the century-old policy of the United States and inflict a compulsory one upon the young men of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I do not share the doubts which advocates of conscription have so tearfully voiced here, that we can not give the President a million volunteers, and give them to him without any more delay than getting the machinery of conscription started, intricate as it is, would entail. Those doubts, in the largest measure, are unsupported by the facts of history, and for the most part, in my judgment, rest upon the unsubstantial foundation of either an audacious assumption or a fevered imagination. In either or both cases they are not to be relied on, and hence not to be accepted.

This country is not ready for the draft, nor is there now any necessity for resorting to it, Mr. Speaker. It is a hated and detested policy and has been so regarded by the people of the United States ever since they set up this great free Republic. It is only to be thought of as a last resort, and at the outset of our engagement in this war it certainly can not be said that we have reached that stage, nor is it anywhere in sight, nor is there any opinion sufficiently large to be noticed that we will ever arrive there.

All we ask in this bill is, first, that the patriotic boys and men of this country be given an opportunity to volunteer their services; that they be permitted to escape the stigma of conscription. We have met the imaginative assumption of the conscriptionists, who have foreordained volunteerism to failure by safeguarding against it. We give to the President ample powers to go ahead with his preparations on a conscription basis, while our patriotic sons everywhere are responding to a call for volunteers. If our plan fails, which we are justified as much by the facts of history in declaring that it will not as those on the other side are in affirming that it will, then bring on your conscription, Mr. President, and we are with you. But until then, for God's sake, do not let us make this false start in a great war venture with a thoroughly un-American and undemocratic policy. If England could raise a volunteer army of 5,000,000 certainly we can raise one of 1,000,000. Americans will volunteer as freely and as loyally and as promptly—I believe more so—as the Australians and the Canadians. They would have resented the draft as we resent it now. It has not been necessary even now for England to fasten conscription on her colonies, and the citizens of the United States are no less brave and no less willing to fight for their country's flag than are our neighbors to the north of us. Volunteerism has not failed in Canada, and it will not fail here. Under it we can give the Government the finest fighting force it is possible to raise anywhere, for a volunteer army is the best army to be had. None better can be secured.

West Virginia, Mr. Speaker, is, compared with the population of some of the other States, not large; but since the declaration of war West Virginia has two regiments in the field, one of them having had experience on the Mexican border. Since the war with Germany started, West Virginians have been volunteering their services and are being enlisted in the Navy and the Regular Army. In the Army branch the figures of enlistment will show that in proportion to her male population West Virginia leads Illinois, which heads the list for the number of enlistments. Let there be a call for volunteers and West Virginia will not only do her part but will furnish more than her quota of as fine fighting men, as intelligent, and as patriotic young men as ever followed the flag of our country on a battle field. We do not need conscription in West Virginia; we do not want it. It is odious to our people. At least we do not need it and we do not want it until a call for volunteers is made and an opportunity to see how that plan works out in raising an army of the size that the Government has asked for.

Much has been said in speeches here and in the press of the country to the effect that a Representative in Congress should "rise above his constituents" when the sentiment of his constituents appears to be opposed to conscription and favorable to trying out the volunteer system first. That is a peculiar argument. If it fits one side of this proposition, it fits the other with equal aptness. This oral effort to make water rise above its source is, to say the least, interesting. In my case I am bothered not in the least by any friction with my constituents. From the first I have been opposed to fastening the draft on the country without giving the volunteer method a trial. Without any advice from me on the subject, without even knowing how I viewed this matter, the people of the fourth West Virginia district have, it appears from the extensive correspondence I have received from leading men in every county, taken the same view that I do.

They do not want conscription undertaken as the initial prelude to the raising of an army. They are willing to accept it, should the volunteer plan prove unsatisfactory. On that proposition we stand together. And in the final analysis, they, as well as I, will patriotically stand by the Government in whatever situation may arise in this great war. We are sincere in our opinion as to this proposition. Time and experience may prove our opinion the wrong one, but we have no doubts on that score now. I am just as anxious for the United States to win this war as they, and am just as anxious now as when I cast my vote in favor of what was virtually a declaration of war against the German Empire.

I would not put an obstacle in the way of the Government successfully prosecuting this war, nor am I when I support the volunteer plan. I am supporting it because the very idea of conscription and draft is hateful to me. I thoroughly detest it. I consider it wholly un-American and undemocratic. I look upon it as repugnant to the spirit of this Republic. I regard it as smacking of militarism with a most rancid taste. I condemn it as a menace to our country's future, that future which will come after this great war is over. I brand it as a dangerous and a far step toward military caste. I can think of it as nothing short of vicious, harmful, and immoral.

The United States is not ripe for this thing. I do not believe that the people think it necessary at this time. I sincerely believe that could they have an opportunity each and every one of them to express himself on it, he would say, as we are saying, try the volunteer method first; should that fail, then conscription.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that an attempt has been made to fasten the policy of conscription onto the organic law of our country. Each and every time it failed. The people, through their Representatives in Congress, saw to that. From the foundation of our Government until now, conscription has been odious to American citizens. It does not accord with the traditions and ideas of our people.

As early as 1812, it will be remembered, an attempt was made in Congress to do what is being attempted to be done here now—pass a conscription law; legalize the draft. Upon that occasion such great statesmen as Daniel Webster raised their voices in protest against this un-American, unpatriotic, and vicious doctrine, and the assault against the liberties of our land was frustrated. In a speech against conscription in the Congress of that year—one of the greatest and most effective and most far-reaching in its beneficent results of any speech delivered by Webster, he said:

> Laws, sir, of this nature can create nothing but opposition. If you scatter them abroad, like the fabled serpent's teeth, they will spring up into armed men. A military force can not be raised in this manner, but by the means of a military force. If the administration has found that it can not form an army without conscription, it will find, if it venture on these experiments, that it can not enforce conscription without an army. The Government was not constituted for such purposes. Framed in the spirit of liberty and in the love of peace, it has no powers which render it able to enforce such laws. The attempt, if we rashly make it, will fail, and having already thrown away our peace we may thereby throw away our government.

Mr. Speaker, for the second time within a month I stand upon the floor of this House experiencing a sense of my oath to my Government and my obligations as a Member of this great body as I have never felt them in the nine years of my service as a Representative. The other time I refer to was when, three weeks ago, I cast my vote in favor of the war resolution. That was the most solemn hour in all my life and it weighed upon me as no weight ever did before. Hardly less solemn is the present hour. Deep within me I feel the indescribable gravity of these times which have come upon our peace-loving land.

I am trying to see clearly and think coolly and act wisely and patriotically on the great problems which we must settle as God gives me the light to see, to think, and to act. In the forefront, I am endeavoring to keep the burning words of my oath before me as a shining sun by day and a pillar of flame by night. I know that every Member of this House is making the same effort; that they feel as I do the unparalleled gravity of this crisis in our country's affairs. We do not all see things alike, nor vote in the same way, but the devotion of all to the common cause of our country is the same. There is no difference between us there. We want to do the right as we are given to see it. From the President to the pettiest official in the Government, that is the animating thought and the dominating purpose. From the highest to the lowest, the oath is substantially the same. The President, I believe and I know, is acting in this matter with regard for the oath of his great office paramount in his heart and mind. The Members of this House who agree with him on this question are doing not a whit less. Those who disagree with him on this issue are just as zealous in upholding the Constitution and the laws of our land as he is. Their oath is just as dear to them as the President's is to him.

With a profound consciousness of it, with a full appreciation of my action, with an abiding faith in my country, with the awful seriousness of the great duties which devolve upon me to conscientiously and patriotically discharge to the best of my ability, and with a prayer in my heart to Almighty God to save and protect our great free Republic and give it wisdom and strength I cast my vote against conscription, against the draft, but—"My country! Right or wrong, my country!"

Resolutions Adopted by the League of Republican Clubs of Cleveland, Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD, under the general leave, by inserting resolutions adopted at a meeting of the League of Republican Clubs of Cleveland, Ohio, the greatest Republican organization in the State of Ohio, indorsing the attitude of the President in this crisis. It is apparent that the Republicans of the United States are supporting the President more strongly than Democrats:

LEAGUE OF REPUBLICAN CLUBS OF CUYAHOGA COUNTY,
Cleveland, Ohio, April 25, 1917.

Hon. HENRY I. EMERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, president and secretary, respectively, of the Cuyahoga County League of Republican Clubs, hereby certify that at a regular meeting of the league, held on Tuesday, April 24, 1917, the following resolutions were passed:

"Resolved, That the Cuyahoga County League of Republican Clubs, in behalf of all the organizations represented by this league, urge upon citizens generally the strongest possible support of the President of the United States in his farseeing and patriotic stand for selective conscription as now pending before Congress.

"Resolved further, That Congressmen EMERSON, CROSSER, and GORDON, representing Cuyahoga County in the House of Representatives, be requested to support the President in his request for selective conscription, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the said Congressmen."

Resolutions Passed by the Washington Harvard Club.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. FREDERICK W. DALLINGER,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions of the Harvard Club, indorsing the course taken by the President and Congress in joining the allied nations of entente.

The resolutions are as follows:

WASHINGTON HARVARD CLUB,
Washington, D. C.

At the meeting of the Washington Harvard Club, on April 17, 1917, it was—

Resolved, That the Washington Harvard Club, with a membership representative of all parts of the United States, hereby fully and heartily indorses the course taken by the President and the Congress in joining the allied nations of the entente in defense of individual liberty, of national independence, and of the freedom of the seas, and most thoroughly approves the use by our Government of the armament and resources of the country, without limit, for terminating successfully the great war.

Resolved, That in the judgment of this club universal military training and service are absolutely essential to the success of our arms, and should be instituted immediately by appropriate enactment.

Resolved, That as a club and as individuals we pledge our loyal support to the Government, and place ourselves unreservedly at its disposal for such services as we can render.

Resolved, That copies hereof be sent to the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House of Representatives, ambassadors and ministers of friendly nations in Washington, Senators and Representatives in Congress, members of the Cabinet, and Harvard Clubs throughout this country and abroad.

GEORGE N. HENNING, '94, President.

Resolutions Adopted by the Delaware Branch of the National Woman's Party.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT F. POLK,
OF DELAWARE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein resolutions adopted by the Delaware Branch of the National Woman's Party, relative to the Federal amendment, known as the Susan B. Anthony amendment, which I have been requested to have read into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas the question of woman's enfranchisement is fundamental and of paramount importance; and

Whereas in the present national crisis women, together with men, share the burdens of taxation, responsibility, and horrors of war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Delaware Branch of the National Woman's Party, in convention assembled, call upon our Senators and Representative in Congress to give their favorable support to the immediate passage of the Federal amendment known as the Susan B. Anthony amendment; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Senator SAULSBURY and Representative POLK, with a request that they be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the Senate and House, and also be sent to the President of the United States.

(Mrs.) M. P. DERICKSON BRINGHURST.
(Miss) ELIZABETH P. SPEAKMAN.
(Miss) PAULINE TOWNSEND.

Letter From Gen. A. B. Critchfield.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from one of my constituents.

The following letter was received by me from Gen. A. B. Critchfield, a resident of my district, who has served in the Ohio National Guard for a period of about 34 years, and in the Spanish-American War:

APRIL 27, 1917.

Hon. ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In response to your request, I will give you the following conclusions that I have reached after a careful analysis of the two bills now pending before Congress—the one known as the Dent bill, being the bill reported by the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the other being the Kahn, or the bill reported by the minority of the Military Affairs Committee.

. These bills both provide for conscription, which means compulsory service. The minority bill prohibits the President from accepting the services of volunteers and provides for an army raised by selective conscription alone, while the majority bill would authorize the President to call for volunteers and accept them into the service, at the same time authorizing him to use conscription to insure the raising of an army or armies as he may deem necessary. Neither bill provides for compulsory universal military training, as has been so often reported in our daily press. This feature is not included in either bill.

No matter what we may have thought regarding various questions concerning this war, we are now in it and a real condition confronts us demanding immediate action. Time is of vital importance. If the volunteer is given an opportunity, we can have an army in France months sooner than by any other method. Hundreds of men who have had training and service will volunteer. From our Army—Marines, National Guard, and Volunteers—we can send an army of 250,000 men to France as soon as they can be equipped and supplied. They can be used as reserves, immediately relieving trained men of the French and English Armies who could be moved up to the line of supports and the trenches. There our men would finish their training under real war conditions and have an opportunity to learn conditions at first-hand on the ground. Far more important still, in my judgment, would be the moral effect of the appearance of a quarter of a million American soldiers along the line in France. Thus while our Army was being trained under the same conditions and on the same ground as both the French and English soldiers were trained, who are to-day so effectively fighting the greatest battles of all time, we would be adding a moral effect and encouragement of incalculable value.

Let us take advantage of time and opportunity; let us answer the prayer of our French confreres for the United States to send an army to France—that we will, and that we will do it now.

I would not close the door of opportunity to the volunteer who offers his service, and by reason of this feature I think the Dent bill preferable.

At the same time we would give the President full power to proceed to raise an army or armies by any and all means and methods necessary to conclude this war, as all wars have been concluded in which our country has engaged, and at the earliest possible day.

Yours, respectfully,

A. B. CRITCHFIELD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution of H. B. Lyon Camp, No. 1259, U. C. V., in regular meeting last Monday.

The resolution is as follows:

H. B. LYON CAMP, U. C. V., PASSES RESOLUTIONS.

H B. Lyon Camp, No. 1259, U. C. V., in regular meeting last Monday passed the following resolution unanimously:

To His Excellency WOODROW WILSON,
President United States:

H. B. Lyon Camp, No. 1259, U. C. V., in regular meeting last Monday President of the United States and to those members of the Congress whose votes were cast to sustain his efforts to protect and defend our country from the attacks of a foreign foe the assurance of its earnest support, and in such manner as may be possible to men of their advanced years they pledge the President that they, veterans of the great War between the States, are ready to answer any call in the service that may be made upon them.

The adjutant of the camp is directed to forward to the President a properly engrossed copy of this expression of the camp.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. THETUS W. SIMS,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] offered his amendment, as follows:

"Provided further, That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, to organize, and equip not to exceed four Infantry divisions, the officers of which shall be selected in the manner provided by paragraph 3 of section 1 of this act: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organization of the Regular Army: And provided further, That there shall be no enlistments in said force of men liable to draft under section 1 of this act: And provided further, That no such voluntary force shall be accepted in any unit smaller than a division."

Now he changes it so that it reads one division instead of four. This amendment weakens the whole proposition. It should not be offered in such a way as to show plainly that the purpose of it is to enable only one man to come within its provisions. There may be one man in the United States to whom it might more fittingly apply than to any other man, but, perchance, there may be other men who can and who are equally willing and anxious to do exactly what it is intended that the one man who is in every Member's mind shall be permitted to do.

In my desultory remarks on this bill in the general debate I said in substance that in my district, the eighth of Tennessee, the Republicans nominated against me a very popular man. Hon. L. M. Rhodes, of Huntingdon. For several years Mr. Rhodes had been the State president of the Farmers' Union of Tennessee. He was well and favorably known all over the State. In his speeches he said not one word in favor of or against the Republican candidate for President, nor did he say one word in favor of or against the Democratic nominee for President. He neither advocated nor opposed the platform of either party. So far as appeared in his published public utterances he made a strictly nonpartisan canvass. I invited Mr. Rhodes to have a joint discussion with me of the pending political issues, as the Republican nominee for Congress, before either of us had made a speech of any kind. His secretary informed me that Mr. Rhodes at that time was suffering with a slight facial paralysis, which it was hoped would be temporary, but that he could not at that time accept my offer of a joint discussion, and that he did not know at that time whether Mr. Rhodes would recover in time to make any speeches at all before the election.

I then made out a list of appointments throughout my district and offered an equal division of time to my opponent.

Mr. Rhodes soon recovered sufficiently to make speeches, but did not accept my invitation for a joint discussion, but made a list of appointments for himself and proceeded to fill them. He opened his canvass, as I now recall, with a speech at Big Sandy, Tenn., on October 25, 1916. I was advised both by letter and by telephone that in that speech Mr. Rhodes charged that I had voted for conscription and claimed to have absolute documentary proof of his charge. A printed copy of his speech was circulated throughout my district. I have a copy of that speech in my hand and will now read from it what Mr. Rhodes charged against me.

"I am not 'a peace at any price' pacifist. I am in favor of enough military preparation to properly police the country, but to say that we are immune from militarism is absurd. I am unalterably opposed to that part of the national-defense act which Mr. SIMS voted for, which provides that the President of the United States can conscript, or have conscripted, in time of war, any citizen of the United States subject to military duty between the age of 18 and 45 years. He can, under this act, go to your home, force your boy before he is old enough to vote to join the Army, and if one of these conscripted soldiers shall make any show of violence against any superior officer, he shall suffer death, no matter what the provocation may have been. That is militarism with a vengeance and is wholly at variance with American ideals of liberty. It tends to reduce us to the standard of European customs in subjecting us to the rule of a military despotism. If I had been in Congress and had allowed this extreme militaristic influence to clutch the American people by the throat in this way without strenuous objection and emphatic protest and had sanctioned it with my vote, I would not only retire from Congress but would never ask a free people for another position of trust."

I, of course, immediately and emphatically denied the charge. But I did not stop with a simple denial. I stated in unequivocal language that I had never voted for conscription and that I never would vote for it only as a last resort, after the volunteer system had been fully and fairly tried and had failed to secure enough enlistments to meet an imperative emergency demand, and then only as a temporary and supplementary measure and not as an abandonment of the time-honored war-tested volunteer system of free America.

But notwithstanding my emphatic denial of the charge made by Mr. Rhodes in his Big Sandy speech on October 25, 1916, the Tennessee Republican, a newspaper published at Huntingdon, the home town of Mr. Rhodes, in its issue of November 3—just before the election—made the charge which I now read from a copy of that paper, which I now hold in my hand, as follows:

"Mr. SIMS lined up against 'the masses' and voted for the conscription of our boys in the service and the penalty of death if they refused to go to become gun fodder, as provided in the national-defense act.

"Do you call a vote compelling the sons of American freemen and the husbands of American women to go to war against their will, to be drafted into service and forced to face death regardless of their wishes or will in the matter, voting for 'the masses'?"

I again repeated my emphatic denial of the truth of these charges, and I again declared that I had not and would not under any circumstances vote for conscription as a system.

But after doing all I could to counteract the effect of this unjust charge against me, I did not succeed in fully doing so and came dangerously near being defeated. If I had not repudiated the charge, I certainly would have been defeated. But, on the other hand, if I had advocated and approved a change from the American volunteer system to the conscription system, I would have been the worst defeated Democratic nominee that ever ran for Congress in my district.

In view of my record and of the pledges and promises I made to those who elected me, can any man expect me to vote for conscription? By reason of the pledges and promises made prior to the election, am I not in honor bound as a Representative to do all I can to defeat the adoption of the system of conscription in this country?

But in my canvass prior to the charges made by Mr. Rhodes, I discussed fully and freely the question of universal compulsory military training in time of peace and of the volunteer system for raising and training an army in time of war, as provided for and approved in the national-defense act passed in 1916, known as the Hay bill.

By way of bolstering up and strengthening my own position in opposition to universal compulsory military service in time of peace, I read from the address of President Wilson delivered on the 8th day of December, 1914, or that portion of it touching compulsory service in time of peace, as follows:

"It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a Nation in the field, a Nation of men trained to arms? Of course we are not ready to do that; and we shall never be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in times of peace."

Mr. Speaker, in all fairness of construction of the language used by the President, can anyone escape the conclusion that he was opposed to compulsory military service in times of peace? In referring to the admitted fact that we were not ready upon brief notice to put a Nation in the field, a Nation of men trained to arms, the President said, "and we shall never be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions." Now, what is the thing or element involved in compulsory military service in time of peace that is so antagonistic to our political principles and institutions that it can never exist as long as we retain our political principles and institutions? Clearly it must be the element of compulsion, the application of force. Have we now reached the period in our history when we are justified in abandoning our political principles and institutions in exchange for the continental European doctrine of force and compulsion? Speaking for myself, I am not ready to abandon our principles and institutions in exchange for the principles and institutions of force and compulsion embraced in the General Staff bill.

A resort to unnecessary compulsory military service in time of war is just as fatal to the retention of our political principles and institutions as it is in time of peace. Most clearly it is the element of enforced training and service that can not exist in our country without an abandonment of our existing principles and institutions.

In the same address the President again says:

"From the first we have had a clear and settled policy with regard to military establishments. We never have had and while we retain our present principles and ideals we never shall have a large standing army. If asked, Are you ready to defend yourselves? we reply, Most assuredly; to the utmost; and yet we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves."

The General Staff bill, it is true, does not provide for compulsory military service in time of peace, but it does provide for unnecessary and preferential compulsory military service in time of war, which is equally destructive of our principles and institutions.

In the same address the President further says:

"Let us remind ourselves, therefore, of the only thing we can do or will do. We must depend in every time of national peril, in the future as in the past, not upon a standing army, nor yet upon a reserve army, but upon a citizenry trained and accustomed to arms. It will be right enough, right American policy, based upon our accustomed principles and practices, to provide a system by which every citizen who will volunteer for the training may be made familiar with the use of modern arms, the rudiments of drill and maneuver, and the maintenance and sanitation of camps."

I beg to call your attention sharply to so much of the last quotation I read from the President's address which says:

"It will be right enough, right American policy, based upon our accustomed principles and practices, to provide a system by which every citizen who will volunteer for the training may be made familiar with the use of modern arms," and so forth. The use of the words "who will volunteer" clearly excludes compulsion or any element or principle of force.

On page 12 of the same address, the President further says:

"It is right, too, that the National Guard of the States should be developed and strengthened by every means which is not inconsistent with our obligations to our own people or with the established policy of our Government. And this, also, not because the time or occasion specially calls for such measures, but because it should be our constant policy to make these provisions for our national peace and safety.

"More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity."

Mr. Speaker, I beg to call special attention to the last words of what I have just read, which are "More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity." These words must be understood to mean when read in connection with the whole address and recalling the clamor that was being made in some quarters for compulsory military training in time of peace and for compulsory service in time of war, as an avowal of the President's disapproval of the introduction into our system of the elements of force and compulsion, and characterizing a resort to such methods as a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity.

I am not now ready to be a party to bringing about such a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity and try to excuse myself to my constituents by the German plea of "military necessity."

Mr. Speaker, I voted for the resolution declaring that a state of war existed between this Government and the Imperial Government of Germany. I sincerely hoped that by a failure of Germany to win the war that militarism would perish from the earth, never to be revived. I hoped that by winning the war, or helping to win the war waged against Germany, that we would be doing our part to destroy the repulsive and liberty-destroying doctrine of universal compulsory military training and service. I hoped we might help to make it impossible for military autocracy to ever again raise its horrid head in this world. But, of course, I never dreamed that in order to destroy military autocracy in Germany that we would be asked to even temporarily resort to the methods of militarism practiced in Germany. I had a right to believe from our history, ideals, and principles that we would be permitted to at least try to win the war without their reversal and abandonment.

Every crime that Germany has committed in this war was committed in the name of military necessity, and now we are asked to adopt the un-American, autocratic methods of compulsion and conscription in the name of military efficiency.

It is claimed that the General Staff plan is democratic. If so, it is the democracy of servitude. Many slaveholders have been democratic in the treatment of their slaves. They have treated them all alike, have not discriminated between them, but were they any less slaves on that account?

In order to win this war in the quickest possible time I am opposed to experimenting with European compulsory military systems. We know what we have done and what we have accomplished in the past by the volunteer system of raising and maintaining armies, and our experience gives us confidence as to what we can do if we stand by our time-tried, war-tested American volunteer system.

Speaking for myself, I do not believe in compulsory military service, and I do not propose that we shall ever resort to compulsion only as an exception to the general and approved policy of volunteer military service.

To authorize the establishment of compulsory military service as a system for the raising and maintaining of armies, even as alternative, secondary, and permissive, ought not to be coupled with and included in the initial stages of our war legislation.

Leaving it optional as to which system shall be adopted by those charged with executing the law, who have in advance openly declared their lack of confidence in the successful prosecution of the war under the volunteer system, is, in my judgment, a weakness in the House bill. If exceptional conditions arise which, in the judgment of Congress, can be met in no other way than by a resort to conscription, it will then be time enough to enact such a law.

I feel absolutely confident that if the Confederate Congress could have foreseen how little military value would result from conscription that no such law would have been enacted. I feel no less confident that the Congress of the United States would not have resorted to conscription if it, too, could have foreseen the results that actually followed its attempted enforcement.

The first call for troops by Mr. Lincoln was for only three months. This short period of service, in the mind of Mr. Lincoln, was the measure of his expectation as to the duration of the war. But a sad awakening awaited Mr. Lincoln. Instead of it taking only three months to go to Richmond, it took four years of long and bloody war.

If Germany and the other continental powers are to be vanquished in the next six or eight months, as some men are now predicting, the armies of the allies now in the field will have to be relied on to do it. It is freely admitted on all sides that under no system that can be adopted will it be possible for American troops to be of any substantial value as an actual fighting force on the battle fields of Europe in less time than 8 or 10 months.

By the time an army can be raised and properly drilled for actual fighting in the field under the proposed conscription system we will be in the midst of a hot political campaign for the nomination and election of Members to the House of Representatives of the Sixty-sixth Congress, as well as for the nomination and election of one-third of the Senators.

Do we not all know that this question of compulsory military service will be the single paramount and dominating issue, in both the primaries and general elections, in each and every congressional district in the United States and in every State in which a Senator is to be nominated and elected? Do we not know that in this country it takes ballots as well as bullets to wage a successful war?

I have no hope that this war will be ended by the time the next election is held, and I am unwilling by my vote or otherwise to do anything that will endanger the election of an antiwar, antiadministration Congress; and believing, as I do, that the old American war-tested. time-tried, and time-honored system of raising an effective fighting army by the volunteer system is the only hope we have for winning this war, I feel it my conscientious duty to vote against the proposed adoption of the compulsory conscript system, but in doing so I can not indicate my lack of confidence in the success of the volunteer system by voting for an amendment that limits it to the raising of only one division.

My friend and colleague who has offered this amendment comes as a Representative from the proud old Volunteer State of Tennessee, but I can assure him that if the opportunity for volunteering to serve in the cause of our country in past wars had been limited to one organization, Tennessee would never have been called the "Volunteer State." I can not by my vote do anything that will take from beloved, brave, free, democratic Tennessee her proud and ever-cherished title of the "Volunteer State" and substitute for it the "Conscript State." Tennessee is the land of the free and the home of the brave, and I can not by my vote make her the land of the coerced and the home of the slave.

You may paint, you may picture conscription as you will,
But the seeds of despotism will remain in it still.

Resolutions Passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions passed by the Legislature of Massachusetts relative to the price of anthracite coal and other commodities.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1917.

Resolutions requesting Congress to take measures regulating the price of anthracite coal and other commodities.

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in general court assembled hereby request the Congress of the United States to take such measures as may be necessary under the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution to regulate the price at which anthracite coal may be sold by mining companies and their agents, in order to prevent the extortion which has been practiced upon the public, and especially upon the retail purchasers of coal, and that a maximum price be established for wheat, corn, oats, and other cereals and cereal products, which so largely enter into the high cost of living in our Commonwealth and Nation; and

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth be directed to send copies of these resolutions to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to each Senator and Representative from Massachusetts in Congress.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Boston, April 17, 1917.

A true copy of resolutions adopted at the present session by the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts in general court assembled.

Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT, Hon. JEFF: MCLEMORE, and Hon. A. W. GREGG, Texas Congressmen, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: In this great crisis of the American peoples, we, the undersigned citizens of this community, being individually concerned for the welfare of our young manhood with reference to the new army of Americans now being organized, believe, after careful consideration, that the plan of our President, advocating "selective conscription," is the most fair and equitable means of accomplishing the desired end, and is much preferable to the ordinary volunteer system. Therefore, wishing to voice our sentiment, we address this petition to you, in the hope that you will use your influence and give your vote in support of our great President.

Hon D. E. GARRETT, M. C.,
Hon. JEFF: MCLEMORE, M. C.
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: We are inclosing you a copy of a petition signed by more than nine-tenths of the citizens to whom it was presented as they were approached, and out of 292 citizens to whom the petition was presented 275 signed, advocating selective conscription, as favored by President Wilson.

The original of this petition and copy of which is sent you has been mailed to Hon. J. P. BUCHANAN, Congressman of this, the tenth, district, and we take pleasure in presenting it to you.

We urge you to support the measure in this great national crisis, believing it will bring to the administration the aid and support necessary to protect American interests, honor, and patriotism on land and sea.

AUSTIN, TEX., April 26, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT, Congressman,
Washington, D. C.:

Congratulations on your speech and your attitude. Careful inquiry among the people of Texas, based on 10 years' experience as a newspaper man and a like number as a lawyer, leads me to believe the great number of Texans are with you. To every Texan the word "conscript" is the most obnoxious and hateful in the English language. No State or nation has ever done more than Texas to withstand tyranny and maintain her rights by the sword, and the history of her volunteer army is the brightest in the world. Being beyond the age limit of proposed conscription, and having tendered my services already to my State and Nation, as has every man relative in my family, 10 in number, I have no selfish method in opposing conscription. If Texans are to do their best fighting, they prefer to go voluntarily and be led by men of their own selection and with whom association has given them confidence.

Attorney at Law.

DEAR SIR: I sent you a paid message this morning, as follows: "Any person whom, in their zeal to suppress autocracy, seek and demand the power of a despot can only be teeming in a spirit of tyranny that will develop a condition more intolerable than the end sought. I compliment you for your Americanism," which message I hereby wish to confirm. What little I have been over the State since this question has become paramount I find that the common people are opposed to any plan of conscription, but there seems to be such a domineering propaganda of misrepresentation by the jingo that the average citizen is afraid to raise his voice in protest, thinking, possibly, that such might be committing an act of treason. There is no need of you resigning or not offering again for reelection, as I feel the masses are with you.

Very truly, yours,

Representative GARRETT,

HON. SIR: In respect to your general inquiry will say that it is safe to estimate that 85 per cent of the people in this part are strongly against conscription. A petition circulating here received on an average of one signer per minute for one hour to my certain knowledge. That fact is very conclusive. Most of those howling for conscription are designing politicians, bankers, speculators, big newspaper men, and their bootlickers, who howl because their masters are howling and with only a few exceptions they are all above military age. Conscription would be a drawn sword against the true principles of democracy and would suddenly nip in the bud the sacred spirit of patriotism.

FROST, TEX., April 24, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.:

We believe, with the President, that selective conscription is wise. We don't think that boys under 21 years of age should be conscripted. We believe that our country is unanimous against it. In several county meetings where resolutions were passed supporting the President, no age limit or other details were discussed. We urge that you contend for an age limit of 21 years.

HUNTSVILLE, TEX., April 25, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The people of Walker County earnestly request that you stand with the President for selective conscription, and that you represent the peoples' views and not your personal feelings.

HUNTSVILLE YOUNG MEN'S BUSINESS LEAGUE,
By A. T. MCKINNEY, Jr., Secretary.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., April 21, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Stand by the President, Texas, and the country. The overwhelming sentiment here is with the President in this crisis.

W. A. GRAY.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., April 21, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Congressman at Large from Texas,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

At a mass meeting of farmers and business men of Brownsville and vicinity, several hundred strong, held this afternoon in the Federal building, resolution was unanimously passed urging you to support the universal military service bill and the President in his campaign to a united national effort in the prosecution of the war. We believe the overwhelming majority of sentiment in this State supports this position.

BROWNSVILLE BOARD OF CITY DEVELOPMENTS,
By A. WAYNE WOOD, Chairman.

GEORGETOWN, TEX., April 21, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the Williamson County Farmers and Citizens' Institute, indorse the selective conscription plan as advocated by President Wilson and urge you to give it your support.

J. F. YEARWOOD, President.
H. M. WEIR, Secretary.

GALVESTON, TEX., April 21, 1917.

Hon. D. E. GARRETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The sentiment of this community is overwhelmingly in favor of the selective-draft bill. We trust that the Congressman-at-large will support it and will appreciate it if you will submit this telegram to the other members of the Texas delegation. We indorse the President's plan to fullest extent.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.:

As one of your best friends, I urge that you support the President in his war policy. In times like these our Government can do no wrong. The citizenship of southeast Texas is overwhelmingly in favor of the President's plan of selective conscription.

WALTER J. CRAWFORD.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., April 19, 1917.

Congressman JULIUS KAHN,
Washington, D. C.:

For two years I have hoped to lead a regiment of volunteers wherever needed, but I frankly avow the wisdom of our military experts in urging selective conscription and trust Congress will not quibble in an hour when such tactics aid our foes. Texas stands behind the President in everything, and we thank you for leading where others have dallied. Please show my friend, Judge GARRETT.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 23, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

We believe sentiment here overwhelmingly in favor of the President's plan of raising an army. Anything short of conscription would be mistake. Let the service be universal. To secure equality of sacrifice, our Army should be organized on purely scientific basis, without any favoritism of any kind entering into appointment of officers. Let it be scientific and on the basis of merit.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The citizens of Houston to-day in mass meeting assembled adopted the following resolution, which was submitted by Hon. Ben Campbell: "We are in favor of universal military service and training and for all policies of President Wilson," and that this action be wired to our Representatives in Washington.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 19, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.:

The members of the Houston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade respectfully urge your earnest support to President Wilson's plan of enlistment by selective draft. The volunteer enlistment in England shows that it is not the proper plan to be voted at this time, and every man in this country should be called on and made to assume his share of the burden whatever it may be.

E. D. MCCAA, President.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 21, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.:

Greetings on the anniversary of Texas independence, which please do not menace by opposing the plans of President Wilson for a real Army. Stop and think who would be colonels in Texas under your volunteer system. All patriots can volunteer at present for real service, but they can not volunteer into fat jobs as they might under your plan. Sentiment here is universal for the President's plan.

C. B. GILLESPIE.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 20, 1917.

Hon. D. E. GARRETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

After a canvass among the business men of the city, and others, we have to-day wired President Wilson that we were in sympathy with the plans outlined by him for Army mobilization. We ask that you kindly give the President your support.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Texas Congressman at Large, Washington, D. C.:

The Texas Association of Young Men's Business Leagues, composed of young men most likely to be affected, in State convention assembled voted unanimously to support President Wilson's stand for selective draft. We want you to know that sentiment throughout the State has materially changed in the past few days, so that in our opinion each and every Texas Representative must either vote for the selective-draft bill or grossly misrepresent his constituency.

J. M. CARROLL,
President Associated Y. M. B. L. of Texas.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 19, 1917.

Hon. DANIEL E. GARRETT,
Washington, D. C.:

The Rotary Club of Houston unanimously indorses the administration's plan of selective draft as affording the most efficient way of raising a sufficient force of men to the support of the colors, and that a copy of these resolutions be wired to our own Representatives in Congress.

All disinterested citizens with whom I have been able to confer favor selective conscription plan of War Department. A successful war conducted in the most efficient and equitable way is our supreme desire. The only advocates of the volunteer system known by us are those seeking commanding positions through political appointment or private organization. Their seeming backing comes from those lacking courage to refuse to sign petitions circulated by them. A volunteer army will saturate our country with politics, envy, and disorder. If Texas can not get her quota of officers in strict competition for training and efficiency, our soldiers will be assured better officers. It is a mistake to gauge public sentiment by activities of those conducting a propaganda for political purposes. The mass of the people of Texas back of President unreservedly.

Just returned from a trip over the State attending loyalty day rallies. While I agree with you, must confess that I believe 90 per cent of the people of Texas are in favor of selective draft.

CHAS. J. KIRK.

To the people of Texas:

On last Thursday I delivered a speech upon the floor of the House of Representatives setting forth my views in support of the majority report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the Army bill.

Prior to that I had published in the daily papers of Texas a brief analysis of the bill.

Immediately thereafter I began to receive telegrams, letters, and petitions from various parts of the State, some approving but many opposing the bill.

In order to obtain as nearly as I could, in the short time remaining, the opinion of my people on the question of whether or not they favored the abandonment of the voluntary system for raising an Army at the beginning of the war, I issued a call to the citizens to advise me at once, by wire, their views upon this very important question.

In response to this call I received many answers from friends in many parts of the State, which were overwhelmingly in favor of abandoning the volunteer system at this time. Believing as I do, that a public office is a public trust and that it is the solemn duty of a public servant to truly and faithfully obey the will of a majority of the people he represents, as far as he may be able to ascertain, when the same does not run contrary to his official oath, and believing as I now do, with the information before me, that my views upon this question of public policy are not in full accord with a majority of my constituents, therefore candor impels me to submerge my individual views upon the question and reflect those of the people I represent.

As a man who reaches a deliberate conclusion after serious thought—and God knows mine have been serious—I have a pardonable pride in my own judgment, and under ordinary circumstances would willingly follow it. But we are not now dealing with ordinary questions; we are dealing with the lives of our people and the very destiny of our Republic.

Whatever my own opinion may be, I will not at the beginning of a great war to democratize the world deny my own people the right to instruct their Representative in Congress concerning their will, but shall do my best to obey them.

The Selective Draft.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. L. C. DYER,
OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following letters:

ST. LOUIS, April 26, 1917.

Hon. L. C. DYER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DYER: During these critical hours of our Nation one hesitates to express his views, especially if he be of German descent.

In these times the masses are looking up to the men of courage and fixed convictions, despite the humiliation that is heaped upon them by the press; who, in no sense of the word, in my judgment, is voicing the sentiment of the people. If by a referendum the people of the United States were asked to approve of the administration's recent attitude I am convinced that it would be overwhelmingly disapproved. The people to-day are deprived of the right to express their sentiments by intimidation. As loyal American citizens, believing in a representative form of government, they must abide by the actions of their Representatives

Not until the next election will the people be given their just rights of expression, and then I look for many, many surprises. It is then when the people will voice their sentiments and when they will approve or disapprove of the conduct of their Representatives. I feel confident that the vast majority of this Nation's people are not in sympathy with the administration's attitude, and I feel sure that 90 per cent of the people in St. Louis are opposed to conscription. The administration and the big interests know only too well, in my judgment, that the people are not in sympathy with this war movement, and, therefore, they dare not let the true sentiment go on record by the test of allowing only volunteers to enlist.

It takes courage to oppose the public press and there will be a time coming when the people at the polls will voice their sentiment and prove that the power of the press is shorn of its influence.

With the food prices rising as they are, a most uncanny feeling overwhelms me that interior strife will arise among those clamoring for food, and that those men who have had the courage to express their views in this crisis in all candor will be looked upon as the true heroes of the present time. Mark me! I fear the time is not far distant when the laboring classes will arise in a body and protest against the starvation of their own people merely to aid in prolonging the agonies abroad.

You understand that I am expressing to you my views purely from the standpoint of a friend to friend, and do not wish to misguide you or influence you.

With best regards, I am,
Yours, very truly,

OTTO F. STIFEL.

ST. LOUIS, April 26, 1917.

Hon. L. C. DYER, M. C.,
House of Reprcsentatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have sent this, in substance, to the Globe-Democrat to-day. Whether they will use it I do not now know. As I am one of your constituents I thought I would send it to you.

The position of Speaker CLARK and others who oppose the proposed bill for selective service, or so-called "selective" conscription, is rather curious. They talk of conscription as a sort of convict service, and as if by providing for compulsory military service the idea or fact of voluntary military service was eliminated. That I assume is a mistake. I have not seen a full copy of the proposed law, but I assume it in no way abolishes voluntary service. I know that after the conscription law of August, 1862, was passed by our Government, the Confederacy passing one before that, hundreds of thousands of our young men volunteered. That surely will be open to them even if the proposed law is passed. If the men of serviceable age and condition do not desire to be drawn into service as conscripts, all they have to do is to volunteer. We have now no time to wait on volunteers. We need fit men now, and must draft them into service for the public welfare. Surely when a duty to serve rests on all there can be no disgrace in service merely because called upon by selection to render it.

I would not call those who fail to volunteer now "shirks" or "slackers." We are so far separated from actual war that many do not realize our present urgent need of men for service.

We compel by law the attendance at schools of children between 8 and 14 years of age, and in this city "attendance" (or truant) officers are appointed to enforce attendance. Why? Because the welfare of the State demands that its future citizens be educated to at least some extent. Why is it less important that our citizens of proper age be compelled to submit to be trained as soldiers or sailors? The safety of the Nation demands that. When we have universal military training made compulsory, all the imaginary horrors of a draft as a species of involuntary servitude disappear. With universal training we will have a body always liable to be called on when the safety or welfare of the Nation requires. There is nothing humiliating in rendering service when called upon.

I was in the Government service as a civilian from April, 1861, to September, 1862. Then in 1862 volunteered and enlisted as a private, and was in the military service until March or April, 1866, being mustered out with rank of lieutenant colonel. During my service I was associated with hundreds of soldiers who had been drafted, and had many such under me, and I never heard of the fact that they were drafted being thrown up to any of them, nor were they less efficient than the volunteers.

The question of who should be called on—a selective draft or conscription, as you may call it, settles itself, if we have universal military service. We merely call "to the colors," call into service, those whom we have educated for that service, instead of depending altogether on the voluntary service of willing but entirely untrained men, selecting for military service those who are fit and not otherwise engaged in other service just as important to the welfare of the Nation. That is all, as I understand it, there is in the proposed "selective draft," which should have been provided for and made available long ago by universal training. The President is on the right course, and is entitled to our hearty and loyal support in this belated movement. The chances are that if this proposed law is enacted a knowledge that they are liable to be drafted will render it unnecessary to draft very many. But what we now and at once need is an adequate number of fit men.

Yours, truly,

GEO. D. REYNOLDS.

The Military Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ELIJAH C. HUTCHINSON,
OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Speaker, I have given serious thought to the measure now under consideration and have decided to vote for selective conscription in preference to the volunteer system as the better method for raising an army for the present emergency.

Personally, I would like to see the volunteer system given a fair trial, but the situation is such that we can not afford to experiment and must adopt a plan, the success of which can not be questioned, that will insure the raising of an army sufficient for the needs of this emergency in the quickest possible time.

This war is not of our making, but has been forced upon us by a nation that has been our friend for a generation, and we accept the challenge on principle only and are willing to assume all the burden and make every sacrifice necessary for the cause we champion.

There have been times when I thought our foreign policy could have been handled differently; that we should have been made more familiar with the true situation, so that misunderstandings could have been avoided and false impressions corrected. But such was not the case, and it may have been wise to withhold this knowledge.

I believe our President did everything possible to prevent this war, but it seemed otherwise ordered, and we find ourselves face to face with conditions that will test democracy and prove the worth of every man living under such form of government.

As an experienced business man, and one who has been connected more or less with manufacturing plants of different kinds, I have made it a rule to select competent managers and hold them responsible for the success of the business, adopt their ideas and methods if at all feasible, and seldom interfere with their policy or plan of operation. I take the same position regarding the conduct of this war. Our President as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy has submitted a plan worked out by the General Staff and approved by the administration, and I feel it should be adopted.

Our General Staff is composed of men of broad experience, educated and trained at the expense of the Government, and after a close study of all conditions, especially of the methods adopted by the European nations now at war, they offer this plan as the one most likely to accomplish the best results in the quickest time, and if we expect to win the war we must put into practice the ideas of those we have trained for just such emergencies.

There is nothing in conscription that will impeach the dignity of the volunteer, for the man that really wants to serve his country should be willing to render that service where it will count for most, and to my mind the principal idea of the plan is not so much to conscript men as it is to utilize service.

Many men can be more valuable to the Government in the operation of manufacturing plants or at work on the farms than in the trenches or camps, and it is to control and regulate this service that the plan is suggested, so that all may have a part in the successful conduct of the war and at the same time conserve our resources.

From debates on the floor there seems to be conflicting statements as to just how the selection of men will be made, but I have enough confidence in our Government to know that the method they adopt for this part of the work will be fair and honorable, and the men so selected will be true and loyal patriots, willing if necessary, to sacrifice their lives in defense of their country.

Resolutions Adopted by the Cleveland Committee on War Finance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave to extend granted, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter and resolutions received by me from John D. Fackler, of Cleveland, president of Cleveland (Ohio) Committee on War Finance:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 25, 1917.

Hon. H. I. EMERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned beg to transmit herewith copy of resolutions adopted at a meeting of Cleveland people at Engineers' Hall, April 4, 1917, and most respectfully urge you to support the principles therein contained as a means of equalizing the burden of the present conflict.

We transmit herewith a copy of resolutions adopted by the Cleveland Federation of Labor We deem it unnecessary at this time to transmit numerous individual petitions, preferring to lay them before Congress when the necessary legislation comes up for adoption.

In this crisis there is an overwhelming sentiment in favor of the President's legislative recommendations, and we sincerely hope that his attitude on this question so clearly indicated in his splendid message to Congress may be followed by appropriate legislation to the end that the financially strong shall bear the burden of expense just as the physically strong must bear the brunt of battle.

Respectfully submitted.

CLEVELAND COMMITTEE ON WAR FINANCE,
JOHN D. FACKLER, Chairman.
ERNEST ANGELL, Secretary.

Resolutions passed at a mass meeting in Engineers' Hall, Cleveland, Wednesday evening, April 5, 1917.

Resolved, That to meet the expenses necessitated by war and preparation for war, we urge Congress to levy taxes on surplus profits of corporations and partnerships and to impose heavy graded taxes on the incomes of individuals. We believe that the entire expense of the war should be met by such taxes, and that governmental borrowing should, so far as practicable, be limited to temporary loans in anticipation of incoming revenue; that if necessary to meet the expenses of war a tax measure with levies as high as the following should be imposed:

(a) On all net personal incomes between $5,000 and $10,000 a contribution of 25 per cent of such excess over $5,000.

(b) On all net personal incomes from $10,000 to $25,000 a contribution of 50 per cent of the excess over $10,000. And on all net personal incomes over $25,000 a contribution increasing on a sliding scale to a point which will permit no individual retaining an annual income in excess of $50,000 during the war.

(c) That there be levied on the net earnings of all corporations and partnerships a tax of 80 per cent of all net earnings over 8 per cent. Be it further

Resolved, That we urge Congress in the event of the above schedule of income and excess-profit taxes not proving adequate for the expenses of the conflict and preparation therefor, that more drastic percentages be imposed, to the end that the burden of war may be borne by persons now living and that no one be permitted to profit through the sacrifice of others. And be it further

Resolved, That we urge Congress to provide sufficient pay for the soldiers and sailors in the service of the Government, that those dependent upon their incomes shall be maintained in comfort.

Resolutions passed by the Cleveland Federation of Labor Wednesday evening, April 5, 1917.

Whereas the subject of the best method of raising public revenue for the conduct of the war by this Nation is one of great present public interest; and

Whereas the right of the Nation to compel men to put their lives in the hands of the Nation for the defense of the Nation has general sanction; and

Whereas many scandals have occurred in the past on account of the amassing of private fortunes on account of the existence of war; and

Whereas it is intolerable that many men who suffer great personal privation and even give up their lives, while other men, relatively few in number, accumulate great wealth on account of the same causes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Cleveland Federation of Labor, That we indorse the movement that is now attracting attention which is based on the principle that the excess profits made during war time and on account of war should be retaken by the Nation to pay the cost of the war. And be it further.

Resolved, That the Cleveland Federation of Labor recommend to its members that both moral and financial support be given to the Cleveland Committee on War Finance in promoting the excess income tax as a method of war finance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
OF KENTUCKY,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following resolutions:

FULTON, KY., April 13, 1917.

Hon. A. W. BARKLEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As adjutant of Camp Jim Pike, 990, Fulton, Ky., I have been instructed to write you the expressed sentiment of the members of the camp as true American citizens, freely and fully indorsing the administration's policy in reference to the threatened war with Germany, and are ready to aid in defense of American rights in any way we are able, and would be pleased for you to make known our sentiment here expressed to President Wilson.

W. C. CROFT, Commander.

Whereas the President of the United States and the Congress assembled have, in the cause of humanity and justice, declared our Nation to be in a state of war with the Imperial German Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, citizens of the United States and members of the Seminole Club, of Paducah, Ky., tender our hearty support and cooperation to the Government, and indorse its action; and be it further

Resolved, That we indorse the principle of universal liability for military training, as embodied in the Chamberlain bill now before Congress, and give it our sincere recommendation; and that copies of this resolution be sent to Senators OLLIE M. JAMES, J. C. W. BECKHAM, and Congressman BARKLEY.

JOSEPH JACOBS,
C. M. HAND,
W. R. WRIGHT,
Committee.

PADUCAH, KY., April 2, 1917.

Whereas there exists at the present time a grave responsibility in the relationship between the United States Government and the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas the issue joined between the two Governments is liable to terminate in armed conflict: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Brotherhood of the Unity Evangelical Church, in regular session assembled, do hereby and by these presents pledge our entire assistance to the President of the United States in this the present crisis of our Government; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to President Woodrow Wilson, to the local press, and a copy spread upon the records of our meetings.

Adopted April 2, 1917.

GEORGE LEHNHARD, Secretary.

Conscription.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDWARD KEATING,
OF COLORADO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, as the Members of this House know, I have consistently opposed all legislation looking to conscription. I recognize the right of my constituents, however, to petition the National Congress, and am therefore submitting the following letter from William E. Spencer, secretary of the Canon City Government Support and Home Protection League, together with a copy of the resolutions recently adopted by the league:

APRIL 22, 1917.

Hon. EDWARD KEATING,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KEATING: The organization referred to in the resolution herewith has requested me, as permanent secretary, to forward you a copy of the resolution, with request that you send it to the Clerk, have it read before the House, and printed in the RECORD.

The objects of the league are to procure enlistments for the Army and Navy, organize a home guard of men who have passed military age, encourage production of foodstuffs, etc.

Very truly, yours,
WM. E. SPENCER,
Secretary Canon City Government Support and Home Protection League.

CANON CITY, COLO., April 21, 1917.

At a meeting of the Canon City Government Support and Home Protection League, held on April 27, 1917, at the Fremont County courthouse, with Mayor D. N. Cooper presiding and Mr. William J. Lindenberger acting as secretary, the following resolutions by former Gov. James H. Peabody were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the President and the Congress have declared these United States to be at war with the Imperial German Government and with the principles of autocracy and oppression for which it stands; and

"Whereas we, in harmony with our State and country, are glad to respond to the call of patriotism and to employ all of our energy and service in the mighty struggle unhappily forced upon us: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the Canon City Government Support and Home Protection League of Canon City, Colo., duly assembled, do hereby unqualifiedly extend our hearty approval to President Wilson for his determined stand for "universal liability to service" and to the Congress for its manly and patriotic support in this terrible ordeal; and further be it

"Resolved, That we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to support and urge immediate adoption of the principle of national conscription to supply our Army and Navy with a full quota of men, so nobly and impressively urged by our President, Woodrow Wilson."

Statement on the Military Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ROSCOE C. McCULLOCH,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Speaker, under general leave granted, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having published the following statement, which I issued this morning defining my attitude on the military bill:

APRIL 28, 1917.

Having listened to the debate on the Army bill for five days and nights, I have fully determined upon my course. I shall vote for the bill on its final passage, whether it is amended or not, as we must have an army, and the situation calls for quick action. The bill before the House provides for calling for volunteers, and it also provides for selective conscription, leaving it up to the President to decide which method he will follow; or he may use both methods if he deems it necessary. The bill leaves it entirely up to the President. I shall vote against the Kahn amendment, which eliminates the volunteer feature of the bill, because I think the President should be in a position to accept the services of volunteers should he see fit. I shall vote for the Britten amendment, should it be offered, that no conscripted soldier shall be sent to Europe without his consent. I shall vote for the amendment permitting Roosevelt to enlist the volunteer army he has enrolled. I voted for the amendment in the Committee of the Whole yesterday because I believe that we should use every means within the power of the Government to get together an effective fighting force and not quibble about the method.

ROSCOE C. MCCULLOCH.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES C. KEARNS,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote to retain the volunteer plan in this bill. I want this plan, together with the draft system. I am not yet willing to abandon every American tradition that is deep-seated in our breasts. God save us from the only autocratic element in our country—the Army Staff. But should the majority of the membership vote to strike this volunteer section from this bill, then I bow to majority rule and shall vote for the bill thus amended, because we must have an army to strike, and strike the enemy hard.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. STUART F. REED,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, under leave heretofore granted Members to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill, I desire to insert the following resolutions, statements, and messages:

HARRISON COUNTY G. A. R. RESOLUTIONS.

APRIL 2, 1917.

Hon. STUART F. REED, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing to you resolutions adopted by Custer Post, G. A. R., Clarksburg, W. Va. Make such use of them as seems advisable.

Yours, sincerely,

GEO. A. WOOFTER.

Whereas Germany and her allies have now for more than two years been engaged in the bitterest and most cruel warfare known in history against England, France, Russia, and their allies; and

Whereas this warfare has been carried on in the most ruthless and cruel manner on sea and land and in the air, not sparing the lives of women and children and breaking all of the laws of civilized warfare; and

Whereas the United States has from the beginning protested against this cruelty and ruthlessness, especially against the violations of the laws of neutrality on the high seas in the use of submarines, and these protests have been unheeded until the President of the United States, after long forbearance, has felt compelled to break off diplomatic relations with Germany, and a state of armed neutrality, if not of actual war, exists; and

Whereas the Hon. John J. Cornwell, governor of this State, has asked all loyal citizens, patriotic orders, Grand Army posts, etc., to meet April 2, 1917, and pledge their hearty support to the Government in the event war is declared: Now therefore be it

Resolved by Custer Post No. 8, Department of West Virginia, Grand Army of the Republic, Clarksburg, W. Va., in special meeting March 31, 1917, That we as American citizens, faithful to American ideals of justice, liberty, and humanity, do hereby declare our absolute and unconditional loyalty to the Government of the United States and pledge our support to the President and Congress in protecting American rights against unlawful violence on sea and land, in guarding the Nation against hostile attacks, and in upholding international rights; and

That we have explicit confidence in the young manhood and of the American Army and Navy and trust that if they should have to face any foe on the battle field or on the sea that they will display the courage and patriotism of their grandsires of '61 to '65.

LEWIS COUNTY LOYAL.

WESTON, W. VA., April 27, 1917.

Hon. STUART F. REED.

DEAR SIR: The 400 members of Camp 5430, Modern Woodmen of America, Weston, W. Va., congratulate you upon your true Americanism, your loyalty to the administration, and pledge our support now and in the future.

ADJUTANT GENERAL OF WEST VIRGINIA FAVORS SELECTIVE DRAFT.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., April 27, 1917.

Adjt. Gen. John C. Bond, of West Virginia gave out an interview here to-day urging Congress to immediately enact laws providing for the raising of an army by the selective-draft method. Gen. Bond's statement was as follows:

"The only way to reach the slacker is by conscription, and Congress should lose no time in passing a bill providing for conscription.

"As between the selective draft or conscription and the volunteer methods of raising a fighting force, there should be no delay or hesitancy in adopting the former plan. In my opinion it is the only successful way of raising an army such as the country is likely to need in the near future.

"We have tried the volunteer plan but recently, and the results were far from satisfactory."

CITIZENS OF RICHWOOD HOLD PATRIOTIC MEETING AT CITY HALL MONDAY NIGHT—GREAT INTEREST MANIFESTED.

Richwood did herself proud in the big patriotic meeting held at the city hall Monday night, and if anyone had held to the opinion that the spirit of patriotism had departed from our people he surely would have changed his mind had he been present at the monster demonstration.

Long before the hour set for the opening exercises the hall was packed almost to suffocation and hundreds were turned away. Every seat was taken, the gallery packed and jammed full, and hundreds remained standing in the aisles and wherever they could find standing room.

The following committees were named to have charge of the matter: On general arrangement—J. H. Landacre, J. J. Dotson, Lee Reese, E. E. Deitz, C. B. Cropp, J. H. Patterson, and J. O. Knapp. On publicity—L. A. Thomas. On finance—A. S. Wolf and E. E. Dietz. On resolutions, F. N. Alderson, J. J. Dotson, H. E. Dillinger, and L. A. Thomas.

The resolutions are as follows:

"Whereas our country is facing a grave international crisis, and inasmuch as we are seemingly about to be drawn into the great world war: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the citizens of Richwood in mass meeting assembled, That they do send to the President and the Government of the United States the assurances of their hearty and loyal support and full cooperation in every national undertaking which, in their wisdom, may be necessary to meet the situation and to protect and vindicate American rights, dignity, and honor, wherever or by whomsoever they may be endangered; and be it further

"Resolved, That we call upon our people to give to the President and the Government at Washington in all their efforts their patriotic support and assistance in whatever plans or measures that may be necessary in the present emergency;

"Resolved further, That we request that the national colors be displayed from all public buildings within our town and that we urge that all places of business and residences dsiplay such colors, as far as may be practicable; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and the presiding officers of both branches of Congress and to the governor of our State."

SONS OF VETERANS, U. S. A.,
Clarksburg, W. Va., April 3, 1917.

Hon. STUART F. REED.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose you herewith resolution of our camp, Sons of Veterans. Clarksburg and Harrison County is full and running over with loyalty and patriotism.

Respectfully,

W. N. EDGELL, Camp Secretary.

At a called meeting of Nathan Goff Camp No. 4, Division of Maryland, Sons of Veterans, U. S. A., held in the city of Clarksburg, W. Va., on the 2d day of April, 1917, the following resolution was read and unanimously adopted:

"Whereas our fathers heard the Nation's call to arms, and with streaming banners and patriotic heroism went forth in the defense of the Union in the great, but now forgotten, Civil War; and

"Whereas we, the sons of those patriot fathers, are by common ties united and organized in the further defense of our now reunited country; and

"Whereas it appears certain that this Nation shall soon again be called upon to sacrifice its blood, never yet spilled except in the cause of liberty and the common defense, in another war which we believe under God shall blazen anew the way of progress and universal peace to the ultimate end that 'dark places may become lighted by the lamp of a wise intelligence and the whole earth be reclaimed and made fruitful by the joys of a perfect civilization': And to this end be it

"Resolved, That we pledge our lives and our fortunes, if need be, to the defense of our Government in war as well as in peace, and pledge our loyalty and support in upholding the hands of the President of these United States in the grim crisis which now seems to confront this Nation."

RITCHIE COUNTY RESOLUTIONS.

At a mass meeting of the citizens of Harrisville, W. Va., held on the 16th day of April, 1917, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas our Government has, by the current of events over which it had no control and by the ruthless war policy pursued by the Imperial German Government, been forced into the war now being waged in Europe; and

"Whereas we recognize in that gigantic and herculean struggle a contest for supremacy between Prussianism and democracy, between the assumed rights of monarchs and the natural rights of men, in which one or the other must fall; and

"Whereas we deem it the duty of every American citizen, regardless of political or religious preference, to stand by and support the President in his war policy as outlined in his message to Congress, to the end that governments 'of the people, by the people, and for the people' may prevail over governments of monarchs, by monarchs, and for monarchs: Now therefore be it

"Resolved, By the citizens of Harrisville and vicinity, in the county of Ritchie and State of West Virginia, in mass meeting assembled, as follows:

"First. That we pledge our unswerving loyalty to our Government, and hereby dedicate our lives, our property, and our sacred honor in its defense.

"Second. That we recommend to our Senators and Representatives in Congress that they support the Government in its war policy against the Imperial German Government as promulgated by our President, and that it is the sense of this body and of the community at large that the action of certain Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States in voting to delay the consideration of such policy, or who by their actions and conduct and by their vote are temporizing with this most important subject of legislation, are by such actions, conduct, and vote giving aid and comfort to the Imperial German Government, and that such conduct can be characterized in no other way than as a treasonable affront to the American people and Government.

"Third. That as the food crisis now confronting the American people, due in part to the war, in part to a shortage of production, and in part to speculations in and manipulations of the food supply, may prove a menace to our Government and hinder it in the proper prosecution of the war, we further recommend that the Congress now in session pass stringent laws prohibiting speculations in and manipulations of our food supply, and that as a war measure it pass a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within the United States—except for medical, scientific, and mechanical purposes—in order that the grain now being fed to breweries and distilleries may be preserved and used to feed the American people and their allies.

"Fourth. That we recommend to the citizens of Ritchie County, that they forego the use of all luxuries and practice strict economy, and that they see to it that every available acre of land within the county be made to produce the maximum amount of cereals, grains, and vegetables, to the end that our county may, as far as possible, be self-sustaining."

ORIGINAL RIMFIRE SCOUTS CLUB No. 1,
Webster Springs, W. Va., April 2, 1917.

Hon. STUART F. REED,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: On Monday, March 26, 1917, Hon. John J. Cornwell, governor of West Virginia, by proclamation, urged that the representative bodies in West Virginia, lodges, etc., meet on April 2, 1917, and pass resolutions supporting the President and the Government of the United States in the crisis through which we are now passing.

In accordance with the proclamation of the governor, the Chief Club of the Original Rimfire Scouts of Webster Springs, W. Va., met in session to-day and passed the following resolutions, which have been respectfully submitted to the President:

"Be it resolved, That the Chief Club of the Original Rimfire Scouts, of Webster Springs, W. Va., indorse most heartily all the acts of the President of the United States of America and the majority of the Congress of the United States during the critical period of more than two years resulting from the European war.

"Be it further resolved, That the members of the said Chief Club of the Original Rimfire Scouts, without dissent, tender their services to the President and the Government of the United States and place themselves at the disposal of the authorities thereof in such manner and at such time as necessities may require.

"Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States and the governor of the State of West Virginia, and to our Member of Congress from the third congressional district of West Virginia."

Very respectfully, yours,

VERNON A. DE MOSS,
Chief Secretary.

WEBSTER COUNTY (W. VA.) UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS.

APRIL 6, 1917.

Whereas the clouds of war are hovering over our beloved United States of America; and

Whereas Hon. John J. Cornwell, governor of West Virginia, hath, by proclamation, urged all patriotic organizations to meet on this, the 2d day of April, 1917, for the purpose of passing resolutions pledging their support to the President and General Government in the present crisis; and

Whereas in pursuance to said proclamation Camp No. 1051 of the United Confederate Veterans of Webster County hath caused a meeting of its members to be held at the courthouse of said county for the purpose aforesaid: It is therefore

Resolved, That while the healing balm of time hath not wholly removed from our minds the appalling effects and blasting influences of war, and we deeply deplore its crimson fruits, and shall earnestly hope that actual conflict may be averted, yet we glory in the honor and bravery of American citizens and the justice, equity, and honor of our National Government, and believing that Woodrow Wilson, President of these United States, has been patient, forbearing, and neutral in his attitude toward the European Governments now engaged in war, and that the rights of this Government and her citizens have been violated and are now menaced, we hereby pledge to the President and the General Government of the United States of America our unfaltering support in whatever action may seem expedient in the present crisis; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by wire on this day to the President; STUART F. REED, our Representative in Congress; and to Hon. John J. Cornwell, governor of West Virginia.

A copy of record of proceedings.

UPSHUR COUNTY.

A patriotic demonstration held at the courthouse at Buckhannon, April 2, with the auditorium filled to its capacity, resulted in the adoption of ringing resolutions, as follows:

Resolutions adopted by the people of Buckhannon.

"The people of the city of Buckhannon and the county of Upshur recognize in the pending crisis growing out of the world war that the honor of this Nation, the majesty of her flag, and the exalted principles for which it stands, are vitally involved. Democracy, the sacred rights of all people to be at least instrumental in government, and the untrammeled rights of all neutral nations to the high seas in times of war have been challenged. Our people have been murdered through a system of ruthless piracy, shamelessly promulgated as a part of a system of civilized principles of absolutism.

"Under the stress and strain of this crisis the great people of America have been more than patient, and have been more than charitable in yielding rights which a nation less conscious of its strength and position of influence among the nations of the world would not have yielded to prevent bloodshed. They are a peace-loving people; and, realizing that they have in them the blood of all the warring nations of Europe, by reason of which, however, they are none the less American, they have every reason for maintaining an honorable neutrality, and have done all in their power to maintain it.

"Notwithstanding all this, and in spite of all that the great President of this Nation, in faithful exemplification of American charity and forbearance, has done to avert war, we find ourselves, this great peace-loving Nation, dragged to the very brink of a war it was in nowise instrumental in causing, and all through the selfish lust of power of a European war lord claiming to rule by 'divine right': Therefore be it

"Resolved by the people of this city and county in mass meeting assembled, That they pledge anew their lives and their honor to the defense of the American flag and the deathless principles for which it stands, and that they likewise pledge to the President of the United States and to the Congress thereof their unfaltering and united support in this hour of the country's need.

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be placed in the hands of each of the Representatives and Senators in the United States Congress from this State as an earnest demand upon them that they shall lay aside all party issues and give their undivided support to the President in his efforts to put this country in a wise and adequate state of preparedness for the defense of its people and its sacred honor."

THE WEST VIRGINIA SOCIETY RESOLUTIONS.

We, the members of the West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia, recognize in the present crisis, growing out of the world war, that the honor of our Nation, the majesty of her flag, and the exalted principles for which it stands are actually involved. Democracy, the sacred righs of all the people to a voice in their Government, and the untrammeled rights of all neutral nations to the high seas in time of war are challenged.

Under the stress and strain of this crisis the great people of the United States have been more than patient and have been more than charitable in yielding the rights which a nation less conscious would not have yielded to prevent bloodshed. The people of the United States are peace loving, and while realizing that they have in them the blood of all the warring nations of Europe are none the less American.

Notwithstanding all these things, this great, peace-loving Nation finds itself dragged into war: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the members of the West Virginia Society of the District of Columbia, in regular meeting now assembled, That we pledge our honor and our lives to the defense of the American flag and the undying principles for which it stands, and that we further pledge to the President and to the Congress of the United States our loyalty, unfaltering and united support in this hour of our country's need.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President and to each of our West Virginia Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, commending them for their loyalty and patriotic support of the President in his efforts to put this country in an adequate state of preparedness for the defense of this Nation and its sacred honor.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the governor of West Virginia, and that we salute through him our brave men and soldiers, the West Virginia National Guard, and express our profound admiration for their exemplification of the highest form of genuine patriotism of which humanity is capable in the dedication of their lives to the defense of our common country.

Unanimously adopted April 13, 1917.

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY,
Morgantown, April 3, 1917.

Hon. STUART F. REED,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. REED: A great mass meeting of our students and faculty of the West Virginia University last night adopted the inclosed resolutions, which speak for themselves. In addition they ordered the following telegram sent to the President of the United States:

"West Virginia University, in a mass meeting of students and faculty, offers its class rooms for barracks, its laboratories for arsenals, its athletic fields for drill grounds, and its splendid cadet corp of 600 men to support you in this trying hour."

We renew our allegiance, and are ready for service in whatsoever way it pleases the authorities to use us.

Very cordially, yours,

FRANK B. TROTTER, President.

Resolutions adopted by the faculty and students of the West Virginia University.

Whereas Germany persists in a ruthless use of submarines, which contravenes international laws and grossly violates her treaty obligations to the United States; and

Whereas many American citizens have been thereby subjected to wanton and cruel suffering and death, and all who dare to exercise their right to travel on the high seas are menaced with similar suffering; and

Whereas, in defiance of law and right, Germany dares to dictate the terms on which American commerce may use the world's highways; and

Whereas President Wilson has, with utmost patience, exhausted every honorable and peaceful means to safeguard the lives and the rights of our citizens: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the faculty and students of West Virginia University in mass meeting assembled, That we respectfully urge the President to protect with all the power he commands the lives and the rights of our citizens.

That we pledge to him our loyalty and fullest support in all measures to that end.

That we urge our Senators and Representatives without stint or partisanship to aid the President by appropriating funds, enacting laws, and conferring powers appropriate to this purpose.

That the president of the university, as chairman, send copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, the governor of West Virginia, and to each United States Senator and Representative from West Virginia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT J. DRANE,

OF FLORIDA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. DRANE. Mr. Speaker, I have always been taught that a new Member of the American Congress would pursue the path of wisdom and discretion were he to refrain, during his first session, from taking part in debate; that he should sit mute while his elders and betters speak. Sir, there is no personal ambition on my part to violate this custom; rather would I adhere to it. But, sir, it seems to me in this hour, the beginning of "the times which try men's souls," every loyal American citizen should lift his voice, whether in field or forum, to tell of the faith that is in him.

The Legislature of Florida, the State of my adoption, where I have spent all the days of my youth and my mature manhood, and where I expect to reside until I come into my second childhood, every foot of whose soil I regard as holy ground, is now in session, and its first official act after organization on the 3d day of the present month was to pass, by unanimous vote, a resolution pledging their lives, their property, and their sacred honor in a new Declaration of Independence; pledging those things held sacred by every American-born man child to support the statesman in the White House; to support the American Congress in its every effort to uphold the dignity and honor of the American people; and to compel respect for their flag on every sea.

Sir, my conscientitious conviction is that every man who, under the Constitution of the United States, is "equal before the law" with every other man; every man who, under our Constitution is free to pursue happiness, to enjoy the blessings of liberty and the beneficent advantages of our laws and our institutions, owes his allegiance to the Government in exact equality to the allegiance of every other man.

My very first official duty, when I sat for the first time as a Member of the American Congress, the hardest and sternest duty I ever performed, the greatest responsibility I was ever called upon to assume, was to cast a vote which would commit my country to war. Sir, I performed the duty, I assumed the responsibility as God gave me light; and I did so believing that the spirit of my loyal American constituents would approve. My next duty and responsibility was the logical sequence of the first, to provide the financial means for carrying on the war; a vote which provided from the inexhaustible resources of the American people, the most stupendous sum of money ever voted in the history of mankind; and now, in its logical sequence, comes still another duty, that of providing men. Mr. Speaker, the cost of war may not be paid in gold; would to God it might be. There is only one legal tender in war, it is not gold, nor show, nor protestations of patriotism; it is not martial music or martial display. The legal tender of war is human life; the lives of good men and good women and innocent children. The interest on a war debt may not be paid entirely in gold; it must be paid, sir, in widows' weeds, in the weeping of women bereft and the wailing of innocent children deprived of their bread. Without this awful cost, if paid only in gold, war would be cheap indeed. What, then, must be the method of conducting the war at the lowest possible cost; which will require the smallest sum of this legal tender of human life? To my mind, sir, the only answer would be: Let every man do his duty.

The man who has been so fortunate as to accumulate wealth should do his part just as the man who, less fortunate, must toil and sweat to supply the needs of his loved ones. The duty should fall alike upon the just and the unjust; upon palace and hovel; upon shop and counting room; upon the man of the street and the toiler in the field; every man who claims America as his home should do his duty as an American citizen, each man according to his talent and the Nation's need. We assume—aye, sir, we know—that every Member of the American Congress is earnestly endeavoring to perform his duty in such manner as will bring the war to its most successful conclusion, and it is one of the highest proofs of the wisdom and endurance of this great Republic that debate upon this momentous question has been allowed to run practically without limit. It is a question of so far-reaching importance that I feared to commit an error; so far-reaching that it reaches every branch of human endeavor; so far-reaching as to reach every fireside in the land; so far-reaching as to summon from the paths of peace every man of military age. I desired to take counsel with the people of Florida, whose representative in part I am, and whose vote, for a season, is entrusted to my keeping. Having taken counsel with my people, it has been a source of great gratification to me that I am informed from every section of my congressional district that they approved my course in voting for the war resolution; that they approved my course in voting this stupendous sum of money; and that they approve the course which I am now about to adopt, of voting that every man under the American flag shall perform the duty of an American citizen and take that part in the defense of his Government when the Commander in Chief of its Army and Navy shall point the way.

Mr. Speaker, we are prone to boast—because we are a proud people, that this great Republic on the Western Hemisphere is the only Republic true to its name and which shall last as long as time without crumbling. At the time of its birth, when our forefathers were fighting for its very existence, we who read history know that there was never but one element of danger of failure, and that was when the American Congress hesitated and delayed in giving its fullest and most loyal support to its great commander in the field, George Washington; the Republic stood through the storm and uncertain existence until the days of the sixties, when there came the period of night and darkness and distress, and it seemed for a time as though the efforts of our fathers had been in vain. Again, the fate of the Republic wavered in the balance, but that was because the American Congress hesitated and quibbled over the methods and means while the Commander in Chief of its Army and Navy, who was destined in a little while to "lay down his life for his friends," waited for the decision of the American Congress to give him its undivided and most loyal support; and now, sir, we come again to a period of uncertainty and distress, when another statesman in the White House, a fit successor to Washington and Lincoln, bowed down with the weight of responsibility as to how best to preserve the Republic which Washington established and Lincoln saved, is hampered and embarrassed while the American Congress, loyal though it is, enthusiastic for success though it may be, hesitates and quibbles over small questions of detail of how best to bring about a happy consummation of his desires. Mr. Speaker, I accord to every Member of this Congress the right to exercise his conscience and his judgment as God gives him light to see, but as for me, feeling as I do, that I am supported by an overwhelming majority of the loyal American citizens whom I represent, I propose by every vote and act to stand by the President and help him to carry out the war program which he and his expert advisers, learned in the horrible science of war, have laid before us.

This is not, sir, a question of sentiment, it is a question of business, cold-blooded business, nothing more and nothing less. Were I to indulge in sentiment—and I am prone at all times to do so—my memory would hark back to a scene which I witnessed a few days ago as I looked out of my office window in this city. Marching up and down through the street and on the lawn of the handsome building in which I have my office, I saw a company of youthful soldiers, little boys, drilling, soldier fashion, with new guns, just from the carpenter shop and made entirely of wood. A little lad marched with them carrying a flag, which was nearly heavy enough to lift him off his feet had the wind blown, and he called himself a color sergeant. A youthful captain of about 12 years of age marched proudly at their head giving orders in true military fashion, which orders they obeyed in many instances like trained veterans. They were without uniform, were soiled and unkempt as boys are wont to be, just schoolboys; and as I looked there came to my mind the words of the immortal bard, "And then comes the school boy, with satchel and shining morning face, creeping like snail, unwillingly to school"; and which they doubtless would, had it been a matter of school rather than playing soldier; and then I thought again of something else that Shakespeare had said: "And then the soldier, bearded like the pard, swearing strange oaths, jealous in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel, seeking the bubble reputation, even in the cannon's mouth." And then, sir, I looked again, and watching them, not carelessly, as a man of the street, but with a dreamy look in their eyes, I saw some of the soldiers of the sixties; some smiled rather wistfully, I thought, as they stroked their beards, others shook their heads and limped away on their staffs, while others lingered near, speaking words of commendation to these little soldiers of the twentieth century. When some of these old men spoke I was again reminded that Shakespeare said:

> The sixth stage shifts into the lean and slippered pantaloon; with spectacles on nose and pouch on side; his youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide for his shrunk shanks. His big, manly, voice changing again to childish treble, pipes and whistles in the sound.

And then he wrote: "Last scene of all in this strange, eventful history is second childishness." Here indeed, sir, were two generations of children, the soldier of the sixties, now a child again, and the young child soldier of the twentieth century. God grant that these little soldiers of the twentieth century may be permitted in their "military careers" to always "play soldier" on the green, midst happy surroundings and smiles and peace and plenty. God grant that they may "seek the cannon's mouth" only to watch the birds which build their nests therein. God speed the day when they may "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks," and war shall be no more. Sentiment; but we deal not in sentiment now.

A few days ago I stood at the tomb of a man who rested from his labors more than a hundred years ago; there was nothing there but a mausoleum, mayhap a hand full of ashes and a memory, but involuntarily, sir, in the faded evening light, I uncovered my head, for I stood at the tomb of the founder of this Republic, Washington. As I returned to the city, the capital of earth's grandest Republic, admiring, sir, even in a spirit of awe, in the brief time between twilight and darkness, its towers and spires and minarets and domes, looking, sir, as one would imagine, like the new Jerusalem itself, I passed what is destined to be the most magnificent memorial ever erected to mortal man, the memorial to Abraham Lincoln, who saved the American Republic in the sixties; and beyond that, standing against the sky line, a great gray monument, seeming almost to reach to heaven itself, the monument of him to gave the Republic life; whose very name, this proudest of earth's cities bears. Sir, as I looked it reminded me, in its somber gray, of a pillar of cloud; and I thought of the story I learned at my mother's knee, long years before I entered into manhood and she entered into rest, wherein the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness and "Jehovah went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead them the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light, that they might go by day and by night; the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night departed not from before the people."

The pillar of cloud is the memory of Washington as exemplified by that monument standing before all peoples. Do we American people wander in the wilderness now? Sir, I admonish you to follow the example of Washington, be true to his memory. But where is the pillar of fire? Sir, there is a fire of patriotism burning brightly in the heart of every true American; and among the children of Florida it has already burst into one great pillar of fire and her sons are willing to follow this successor of Washington in the White House, who shows you the way in this night of darkness and distress and who has the wisdom and the statesmanship to give you light. I stand by the President. Knowing as I do that the destiny of this Nation rests, not upon a sentiment, however lofty that sentiment may be, I deem it my solemn duty to uphold the acts of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, by giving him what of my feeble strength I may; to set aside sentiment and deal with this horrible situation in a practical way. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that I do this absolutely without sentiment, when I tell you that I have only one son, and in the course of nature he will be my only son when I shall cease from life's labors and disappear from the haunts of men. As I remarked at the beginning, the legal tender in war may not be paid in gold, it must be paid with human life; and freely and voluntarily and with his full consent I lay that price upon the altar of my country, and with it I lay a father's love, by voting for the bill as recommended by the President.

OF

HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

INTERVIEW WITH CONGRESSMAN FOCHT.

Interviewing Congressman BENJAMIN K. FOCHT, of the seventeenth Pennsylvania district, Mr. Harry N. Price, the well-known character sketch and human-interest story reporter on the Washington Post, put this question to the Pennsylvania Congressman:

"If you were President of the United States, what would you do?"

"If President, what would I do?" retorted Mr. FOCHT. "If President, as far as I could within my constitutional rights, when the war is over I would do something to help rehabilitate poor, brave, bleeding France for her response to the appeals of Benjamin Franklin, the great Pennsylvanian, in sending Rochambeau to us with his sloops of war and soldiers and supplies which brought the sword of proud Cornwallis to the dust at Yorktown and right there made us free. And for England, too, I would have something, if nothing more than mercy and pity, after her 800 years of conquest over weak people around the circle of the globe. Early adopting the easy way, the way of Benedict Arnold was tempted to his ruin and the princes of India fell and the Boer generals were induced to quit fighting, and with every treaty ever made with Napoleon regarded as they are now looked upon by Germany in time of war, merely 'scraps of paper,' the pround island kingdom finally finds herself up against it, and this monarch cries to our Republic for help. But all this is only well-known history, even though the present methods employed to excite our modern press, and through this potential agency the country, these historical facts may be somewhat obscure and not too well understood at this time.

"Sothern, the great actor, tells a lot of things he would do in the marvelous play 'If I Were King.' Now, if I were President I would summon every resource America commands or would require and sweep the seas of all interference with legitimate American rights, Germany, England, and all other countries to be included in my purpose. My war, if any war at all, would be for America and her citizens, and not for any European king, dynasty, or plutocracy. I would follow the course laid out by our fathers when they designed this Republic and fight to the last old man and the last schoolboy and the last dollar, for America, but not one cent would go to help continue the murder that now drenches Europe in blood. Instead of sending our money and our youth to the trenches of Europe to be consumed in hell's fires of war there, I would conserve our resources for better things when the war is over.

"I would take advantage of the opportunity now offering to extend freedom throughout the world—real freedom, individual sovereignty, but not the spurious and counterfeit sort supposed to be enjoyed in limited monarchies and so-called republics, which in reality are only military despotism, where the people are tricked and deceived just as some few either in ignorance or mendacity would permit the old Machavellian game to be played here. With Europe down and out in every resource, bleeding, crushed, and contrite for her sins against God and humanity, I would help all the stricken peoples back, but with the people ruling, and all despots and all entailed rights absolutely on the scrap pile as effete if not noxious. My condition for the rendering of this helpfulness would be the elimination of the three big bosses of the centuries, the Hapsburgs, the Romanoffs, and the Hohenzollerns, with the expurgation of the autocratic and all-controlling Ministry of England. Great Britain's entailment laws which perpetuate the feudal system under which few are free and rich and the many are poor and helpless subjects, would have to be abolished, and instead of a condition where only 10 per cent of those who occupy land and property own it, all would have the same opportunity frugal and industrious men have here in America. For anything we might do to bind the wounds of Great Britain I would demand the freedom of Ireland, whose great and brave people stood with the iron men of Germany referred to by Tacitus and Caesar, fought the battles of the Revolution against England, and again in 1812, and who saved the Union in 1861–1865. I would not be an easy mark for the machinations of either Lombard Street or Wall Street in this hour when my country has the balance of the world's wealth, but I would prepare my country to meet an embattled world and do it in the name of freedom, individual sovereignty, intelligence and happiness, and I am sure the power of God would be with my purpose and in the accomplishment of which not a shot need be fired by America.

"We took under our banner of freedom some new and raw recruits when we gave the Philippines, Cuba, and Porto Rico their liberty. Now, at this opportune time I would strive to carry freedom, real freedom, which Europe does not have, across other seas, and in doing this I would feel it my duty to my countrymen to make honorable trade agreements so that in the coming upbuilding after the war our commerce might not suffer any disadvantage.

"If President Wilson would rear a monument for himself to stand by the side of that of Moses, our Savior, and Abraham Lincoln, the opportunity now knocks at his door, and if he accepts it, the freemen of unborn centuries will applaud his name. The chance of ages is before him and the Nation awaits the opportunity to support him in everything American, and in extending without hate or malice or war to others the blessings of real freedom.

"And all this I would do if I were President and the Constitution of my country permitted the use of such power, but since I am not President, I am ready to stand squarely back of the man who is in case of hostilities with any other country," concluded Mr. FOCHT.

FREE IRELAND AND MAKE FAVORABLE TRADE AGREEMENTS.

With special representatives of the French and British Governments due to arrive in America in the course of a few days, and the wager said to be offered by Lloyd's, the big world underwriters, of 10 to 1 that the war will be over within 60 days, there is injected new sensations if not thrills into the war situation. In any event no matter whether these foreign representatives are to visit this Government with some sort of peace arrangement in their satchels, or whether they are coming to tell just how the money they want from us is to be returned and when, their contemplated and announced visit has greatly intensified interest about the halls of Congress. Therefore all await Balfour, of England, and M. Viviani, of France, and the outcome of their visit and errand.

With these representatives on our soil and under our protection, no better opportunity could be offered than on this occasion for looking somewhat ahead for the business and the commercial future of America. When the war is over we should have some of the world's new trade, and now when England as a single nation is really helpless to conquer Germany, and France is almost bled to death, it is a fine time to get just consideration. Certainly if the war is to go to a finish it is self-evident that "Uncle Sam" must complete the job for the allies, and if we go in with men, money, credit, and provisions, to put out Prussianism and rescue France and England, we must not overlook the fact that we may be poor, too, when we get through, and we ought to know that we are going to have at least an even start commercially with the allies after we help them to win. Our laborers, farmers as well as capitalists, should be well kept in mind.

Our suggestion goes with the little proviso that Lloyd's are wrong in their guess about the whole thing in Europe falling down in 60 days. This may be true, but there is no such official word in the air around Washington; yet, of course, barring a "leak," such important information would not be divulged through the agency of administration sources.

Long ago in this department we predicted that we would not get into this world war in the same physical way other nations are involved, and while we are yet hopeful that we may not, the way things have been traveling during the past two weeks puts our guess very much in jeopardy.

In the House on Tuesday the weather vane spun around a few times and pointed the way in which some important matters may head. A southern Democrat could not understand why there should be conscription, and especially among farmers, whose sons in time of war will be needed on the farms to raise food for the soldiers. The question of raising 4,500 soldiers by conscription or draft in each congressional district in the United States was deemed the fair way to raise a real army, but the draft was always odious, which is the reason England has never enforced it, and here a call for volunteers may be first made. The other question upon which there is far from unanimity is that of sending our armies to fight on the Continent of Europe, and the newspapers here have modified the demands for this and now speak only of the possibility of sending troops there, and then only after a year's training.

But the spirit of '76 is abroad here, and so far as Congress is concerned, while there may be talking by some and talking and writing by others, every star in the field of blue will always be ablaze and every stripe aglow.

Talk about a billion-dollar Congress! This one is to provide more funds than it cost to fight the Civil War and pay as much for pensions since the South tried to make the big get-away. But Congress is in session, and the Congress is sovereign, and you would have thought so when on Tuesday the Senate sent over for concurrence a little item of one hundred million "for expenses for the President which he might not know he is going to have." By unanimous consent the bill went back with notice from everybody that Congress must know more about items even as small as one hundred million. It was a unanimous protest. Democrats and Republicans alike demanding an estimate for which the one hundred million was to provide, and there was some talking to the point on the subject. Representative FITZGERALD, the Democratic chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, had this to say:

"I do not believe myself that any situation has arisen that makes it either necessary or desirable to establish in this country the most absolute autocracy the world has ever known in government."

The Republican House leader, JAMES R. MANN, added these few words, following which the House adjourned over until the next day with the hundred million hanging in the air.

"I hope that we will not be asked, in the endeavor to spread democracy throughout the world, to abolish it at home."

TIME TO FREE IRELAND.

When Congressman FOCHT was asked by a Washington reporter "What he would do if he were President?" among other things he said, in substance: "For such assistance as we may render England I would require as part compensation that Ireland be made free."

Following this suggestion, made March 31, there was this week introduced into Congress by Congressman MEDILL MCCORMICK, of Chicago, a resolution calling upon that body to take advantage of the psychological moment and press Ireland's freedom as one of the conditions involved in the final peace settlement.

This is the time of all times to end the bondage of the island which has given America so many statesmen, soldiers, and industrial workers. No one expected a Republic for Russia at this time, and yet the yoke of the oppressor was thrown off; the German Emperor has just promised more equitable representation in legislative deliberation, and the Empire is not far removed from the likelihood of becoming a Republic upon the close of the war, or even before. Then why should the proposal of a free Ireland be regarded as out of alignment and keeping with the trend of the times? It is not, but on the contrary is altogether timely and germane to President Wilson's propaganda of universal democracy.

Make Ireland free.

LUTHERANS LOYAL TO AMERICA AND THE PRESIDENT.

The following was read in the Memorial Lutheran Church, of Washington, by Rev. Henry Anstadt on Sunday, April 15, 1917:

Whereas the Government of the United States has declared that our beloved country is in a state of war, and it becomes the duty of all citizens to give the authorities their most earnest support, we, the presidents of the three general Lutheran bodies in America, viz, the General Synod of the Lutheran Church in America, the General Council of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in North America, and the United Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in the South, do hereby call upon and request the members of these bodies now, as they ever have done, to affirm and approve by word and act their loyalty to the President and Congress of the United States; and we further recommend to the congregations in our cities and towns that they form American Red Cross chapters in their respective communities for the amelioration of the lot of our brave soldiers in the field and our sailors, and that they offer up prayers that the war may end with honor to our country and in an early and perpetual peace.

COL. ROOSEVELT AND HIS AMERICAN VOLUNTEERS.

Here is a fact which may be taken as evidence of the weakness or of the strength of democracy, according to the point of view: While earnest folk have been arguing laboriously as to whether this country should send troops to Europe, and while the Government of the United States has been making plans for a large Army to be employed a year or two hence, if necessary, and issuing urgent appeals for recruits to fill up the depleted ranks of the Regular Army and the National Guard, 100,000 Americans have volunteered to go to the trenches upon the mere announcement of a private citizen that he hoped to lead such a force.

Once the great decision of war was made, the overshadowing national problem became the choice of means for bringing the power of this Nation to bear upon the enemy. Plans vital to this end are being worked out with encouraging vigor. There is to be close cooperation with the governments already in the conflict; they are to have all the financial, industrial, and economic support which American resources can provide. Because of the character of their needs and the relative unpreparedness of the United States in other respects, these matters are the most urgent.

But the military program is likewise of vast extent. The Regular Army and the National Guard are to be enlisted to war strength—this will require about 300,000 men—and 500,000 troops in addition are to be raised by selective conscription. Yet it is the official judgment that none of the total force of more than 1,000,000 shall be sent into action for at least a year.

Practical reasons of undoubted weight are cited in support of this policy. It would mean, nevertheless, that for 12 months, perhaps the most critical of the war, America would be represented by its wealth, not by its citizenship; and it might mean that the flag of the world's greatest Republic would never reach the battle front at all.

No one, we suppose, has so imperfect an understanding of what the colossal struggle is that he believes the United States could soon add decisive strength to the armies now fighting in France. It must be conceded that we have neither the trained men sufficient to swing the balance nor the means of transporting them. But the fact remains that the sending of an American force to the front would have a moral effect translatable in military terms. The most serious reverse Prussianism has suffered since the battle of the Marne was the President's declaration to Congress a fortnight ago. Every word had the power of an armed host. And in the same way every American soldier in France would be multiplied, because his presence would signify to Germany and the world democracy's sentence of outlawry against autocracy.

It is for this reason, and not from visionary belief, that America can turn the tide in the field, that leaders in the European democracies hail the suggestion. A French statesman said recently:

"The moral factor involved would be more important than the military aid. This war is a struggle of liberal, progressive nations to overthrow a reactionary governmental system. It is of the highest moral importance that the United States, the most progressive power in the world, should be represented in this new army of crusaders."

"The appearance in Europe of even one American division," says Lord Northcliffe, "would be a sign and portent of America's devotion to the cause of freedom. France and the world will never forget the day when a division flying the Stars and Stripes shall make its way to the fighting line at Verdun or on the Meuse." Nearer still in sympathy with American ideals and understanding of the American character, Viscount Bryce states clearly the meaning of such a contribution:

"Even a small American force would have an immense moral effect. The German Government would see less hope than ever of success. The German people, hitherto deceived and kept in the dark by their rulers, would turn the sooner against the military class whose arrogance and cruelty, they would see, have turned the whole world against them."

Finally, American support of the idea has been powerfully expressed by Elihu Root, a citizen whose services as Secretary of War and Secretary of State will long outlive in memory his disservice in political affairs:

"One thing that ought to be done at the earliest possible day is to send an American army, great as it may be or small as it must be, to the battle lines of France and Belgium, so that the whole world will know that America is willing to fight for the principles of American freedom; so that the Stars and Stripes shall float beside the tricolor of France, the meteor flag of England, and the banner of the new Russian democracy; so that no one may have any doubt that we are willing to fight with our friends in a cause in which we have so much to gain and so much to lose."

There are, indubitably, objections to the plan. Pro-Germanism, which could exult over the Lusitania massacre, cloaks its hostility under pretended concern lest Americans "die in a European quarrel." Pacifism is aghast at the suggestion that the place to fight for justice is where its enemy seeks to slay it. And narrow-minded patriotism holds that the United States should wait until its territory, as well as its sovereignty, is invaded. But none of these pleas, whether of disloyal interest or sincere delusion, should deter the Nation from giving this convincing testimony of its championship of civilization.

Objections on military grounds are more serious and require careful consideration.

"For every trained man sent abroad at this time," says a War Department official "the Army will have been deprived of the services of a hundred trained men two years hence. The vital need is the raising of an immense army and the training of it. We can not neglect this work for the sake of sentiment." Great Britain, it is pointed out, nearly wrecked herself and her allies by sending her trained troops to the front at the beginning and depriving herself of their invaluable services for the training of the vast levies that were necessary.

The logic of this position is impressive, and if the factors in the problem were as rigid as represented there could be no question of undermining the Nation's resources and impairing its defenses in order to achieve any moral or psychological effect, however far-reaching it might be. But the difficulties had been foreseen and conquered. There was one man in the United States, and only one, who had the vision, the capacity, and the power of leadership to make possible the realization in this manner of America's ideals.

Theodore Roosevelt's accomplished plan for the raising of a division to serve in France has been but one item in his extraordinary service to his country during the war. It is but the concrete expression of that ardent spirit of patriotism and humanity that made his voice the voice of true Americanism when the soul of the nation was drugged with false doctrine. Yet it will be remembered of him that during all the months when he was championing, almost alone among our leaders, the cause of national rights and international justice and preaching the need of defensive preparedness he was tirelessly organizing a force that might carry the standard of his country to the field of honor.

Thus it was that when the inevitable war began he had ready for enlistment 22,000 picked men eager to prove their faith in him and in America even unto death. And thus it was that he could formulate a program which meets every objection raised against the proposal of an early expedition.

Having personally pledged his loyal service to the President and to all military commanders who should be placed over him, he was able to offer for dispatch within 60 to 90 days "an infantry division of three three-regiment brigades and one divisional brigade of cavalry, together with an artillery brigade, a regiment of engineers, a motor cycle machine-gun regiment, an aero squadron, a signal corps, supply service, etc."—22,000 men selected from 100,000 applicants, every one fit to undergo intensive training in France for the grim work of the trenches.

No achievement of sheer leadership ever excelled this. But far more important is the fact that the plan of which this is a part would obviate the dangers justly feared by the military experts.

Col. Roosevelt urges the raising of 100,000 volunteers—to include his division—"not in the smallest degree as a substitute for, but as the necessary supplement to, the obligatory system." He would, moreover, have the enlistments restricted absolutely to men who would not be taken under the conscription law and could not be expected to enter the Regular Army or the Militia. Three Regular Army officers for each 1,000 men—66 officers in all—would be the trifling extent of his drain upon the experts whose services are vital in the creation of the main armies of the Republic.

From the day when Col. Roosevelt's plan was first made known it has been assailed by ignorance and partisanship. Critics sneered that he was "going off half-cocked"—and the answer is the revelation that his force is ready for mobilization within two months. They charged that he was embarrassing the Government, and the answer was his visit to the White House to offer loyal support and his powerful advocacy of the President's entire policy. They complained that he threatened to disrupt the military program of the General Staff, and the answer is a proposal which adds strength to it.

Sentiment and strategy alike urge that at the earliest day American patriotism and energy can accomplish it the flag of this Nation shall be in its appointed place on the firing line. For our sins of neglect and self-indulgence we must suffer the reproach of being unable to send it there with a force that would be decisive; but let us send it, if only as a symbol of our faith and high resolve! Let us send it in the spirit which Theodore Roosevelt has so splendidly interpreted:

"We owe this to humanity. We owe it to the small nations which have suffered such dreadful wrong from Germany. Most of all, we owe it to ourselves, to our national honor and self-respect. For the sake of our own souls, for the sake of the memories of the great Americans of the past, we must show that we do not intend to make this merely a dollar war. Let us pay with our bodies for our souls' desire. Let us without one hour's unnecessary delay put the American flag on the battle front in this great world war for democracy and civilization and for the reign of justice and fair dealing among the nations of mankind."

Letter from the Farmers' National Committee on War Finance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. LANGLEY,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 30, 1917.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter from the Farmers' National Committee on War Finance.

The letter is as follows:

FARMERS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON WAR FINANCE,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

To the United States Congress.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: The farmers of this country affiliated with this committee, composed of members of the leading farm organizations of the country, are unqualifiedly in favor of a graduated income tax, as proposed by the American Committee on War Finance.

This being a war for democracy, we submit that the only way to finance the war democratically is on the pay-as-you-go plan, by conscripting the accumulated wealth and surplus incomes to pay the enormous money cost coincident with conscripting the young men to pay with their lives the enormous human sacrifice demanded to win the war. Any less democratic method of meeting the cost of the war will be considered by the farmers of the Nation unpatriotic and unworthy of this great Republic.

Respectfully submitted.

FARMERS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON WAR FINANCE,
By GEO. P. HAMPTON.

Americanize the Capital as a Wise Measure of War Preparedness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Hon. Theodore W. Noyes, editor of the Washington Star, before the Washington Board of Trade on April 27, 1917.

The address is as follows:

AMERICANIZE THE CAPITAL AS A WISE MEASURE OF WAR PREPAREDNESS.

Washingtonians have been urging a constitutional amendment which shall give them the status of citizens of a State for the purpose only of representation in Congress and the Electoral College. They now urge only an amendment which, as an irreducible minimum of justice, shall empower Congress, in its discretion, to give them this status.

War is upon us. World issues and vital national questions absorb attention.

Is this a time to redress the Capital's political grievances?

Yes, says Washington. To Americanize the political aliens of the District of Columbia is to do justice and to relieve the Nation of reproach and shame—achievements which, like the motion to adjourn, are always in order. And not only in a general, but in a special sense is this Americanizing process peculiarly opportune, in that it reflects the very thought and spirit of the times and is an integral part of the legislation which springs naturally from the patriotic impulse toward true preparedness.

TO AMERICANIZE CAPITAL PECULIARLY OPPORTUNE.

The dominating thought to-night concerns vitalized Americanism; patriotic self-sacrifice in war-preparedness; a quickening and intensifying everywhere of the fine, strong spirit of American nationality. In these days of exalted Americanism Washingtonians are in the front rank of devoted Americans. They have ever been foremost when Americanism meant loss instead of benefit, when to be Americans meant to place both sacrifice of treasure and blood sacrifice upon the Nation's altar.

I do not now emphasize the unique patriotic service which Washingtonians have rendered, far surpassing in this respect all other Americans, in the creation, maintenance, and upbuilding of the National Capital. To-night I compare them with other Americans solely on the basis of the degree in which they and others have respectively met the general patriotic obligation that is common to all.

WASHINGTON'S NATIONAL TAXES.

Washingtonians have paid their proportion of every national tax, direct or indirect, from the birth of the Nation. The only national taxes that fall directly and in ascertainable amounts upon Americans are the internal-revenue taxes, including the excise and income taxes. In total contribution in 1914 to these taxes Washington exceeds 22 of the States, though it exceeds in population only 6 of them. Its contribution is greater than those of 9 of the States combined. The Washingtonians' per capita contribution to these national taxes is greater than that of the citizens of 36 of the States.

WASHINGTON'S BLOOD SACRIFICE.

Washingtonians have risked life and shed their blood in every national war. To preserve the Union the first volunteers came from the capital, and Washingtonians supplied a greater percentage of troops in excess of their quota than nearly every State in the Union. In the War with Spain they sent to Cuba a fine regiment exceeding their quota in numbers. The same response was made when the summons to the Mexican border came. At that time the percentage of men of military age enrolled in the Organized Militia was greater in the District than in any State in the Union. Washington sent more soldiers to the border than 22 of the States.

In war to-day no other American community responds more enthusiastically and effectively to the call to arms and universal service. They are eager volunteers of money for war through the Red Cross and other agencies, and of personal service through enlistment in Army, Navy, National Guard, or Home Defense League. They show patriotic readiness to bear the burden of conscription, whether in the shape of taxes imposed on lines which cause the District of Columbia to contribute more per capita than three-fourths of the States and more absolutely than nine of the States combined, or in the shape of universal personal service and the selective draft.

To every demand of devotion and self-sacrifice made upon Americans Washington has rendered, is rendering, and will always render full, hearty, and unstinted response.

NATIONAL BURDENS IMPOSED; RIGHTS DENIED.

In genuine representative governments rights and privileges are inseparably wedded to obligations and responsibilities. How do the Washingtonians, thus burdened with national obligations, fare in respect to American rights and privileges?

Before the judicial branch of the National Government they are, the United States Supreme Court says, less than aliens in the right to sue and be sued.

In relation to representation in the legislative branch and by the executive branch of the National Government they are on the same footings as aliens.

They are good enough Americans to pay taxes and go to war, but not good enough Americans to be represented in the Congress which taxes them and sends them to war.

In relation to national taxes, their sole function is to pay. They have nothing to say, like other national taxpayers, concerning the amount and kind of taxes they shall pay and how the tax money shall be spent.

In relation to national war their sole function is to fight in obedience to command. They have no voice, like other Americans, in the councils which determine war or peace. They have no representation in the Government which requires them to fight, to bleed, and, perhaps, to die.

In all the expanse of the continental and contiguous United States, from ocean to ocean, from Canada to Mexico, every Territory has been exalted into Statehood, and the District of Columbia is the only remaining American community whose people are still compulsory occupants of the national hospital for politically defective and delinquent Americans.

NO EXCUSE OF NATIONAL NECESSITY.

These gross discriminations against the Americans of the District of Columbia find no excuse in national impotency or national necessity.

The suggestion that the Nation is impotent to cure this evil is an insult to American character and capacity. No other nation in the world degrades in national representation the people of its capital below the residents of its other cities.

These discriminations are not necessary to the constitutional control by Congress of the 10 miles square. Correction of them, Americanizing the District of Columbia, does not destroy or diminish that control. Representation by 1 out of 436 in the House and by 1 out of 97 or 2 out of 98 in the Senate would obviously fall short of giving the District control of Congress. So small a tail could never wag so large a dog.

To give this national representation to the Washingtonians works no change in the local government or in the financial relation of Nation to capital. Exclusive power is still in the hands of Congress representing the Nation, and the change merely makes the District politically a part of the Nation and gives the 360,000 Americans in the District representation in that Congress.

Even this change is not made directly and immediately by the constitutional amendment for which, as the minimum of justice, we are now petitioning. No representation whatever is given by the amendment itself. It merely empowers Congress in its discretion, at the fitting time, to grant to the Washingtonians this measure of national representation.

Congress now has the power to grant full national representation to the people of a new State, and the nominal representation of a voteless Delegate in the House to the residents of a Territory. Is there any incongruity or evil or danger in granting to Congress the closely related power of giving this limited representation in their National Government to the Americans of the District of Columbia?

The present condition convicts the Nation of a paradoxical inconsistency, inequity, un-Americanism, unpatriotic unpreparedness.

It involves injustice to the capital and shame to the Nation.

PARADOXICAL INCONSISTENCY.

How can the Nation with consistency and self-respect tax these 360,000 intelligent, public-spirited Americans of the capital and send them to war as patriotic Americans and at the same time slur and degrade their Americanism by keeping them unnecessarily in the same category as aliens in relation to all branches of the National Government?

The Americanism to which the Nation confidently appeals in these times that stir men's souls must not be, through the Nation's neglect or fault, a stunted, dwarfed, distorted Americanism in respect to any of the Republic's sons who rush to arms in the Nation's defense.

The shock of war electrifies the Americanism of the Nation as well as the individual, of Americans collectively as well as individually.

Will not the Nation, now demanding of the individual a purer, higher, stronger Americanism, respond on the instant to its own appeal and thoroughly Americanize itself?

SAVIORS ABROAD; CRUCIFIERS AT HOME.

In the impressive and inspiring words of President Wilson: "We are glad * * * to fight thus for the ultimate peace of the world and for the liberation of its peoples, the German people included. * * * The right is more precious than peace and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own governments."

Washingtonians are among "those who submit to authority." Are not all Americans then fighting in this war for the Washingtonians' right "to have a voice in their own government"? Or is there an implied proviso in our proclamation which causes us to fight in this war to establish representative government everywhere in the world except in the Capital of the great representative Republic?

Surely the Washingtonians who go to war in response to their country's call do not shed their blood or lay down their lives to secure representative government for everybody else in all the world except themselves.

America will, as a matter of course, first liberate and give representative government to all her sons, Washingtonians included, before sending them forth to fight to bestow these vital privileges upon the rest of mankind.

The purpose of the war is to substitute democracy for autocracy everywhere. Let us make a beginning by substituting democracy for autocracy in the National Government of the Nation's city.

Shall we applaud representative government in Russia, urge it upon the people of Germany, go to war to establish it in all the world—and then spit upon, mock, and crucify the principle of representative government in the Capital of our great self-governing Republic?

If the Nation and Capital are to be the saviors of representative government abroad, they will surely not remain its crucifiers at home.

UNPATRIOTIC UNPREPAREDNESS.

Preparedness, like patriotism, is in the air and in the universal thought.

The Nation is physically unprepared for war. Its muscles are untrained and flabby. It does not know how to use weapons of offense or defense. It does not know how to concentrate, coordinate, and effectively apply its whole strength. It has not organized its powers and resources.

The Nation, faced with war, is struggling desperately to overcome this unpreparedness.

But there is an unpreparedness of mind and of spirit as well as of muscles and sinews. Obviously a nation would be unprepared in spirit to enter a war to destroy slavery in another hemisphere if it held a portion of its own people in slavery at home. Clearly an army composed in part of slaves is unprepared in spirit to fight for freedom for somebody else.

Is the United States prepared in spirit to fight as the champion of world democracy against autocracy and of representative against despotic irresponsible government when it tolerates the autocratic nonrepresentative government of its own Capital under its own exclusive control?

America, like the crusaders of old, is an armed knight who goes forth to battle in the cause of representative government. This champion of democracy against autocracy protects himself from head to foot in the armor of tested republicanism. But in this process of preparedness for battle he omits, strangely enough, the breastplate of republicanism which should protect his heart from the thrusts of autocracy.

In place of Achilles of old, invulnerable except as to his heel, is our modern Achilles, invulnerable except as to his heart.

No more striking exhibit of supreme unpreparedness could be imagined.

AN UNCONCEALABLE NATIONAL SHAME.

Un-Americanism at the American Capital is startlingly unexpected and incongruous.

The exposure of a shameful national disfigurement is here most glaringly conspicuous. It can not be hid. It is like a saber slash across the face or a brand burned deep on cheek or brow.

An evil condition maintained by the Nation at the Nation's Capital is rightly viewed as typical and characteristic. The shame is national, not local.

Autocratic nonrepresentative government in the only American territory governed exclusively by the Nation brands the Nation itself distinctly and indelibly as un-American. As is the Nation's city so is the Nation. The Capital is the Nation's heart. If the Republic is tainted with un-Americanism at its heart, the whole of the body politic is thus tainted.

Washington's slave pen in time of civil war thus branded the Nation itself with the shame of slavery, and to rid itself of this reproach the Nation freed first of all through compensated emancipation the slaves of the Nation's city. First to destroy slavery of the body, the National Capital is the last to free political slaves. All of Washington is retained by the Nation as a political slave pen, in which dwell Americans who are political aliens. Shall not the slave pen of to-day be emptied like the old?

The shame of un-Americanism at the National Capital is thus national and unconcealable. It is flaunted before all the world. As the counterpart of Hawthorne's Scarlet Letter A, America exposes upon its breast a black letter U, proclaiming itself in its Capital "Un-Republican, un-Democratic, un-American." For the Washingtonian politically the black U stands for "Unclean, unclean, unclean," the warning cry of Americans tainted with the political leprosy of non-Americanism.

AMENDMENT TIMELY AND VITAL.

Consistency and justice; national pride and self-respect; the will to efface a shameful blot from the national escutcheon; the spirit of true Americanism and righteous hatred of autocracy in any guise; the patriotic impulse toward full preparedness of the Nation as the champion of democracy and representative government everywhere in the world—all combine to make irresistible at this very moment our appeal for the adoption of this amendment.

Washingtonians will not fight less vigorously and enthusiastically for their country if these grossly unjust discriminations, slurring and degrading their Americanism, are not immediately corrected.

But should the Nation take advantage of this unselfish patriotic devotion to perpetuate an evil springing from its own unpatriotic neglect, from its own lack of appreciation of the requirements of the spirit of true Americanism? Should not the Nation, irrespective of the just pleas of the Washingtonians and purely as a national concern, abolish the evil and injury-working paradox of nonrepresentative un-American government of the National Capital territory under exclusive national control? At a time when all Americans are thrilling in response to the appeal for a purer, higher, stronger Americanism and for a more devoted and self-sacrificing spirit of American nationality will not the Nation insist, in accordance with the spirit of the times and in its own vital interest, that there shall no longer exist at the very heart of the body politic this foul abscess of non-Americanism? Surgical relief to the Nation from this threat of blood poisoning is an essential war measure, an urgent patriotic task. Cut it out unflinchingly! Cut it out at once!

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MURRAY HULBERT,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 1, 1917.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, we have just concluded the consideration of House bill 3071, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the Military and Naval Establishments, among which I am glad to note $43,450,000 for military aviation; $760,000 for antiaircraft guns, and $1,640,000 for ammunition therefor; and $11,000,000 for naval aviation; or a total of $56,850,000, as compared with $18,000,000 appropriated in the last Congress.

In this connection, under leave to extend my remarks, I desire to put in the RECORD the very admirable article by Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary, chairman of the National Aerial Coast Patrol Commission, appearing recently in the Army and Navy News, San Francisco, Cal.:

A DEPARTMENT OF AERONAUTICS FOR THE UNITED STATES AS PROVIDED BY THE SHEPPARD-HULBERT BILL.

The most vital and immediate matter in our national preparedness is air preparedness. In this at the present time we are not only deficient—we are absolutely lacking—and yet the United States gave flight to the world.

The remedy for this extremely dangerous condition is the immediate creation by Congress of a separate independent department of aeronautics with one of the biggest executives the country can produce at its head, to have full and undivided control of the upbuilding of a great air service for the Nation.

Our air service is now handled partly by the Army and partly by the Navy. This manner—it can not be called system—is inherently wrong. It means divided and dispersed responsibility. It means diversion of officers from the imperative work of their respective departments at this crucial time. It means that aeronautics is the last and least of the numerous duties devolving upon these officers.

An air fleet for the United States is a too intensely vital matter to be handled by boards or commissions or different departments, by diluted authority or divided attention. It must be handled by concentrated undivided one-man control and responsibility. This is the method which built the Panama Canal after 400 years of fussing, and it is the only way.

Air preparedness for the United States centers and hinges on the creation of a new Government department of aeronautics. Bills for the creation of such department have already been introduced in the present Congress. Congressman HULBERT, of New York, and Senator SHEPPARD, of Texas, introduced identical bills in the House and Senate. These bills are modeled on the bills which created the Department of Commerce and Labor some years ago, and later the new Department of Labor. There is reason to believe these bills have the approval of the President. The support of strong men in both Houses, from the East, the Middle West, and the Pacific coast, is already assured. The next immediate step is to secure sufficient additional support to insure the speedy enactment of these bills into law.

The building of an air fleet for this country can then be undertaken at once and pushed to rapid materialization. Individuals and organizations can do no more effective work for preparedness than by using the wires and mails to urge every Congressman and Senator to use his influence and efforts to support these bills.

Collier's of March 24 has the following:

"Our Army and Navy are virtually blind. We have less than 200 trained aviators in the service. These 200 will be busy training other men to fly. We have not a single aeroplane equipped with a gun. We have had to refuse 2,000 applications from men who wished to enlist in the Aerial Reserve Corps authorized by President Wilson last summer because we had no way of handling them. What are we going to do about it?"

According to information obtained from the Government and published in February of this year, there were in service in the Navy 37 seaplanes, 53 officers, and 163 enlisted men. In the Army, 73 machines, 96 officers, and 600 enlisted men.

On the other hand, Germany, France, and Great Britain are said to have some 10,000 aeroplanes each in commission, and it is said that the personnel of the French air service numbers more officers and men than our entire Army.

In the matter of grasp of the importance of the new service as shown by expenditures of various countries the contrast is equally striking.

A single illustration will suffice. Canada is to expend $80,000,000 this present year in building a great air fleet.

Our total appropriations for aeronautics last year were about $18,000,000 and for this year the same.

In round numbers, $80,000,000 for Canada in one year and less than $40,000,000 for us in two years. One-fourth of the amount of our next-door neighbor, with a population less than the State of New York.

The immediate needs of this country are:

First. A strong aero coast patrol and defense system along our entire coasts from Eastport, Me., to Brownsville, Tex., and from San Diego, Cal., to Cape Flattery, Wash. A national burglar alarm, as it were, around the entire country.

A year ago, in a public address which has since been printed as a United States document, I stated that "we should have at the very minimum not less than 2,000 seaplanes ready for duty on the Atlantic coast and an equal number on the Pacific; 5,000 on each coast would be better."

On the 5th of last February the Aerial Coast Patrol Commission, of which I have the honor to be the chairman, wrote to the President stating, among other things, that 1,000 aeroplanes along our Atlantic coast would increase the efficiency of our coast protection 200 to 300 per cent.

Second. We need an efficient air patrol for every mile of our Mexican frontier, a line four times as long as the present European western battle front. Had there been a dozen aviators and serviceable planes at Columbus when Villa made his raid he would have been located and captured within a week.

Third. We need antiaircraft defense for our great cities. There should be immediate and energetic action to protect our great cities from the possibility of almost indescribable destruction from air raids. Paris furnishes a good example of such defenses.

These defenses include numerous expert aviators, with swift armed planes; numerous antiaircraft guns, capable of throwing a shell 4 miles into the air, mounted in and around the city, some of them on cars that can be transferred rapidly on the city electric lines; numerous powerful searchlights to cover the air above the city with a network of light; sensitive microphones to detect the sound of an approaching propeller; the whole system connected by telephone and wireless with controls in secret underground chambers like the mine casemates of a fortified harbor.

These are the three principal items of immediate permanent air equipment. In addition to these we need seaplanes for the use of our fleets and aeroplanes for our coming great Army.

One thing should be recognized and borne constantly in mind—that while this immediate air preparedness is for a present military emergency, the money and effort expended on our air service will all count toward a great peace air service, toward the commercial air development which is surely coming at the close of the war, and in which the United States, the mother of flight, should have no difficulty, with her resources and inventive genius, in securing and retaining supremacy.

This peace air service means the carrying of mails; the transportation of passengers and express material; the life-saving patrol of our coasts, with a speed, thoroughness, and cheapness far beyond our present Coast Guard and Revenue Services.

England and France have built up the great air services which they now have under the adverse conditions of the greatest war in history. Previous to the war they had divided and uncoordinated control in their air work. The inexorable logic of war has forced them to create a concentrated and undivided control under one-man power.

The climate of the Pacific coast, with its astonishingly large number of flying days in a year, makes it ideally adapted for the location of great aviation training schools and manufacturing plants.

This fact, and the deep and practical interest of your manufacturing concerns and aeronautic organizations, should insure the Pacific coast a leading place in the air industry of the country; but to insure this position a department of aeronautics, which can recognize the importance of these conditions, and which has the power to encourage and increase them, is a sine quo non.

With a separate department of aeronautics with a man like Gen. Goethals at its head, with the experience of Great Britain and France to guide us, we can have a great air fleet in a year. Under the present system we may never have it.

If we should be crippled or seriously injured by the superior air fleets of a hostile nation, would it not be superlative irony and tragedy that we should be struck down by a weapon which we ourselves forged?

It would be like the eagle from Aesop's fable—pierced by an arrow feathered from his own wing.

The Flag.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON.
OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 30, 1917.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I desire to place before the House a notable tribute in verse to the flag of our country, written by Mr. Charles G. Crellin, of Michigan:

THE FLAG.

Stars of the early dawning set in a field of blue,
Stripes of the sunrise splendor, crimson and white of hue;
Flag of our father's fathers born on the field of strife,
Phoenix of fiery battle risen from human life,
Given for God and freedom sacred indeed the trust
Left by the countless thousands returned to the silent dust.

Flag of a mighty nation waving aloft unfurled
Kissed by the sun of heaven, caressed by the winds o' the world;
Greater than kingly power, greater than all mankind,
Conceived in the need of the hour, inspired by the Master Mind.
Over the living children, over the laureled grave,
Streaming on high in the cloudless sky, banner our fathers gave.

Flag of a new-born era, token of every right,
Wrung from a tyrant power, unawed by a tyrant's might;
Facing again the menace outflung from a foreign shore,
Meeting again the challenge as met in the years before;
Under thy spangled folds thy children await to give
All that they have or are that the flag they love shall live.

—Charles G. Crellin.

Selective Conscription—Militarism a Menace to Democracy—Is Labor to be Enslaved?—How About the Constitution?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,
OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917,

On the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, one more vicious attack on the spirit of American liberty! One more deadly insult to the patriotism and intelligence of American manhood! One more abject and miserable surrender to the wiles and influences that Washington foresaw and warned us against in these immortal words:

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy to be useful must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

Selective conscription, you call this bill? Who is to do the selecting? Who are they going to select? Who are they going to let go? You passed a bill the other day giving the recruiting officers and press gangs of foreign monarchies right and power to come over here and enlist their subjects, and I presume these same enlisters or recruiters are going to teach our recruiters the gentle art of pressing as it is done across the water. I saw in the Evening Star of Tuesday, April 24, an article whose headline read "Gen. Bridges Tells of British Errors," and then the article went on to state that the volunteer system had failed in England. Well, suppose it did fail in England? Does that mean it will fail here? Has it ever failed here in the past? Did it fail at Lexington in 1775? Did it fail at New Orleans in 1815? Did it fail at Gettysburg or Santiago?

Mr. Speaker, every battle that ever was fought by American soldiers or sailors on land or sea; every victory an American Army or Navy ever won was fought by volunteers. Does any Member of this House seriously believe that we have deteriorated? I for one believe that the young and virile manhood of America is just as ready to fight and die for America to-day as they ever were. I know that the State of Wisconsin will furnish her full quota of husky scrappers, and a surplus if necessary, and I have absolute faith that every other State in the Union will do its fair share without the persuasion of a press gang.

What Wisconsin has done in the past and what she is ready to do in this present is clearly and patriotically expressed in the following telegram from the Hon. E. L. Phillip, governor of Wisconsin:

MADISON, WIS., April 18, 1917.

Hon. WM. J. CARY, M. C.
Washington, D. C.:

In reply to an inquiry by the New York American on the question of conscription I sent them the following wire to-day:

"I favor universal military training and the National Guard system, but not militarism in the European sense. I am opposed to conscription as advocated by the Military Staff. If we will adhere to the volunteer plan we will raise an Army more promptly and give patriotic men an opportunity to show their loyalty to the country, and we shall have the fighting spirit in our Army, which, in my judgment, is necessary to wage war successfully. As to conscription at the present time, I believe it is both unwise and unnecessary. This State stands ready to furnish 20,000 men on 30 days' notice and such additional troops thereafter as the needs of the country will require if the President will so order and the War Department will provide equipment. During the Civil War Wisconsin, with a population of only 800,000, gave Lincoln 91,000 men. The patriotic spirit of the sixties still lives here, and it is unnecessary to call Wisconsin's men to the flag by compulsory act.

E. L. PHILLIP, Governor.

That the Americans of German birth and descent in Wisconsin will prove as loyal to-day as they always were in the past ought not to require any new proof, but I will insert here an article from the Germania-Herold of April 7, a Republican newspaper printed in the German language in Milwaukee:

WAR!

The Constitution of the United States lays down for our country its form of government.

Ours is a representative government. That is to say, the Constitution in none of its provisions recognizes the referendum, the right of participation by the people through direct specific ballot. Neither does the Constitution direct that the representatives in Congress, in the Senate or in the House, submit to the prevailing wishes of their constituents. These representatives, on the contrary, are given the right to decide upon the weal and woe of the country according to their own conviction.

So they acted within their rights in proclaiming a state of war, whatever may have been the wish of the people at that particular moment.

We, the citizens of the United States, ourselves drew up this Constitution, and have voluntarily subjected ourselves to its provisions. Consequently we must abide by the decision of Congress.

Opponents to the step Congress now has taken hold the view that it was not to the interest of the United States to enter the European war; that, furthermore, circumstances did not warrant war; and, finally, that the Nation owed it to its own sense of justice to exercise forbearance to the other side after having accorded it to the one side.

Especially did the opponents of the war emphasize that British influences on the Nation, resulting from the identity of language, as well as from their control of the cable service, operated against a correct judgment as to the best interests of America.

Whatever these influences may have been, however, the fact remains that Congress, under the provisions of the Constitution, acted according to its own judgment in the best interests of the Nation, and that every citizen must, and will, submit to this decision as the decision of the court of last resort.

Many citizens, before this decision was reached, felt obliged to give assurances of their loyalty. Such action could only emanate from the mistaken notion that there were citizens who were not Americans in the fullest meaning of the word.

The case is different for those who are stepping from civil life into military service, thereby accepting new duties under new conditions. These with raised hand and throbbing heart take the new oath of allegiance. May thousands upon thousands do their duty in this manner within the next months.

To further indicate the readiness of Americans of German blood to show their loyalty, let me insert here a record of enlistments in Milwaukee on April 11, from the Milwaukee Free Press, and also a clipping on the same subject:

THE DAY'S RECRUITS.

After establishing a record of enlistments that put even Chicago to shame, "recruiting row" in the Plankinton Arcade Tuesday exerted every effort to avoid the slump that almost inevitably comes after a marked achievement. The purpose which inspired every worker in the intensified campaign was productive of results, and when the day's work was over the military services of the United States were swelled by 52 stalwart Wisconsin boys. The young men who helped Milwaukee maintain its position as a premier recruiting city follow:

THE ARMY.

Alfred Chatell, Milwaukee; G. W. Reese, Milwaukee; Charles Sauerssig, Milwaukee; F. A. Stondall, Milwaukee; John Tidd, Milwaukee; Charles Ware, Milwaukee.

THE NAVY.

Regulars: N. H. Rowlingson, 311 Washington Street; G. E. Hauschewitz, 1163 Twenty-first Street; R. F. Waterman, 537 Sixty-eighth street; Arthur H. Jackson, Norway, Mich.; William H. Parker, 919 Newhall Street; L. L. Paul, 722 Galena Street; Albert A. Callies, Oshkosh; J. J. Prondzinski, Winona, Minn.; Louis P. Kropp, Racine; Lewis C. Rusch, Oconto; Aloysius Majchrzak, Rollins; James H. Doyle, Seattle; Arthur W. De Muyser, Green Bay; Raymond O. Hussong, Greenleaf; C. W. Newberry, Madison.

Reserves: Elmer B. Scribner, Sheboygan; William N. Perry, Racine; E. H. Krahn, 1560 Oklahoma Avenue; F. P. Ternes, 506 Twenty-fifth Street; J. L. Hanratty, 477 Fourteenth Avenue; Joseph Tonferes, Breed; P. E. Thorpe, 734 Thirty-third Street; H. H. Seybold, Lake Geneva; Alex S. Becker, West Bend; Walter L. Gottschall, Chicago.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Company F: F. J. Sieber, 3608 North Avenue; W. J. Wren, 2619 St. Paul Avenue.

Company D: Joseph Marifke, South Milwaukee; Raymond T. Friel, Milwaukee; Stanley Krysinski, Milwaukee.

Field Artillery: A. K. Schoenke, 1229 Fourteenth Street; G. A. Koch, 834 Downer Avenue; R. E. Gerhard, 840 Downer Avenue.

Cavalry: R. Heinz, Fifty-third and Blue Mound Road; M. Guse, St. Francis; Arthur Hartel, Milwaukee; L. Patterson, 2627 Cold Spring Avenue.

The motor ambulance: Dr. H. S. Sargeant, Wauwatosa; W. I. Pitt, 411 Fifteenth Avenue; C. A. Geroulx, Waukesha; T. Montgomery, St. Joseph's Hospital; John Pensen, Wales; G. W. Williams, 859 Astor Street; O. W. Webber, 694 Cramer Street.

GERMANS PROVE LOYAL—MORE READY TO ENLIST THAN MEN OF OTHER DESCENT, FIGURES SHOW.

That men of German descent are demonstrating their loyalty more than men of other nationalities was shown by figures compiled by the Navy recruiting official of Milwaukee. Out of 250 applicants examined for enlistment, by classifying the men as to nationality when either one of the parents or both were born in a foreign country, the following results were obtained:

German, 37 per cent.
American, 34 per cent.
Norwegian, 7 per cent.
Polish, 5 per cent.
Canadian, 3 per cent.
Danish, 3 per cent.
Irish, 1 per cent.
Scattering, 10 per cent.

Out of 154 applicants for admission to the Navy, 57 were the sons of parents born in Germany and only 9 were sons of parents born in countries now fighting Germany.

TIME TO STOP TALK.

The above figures were compiled by Lieut. Frank Chapman and was a surprise to Army and Navy officers.

"I think it is about time to shut off all talk about who is and who is not patriotic when reference to foreign born or children of foreign born is made," declared Lieut. Chapman. "These figures are a surprise to every one of us. They certainly do not put the son of the native American in a pleasant light."

I asked a moment ago whether the volunteer system had ever failed, and now I ask another question, and that is, Has a draft ever succeeded?

History records that when a draft was proposed in 1812 New England threatened to secede, and there are men still living who can recall the draft riots of New York during the Civil War. I say to you in all solemnity that you are not going to get either good soldiers or efficient service by any such un-American methods. Give American boys a good leader and a righteous cause and they will storm the gates of hell. You can lead Americans everywhere; but if I know the plain people of my country, and I think I do, you will find it a pretty stiff job to drive them anywhere.

And the worst feature of this measure is the avenues it opens to rank favoritism, brutal tyranny, and unjust discrimination. If it were an out-and-out universal military-service act, compelling every male citizen to do his share of service, with no chance for favoritism, I would gladly support the measure, for it would at least put every American on a par, but selective conscription—shades of Jefferson, Washington, and Lincoln forgive us the sacrilege we are committing! Selective conscription indeed; discriminatory draft would be a fitter name. Can not any intelligent man see how the measure will be carried out. The rich man, the fellow with the pull, the one who would be a slacker under the volunteer system will be a slacker still.

Expecting some such measure as this, I introduced on April 13, 1917, a resolution indicating some of the types that ought by right to be conscripted first, and I will insert this resolution here:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 51) instructing the Secretary of War to make certain selections of recruits under the proposed conscription law.

Whereas the resources of our country will be taxed to the utmost during the coming war and all available labor will be needed on the farm and in the workshops of the United States; and

Whereas it is proposed to raise an army by selective conscription: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That upon the adoption of a regulation to conscript by selection the War Department be instructed to select the first recruits from among such male citizens of the proper military age who are officers or members of the New York Stock Exchange or of any other similar body, or who are officials in banks, lawyers, magazine editors, and other citizens engaged in nonproductive pursuits.

I have received a great many letters in reference to this resolution, and while most have been favorable a number have come from the Wall Street section which have been amusingly abusive and show very plainly that the very thought of real field service is sending chills and fever through the systems of a whole bunch of these natural born shirkers. I will insert a little squib from the New York Sun of April 14:

GOSSIP OF WALL STREET—SLACKERS AND COWARDS.

Probably Representative CARY, of Wisconsin, is making himself believe that the men of Wall Street are slackers and cowards and that they are responsible for the war and are urging its active prosecution in the interest of their own pocketbooks. Like many of our inferior Congressmen, he talks of the Street without knowledge, and argues along the same lines as the vigilance committees of olden days, who believed in hanging first and trying afterwards. Be that as it may, Representative CARY says he is in deadly earnest about the "slackers" of Wall Street, and he therefore has introduced a resolution in Congress which doubtless will bring consternation to these "slackers" and make the Street all atremble, because the measure states that in raising an army by selective conscription the first selection should be made from such male citizens of proper military age as are officers or members of the New York Stock Exchange. But the Hon. CARY does not stop at exchange members. He urges that bank officers, lawyers, and magazine editors likewise should be among the first to be manhandled by the military press gang. Such men, he opines, are nonproducers. And he might add the remark of a woolly rural visitor to the stock exchange who, when he looked down from the gallery upon the apparently crazy men below, said: "They ain't worth hanging."

My resolution did not in any way insinuate that the Wall Street gang were cowards or slackers, but the writer of this squib, who is doubtless familiar with the bunch, immediately saw that imputation and gave another proof of the old adage, "The wicked flee when no man pursueth." I also note in this little squib the cynical reference to my desire to see "nonproducers manhandled by a military press gang"; well, he is correct enough in that assumption. If we are going to have press gangs driving unwilling Americans with the butt end of their muskets into training camps, I would much rather see them exercise their brutal prerogatives on any of the nonproducing parasites of society than to see that same press gang drag the hard-working, producing sons of workingmen and farmers from their humble homes to be driven into an army of conscripts and then possibly shanghaied across the ocean to fight alongside of other conscripts and be ordered around by some scion of an effete aristocracy who bought his commission and knows less about soldiering than even the members of the Wall Street bunch.

What conscriptive militarism will mean in the future, what peril there is in fastening such a hideous monstrosity upon our plain people is almost impossible to estimate, but I say to you that in passing this infamous bill democracy is following the footsteps of Frankenstein in the weird story of Mrs. Shelley, and is creating a monster that will destroy it. Let me quote here an editorial from the Irish World of April 28:

MILITARISM A MENACE TO DEMOCRACY.

Our Government has professedly entered the war to further the cause of democracy and to crush militarism. Yet at home the first fruits of our efforts are the restriction of free speech, free press, and free assembly, and the starting of a military system which may well make any European militarist turn green with envy. Can we then further the cause of democracy by undemocratic methods? Can we crush militarism by turning the Nation into an armed camp? Can we introduce universal peace by forcibly suppressing all who disagree with us? Is not this procedure like invoking Satan to cast out sin?

In the name of peace and democracy we are to enforce upon the country "selective conscription." Conscription has proven itself a curse to every country that has tried it. Viewed from the physical side, it has constituted an enormous and exhausting tax; from the mental side, it is a machine for crushing individual initiative and independent thinking a machine for turning free-born men into automatic servants of the ruling class; while from the moral side, it has entailed consequences unfit for discussion in this paper.

But if plain conscription be a curse, "selective conscription" is an utter abomination. "Selective conscription" is what David practiced when he sent Bathsheba's husband to the front, but the Bible does not use so fancy a name for his deed. When David's act is repeated a hundred thousandfold, does it become more respectable, more democratic?

The free States in the British Empire—Australia and Canada—have refused conscription. Germany, whose militarism we are to crush, has a law forbidding the sending of conscript soldiers beyond the seas. Our own free land is being driven to do not only what Australia and Canada have refused to do, but the very thing which military Germany has refused to do. And our "servants" do this to us in our name, without consulting us, without even giving us an opportunity to protest. What are we coming to?

It seems, indeed, full time that the American people should awake to the menace of militarism to democracy. The American people assuredly love freedom and treasure democracy. To safeguard them it is necessary to crush militarism at home. To crush militarism at home is not only the best service but the biggest service we can render to humanity in the campaign against militarism everywhere.

While we are listening to the advice of agents of the British monarchical empire on the draft system, suppose we turn for a moment to American history and see what that giant intellect, Daniel Webster, had to say on the same subject. I quote some extracts of a speech delivered in the House of Representatives when a draft bill was introduced in 1812:

That measures of this nature should be debated at all, in the councils of a free Government, is a cause of dismay. The question is nothing less than whether the most essential rights of personal liberty shall be surrendered and despotism embraced in its worst form.

Is this, sir, consistent with the character of a free government? Is this civil liberty? Is this the real character of our Constitution? No, sir; indeed it is not. The Constitution is libeled, foully libeled. The people of this country have not established for themselves such a fabric of despotism. They have not purchased at a vast expense of their own treasures and their own blood a Magna Charta to be slaves. Where is it written in the Constitution, in what article or section is it contained that you may take children from their parents and parents from their children and compel them to fight the battles of any war which the folly or the wickedness of government may engage in? Under what concealment has this power lain hidden which now for the first time comes forth, with a tremendous and baleful aspect, to trample down and destroy the dearest rights of personal liberty? Who will show me any constitutional injunction which makes it the duty of the American people to surrender everything valuable in life, and even life itself, not when the safety of their country and its liberties may demand the sacrifice, but whenever the purposes of an ambitious and mischievous Government may require it? Sir, I almost disdain to go to quotations and references to prove that such an abominable doctrine has no foundation in the Constitution of the country. It is enough to know that that instrument was intended as the basis of a free goverment and that the power contended for is incompatible with any notion of personal liberty. An attempt to maintain this doctrine upon the provisions of the Constitution is an exercise of perverse ingenuity to extract slavery from the substance of a free government. It is an attempt to show, by proof and argument, that we ourselves are subjects of despotism and that we have a right to chains and bondage, firmly secured to us and our children by the provisions of our Government. It has been the labor of other men at other times to mitigate and reform the powers of government by construction, to support the rights of personal security by every species of favorable and benign interpretation, and thus to infuse a free spirit into governments not friendly in their general structure and formation to public liberty.

The supporters of the measures before us act on the opposite principle. It is their task to raise arbitrary powers, by construction, out of a plain written charter of national liberty. It is their pleasing duty to free us of the delusion which we have fondly cherished that we are the subjects of a mild, free, and limited Government, and to demonstrate by a regular chain of premises and conclusions that Government possesses over us a power more tyrannical, more arbitrary, more dangerous, more allied to blood and murder, more full of every form of mischief, more productive of every sort of misery than has been exercised by any civilized government, with one exception, in modern times.

I would ask, sir, whether the supporters of these measures have well weighed the difficulties of their undertaking. Have they considered whether it will be found easy to execute laws which bear such marks of despotism on their front, and which will be so productive of every sort and degree of misery in their execution. For one, sir, I hesitate not to say that they can not be executed. No law professedly passed for the purpose of compelling a service in the Regular Army, not any law which under color of military draft shall compel men to serve in the Army, not for the emergencies mentioned in the Constitution, but for long periods and for the general objects of war, can be carried into effect. The operation of measures thus unconstitutional and illegal ought to be prevented by a resort to other measures which are both constitutional and legal. It will be the solemn duty of the State governments to protect their own authority over their own militia, and to interpose between their citizens and arbitrary power. These are among the objects for which the State governments exist, and their highest obligations bind them to the preservation of their own rights and the liberties of their people. I express the sentiments here, sir, because I shall express them to my constituents. Both they and myself live under a Constitution which teaches us that "the doctrine of nonresistance against arbitrary power and oppression is absurd, slavish, and destructive of the good and happiness of mankind." With the same earnestness with which I now exhort you to forbear from these measures, I shall exhort them to exercise their unquestionable right of providing for the security of their liberties.

In my opinion, sir, the sentiments of the free population of this country are greatly mistaken here. The Nation is not yet in a temper to submit to conscription. The people have too fresh and strong a feeling of the blessings of civil liberty to be willing thus to surrender it. You may talk to them as much as you please of the victory and glory to be obtained in the enemy's Provinces; they will hold those objects in light estimation, if the means be a forced military service. You may sing to them the song of Canada, conquest in all its variety, but they will not be charmed out of the remembrance of their substantial interests and true happiness. Similar pretenses, they know, are the graves in which the liberties of other nations have been buried and they will take warning.

Laws, sir, of this nature can create nothing but opposition. If you scatter them abroad like the fabled serpents' teeth, they will spring up into armed men. A military force can not be raised in this manner, but by the means of a military force. If the administration has found that it can not form an army without conscription, it will find, if it venture on these experiments, that it can not enforce conscription without an army. The Government was not constituted for such purposes. Framed in the spirit of liberty and in the love of peace, it has no powers which render it able to enforce such laws. The attempt, if we rashly make it, will fail and having already thrown away our peace, we may thereby throw away our government.

Reading this speech and studying carefully the Constitution, one is compelled to ask whether conscription does not violate the thirteenth amendment, and is it not an attempt to enslave labor?

Mr. Speaker, this bill ought to be buried so deep that it would be forgotten before it was even fully known. It was "conceived in iniquity and born in sin." It will fasten the burden of militarism on unborn generations. We claim that we are going into this war in the cause of democracy, and then we proceed to put democracy in our own country in steel handcuffs. We profess that we are fighting militaristic junkerdom in Germany, and then we hand over the bureaucratic militarists in our country power enough to outjunker the junkers; we declare that we are in deadly conflict with autocracy, and every day we pass some new measure emasculating democratic representative government and vesting powers in administrative branches of our Government that will soon make us out-Kaiser the Kaiser.

Oh, in God's name, let us call a halt before it is too late. Fight and fight to the death if need be for every American right; but let us fight like Americans for America, and always and only for—

Our flag, the one flag;
The flag for me and you,
Glorified all else beside
The Red, the White, and Blue.

That is the supreme issue, Mr. Speaker. We are in this war, according to the peoples' view, to protect American rights, and for no other purpose. If we must fight, we can and we will, but we will insist on fighting in the American fashion, and I know that we need neither advice nor instruction from any outside source. We have developed the greatest country in the world without needing the advice of any foreign country. We have successfully fought over a half dozen wars without needing the military advice of any foreign Governments or the expert knowledge of any officer trained in the atmosphere of European military snobbery, and we do not need that advice to-day. Nor do we need the counsel of any foreign diplomat to tell us what our policy should or should not be.

The diplomats of Europe do not and will not and probably can not see any public policy from an American point of view.

Democracy in any of the forms which we understand is absolutely unknown and unfathomable to the minds of the men in charge of State affairs abroad. When they yield any measure of self-government to the people, it is done only under the pressure of impending danger or to bribe and cajole unwilling peoples to do something they have no liking for.

I only need to indicate the one example of how the question of home rule in Ireland has been handled and is being handled to-day to prove that the generous, humanity-loving principles of democracy, as we understand them here, are unknown across the sea and the solemn twaddle about the fight for democracy that is handed out is, in the language of the street, just "plain bunk."

This country, and this country alone, can tell what democracy means and is. We, and we alone, are in a position to give advice and instruction. We did not call for help, and we do not need it. They did call for help, and we are giving it in money, in food, and now in men. If we are to pay the piper, we should call the tune; and if we are to do the fighting, we will be fully able to say just when, where, and how we propose to do it.

Let me in closing ask my countrymen to read carefully what the distinguished and universally beloved Speaker of this House had to say on the bill under consideration. If a patriotic American is to guide the destinies of this Nation during this crisis, the words of the Speaker will show him the way. The American volunteer forever! We know what he has been; we know what he will be and what he has done and will do, but we have no faith in the American conscript.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. AYRES,

OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, in all of the debate on this bill there seems to be a disposition on the part of the opponents of the selective-conscription plan to leave the impression on the country that the proponents of the plan were belittling the volunteers. Nothing can be further from the fact. All American citizens are proud of the volunteers of each and all of our wars. Too much can not be said—no; not even enough—of the patriotism of these noble men; but it is the system which permits one class of men to make the sacrifice by volunteering to fight the battles of the Nation when those who are just as able physically and financially, and in fact even more so, are permitted to stay behind as slackers; it permits those to volunteer who in thousands of cases leave behind dependents and helpless ones, while others who have no one depending on them stay at home and reap the benefits of the sacrifices made by the volunteers. It permits the industries of the country to be paralyzed, because those in all of the avocations of life answer to their country's call while thousands of able-bodied loafers stay behind. If a nation is worth living in it is worth fighting for, and one and all owe a universal obligation to the Nation, and all should be on an equality in such service.

I feel my inability to meet all of the objections urged against this measure, for I have no personal experience from a military point of view. Therefore, I feel that I am justified, in answering many of the objections made by some of my constituents, by quoting from those who speak from experience and who are high in authority. I have received some letters from constituents who claim the selective-conscription plan of raising an army violates the well-known tradition of this country, and that all our wars have been fought by the volunteers, and invariably they will start in by calling my attention to Washington, the Father of his Country. I am perfectly willing to take the judgment of Washington and have done so very largely in reaching my conclusion on this bill. Let me call attention to a letter written by him on the 17th day of October, 1777, almost at the beginning of the Revolutionary War, to Thomas Wharton, president of Pennsylvania, in which he said:

There is another matter which I beg leave to recommend to the serious consideration of the legislature of your State; that is, the adopting of some mode of completing and keeping up the quota of your continental regiments. Upon an average your battalions have never been above one-third full, and now many of them are far below even that. From the extravagant prices given to substitutes in the militia in the different States, it has become impossible to recruit more upon the bounty allowed by Congress. The New England States and Virginia have begun to adopt the mode of drafting, and, I am informed, they have succeeded very well. I am convinced that this will be found the only method of raising continental troops, and if the measure were to become general throughout the States it would not be deemed a hardship. I mention this matter to you at this time in the hope that you will as soon as possible fall upon this or some other mode to recruit your regiments in the course of this fall and winter; and as it is more than probable that our opposition will not end with this campaign, we ought to endeavor to have a respectable army in the field in the spring, before the enemy can receive further reinforcements from Europe.

Again in a letter dated at West Point on the 18th day of November, 1779, to the President of the Continental Congress, he said:

In the more early stages of the contest, when men might have enlisted for the war, no man, as my whole conduct and the uniform tenor of my letters will evince, was ever more opposed to short enlistments than I was, and while there remained a prospect of obtaining recruits upon a permanent footing in the first instance, as far as duty and a regard to my station would permit, I urged my sentiments in favor of it. But the prospect of keeping up an army by voluntary enlistments being changed, or at least standing on too precarious and uncertain a footing to depend on for the exigency of our affairs, I took the liberty in February, 1778, in a particular manner to lay before the Committee of Arrangement, then with the Army at Valley Forge, a plan for an annual draft as the surest and most certain, if not the only means left us, of maintaining the Army on a proper and respectable ground. And, more and more confirmed in propriety of this opinion by the intervention of a variety of circumstances unnecessary to detail, I again took the freedom of urging the plan to the committee of conference in January last; and, having reviewed it in every point of light and found it right, or at least the best that has occurred to me, I hope I shall be excused by Congress for offering it to them, and in time for carrying it into execution for the next year, if they should conceive it necessary for the States to complete their quotas of troops.

The plan I would propose is that each State be informed by Congress annually of the real deficiency of its troops, and called upon to make up, or such less specific number as Congress may think proper, by a draft; that the men drafted join the Army by the 1st of January and serve until the 1st of January in the succeeding year; that from the time the drafts join the Army the officers of the States from which they come be authorized and directed to use their endeavors to enlist them for the war, under the bounties to the officers themselves and the recruits granted by the act of the 23d of January last, namely, $10 to the officers for each recruit, and $200 to the recruits themselves; that all State, county, and town bounties to drafts, if practicable, be entirely abolished, on account of the uneasiness and disorders they create among the soldiers, the desertions they produce, and for other reasons which will readily occur; that on or before the 1st of October annually an abstract or return similar to the present one be transmitted to Congress to enable them to make their requisitions to each State with certainty and precision.

Again, I desire to call your attention to what he has to say regarding the expense of raising an army by the volunteer system and by militia. In this letter he states:

As we should not be able to keep the same body in the field during the whole campaign, we should a great part of the time have a double set of men to pay and feed.

And further he states:

The mode by draft is, I am persuaded, the only efficacious one to obtain men, and it appears to me certain that it is the only one to obtain them in time.

This is what Gen. Washington wrote on May 25, 1780, to Philip Schuyler, John Mathews, and Nathaniel Peabody, of the committee from Congress:

Unless the principal part of the force be composed of men regularly organized, and on the continuance of whose services we can rely, nothing decisive can be attempted. The militia are too precarious a dependence to justify such an attempt, where they form a material part of the plan. Militia can not have the necessary habits nor the consistency, either for an assault or a siege. In employing them essentially we should run a risk of being abandoned in the most critical moments. The expense and the consumption of provisions and stores, which we are bound by every motive to economize, will be very considerably increased. As we should not be able to keep the same body in the field during the whole campaign, we should a great part of the time have a double set of men to pay and feed, those in actual service and those on the march to relieve them or returning home when relieved. The operations of husbandry will suffer in proportion.

The mode by draft is, I am persuaded, the only efficacious one to obtain men. It appears to me certain that it is the only one to obtain them in time; nor can the period which you have appointed for bringing them into the field be delayed without defeating the object. I have little doubt that at any time, and much less at the present juncture, the powers of government exerted with confidence will be equal to the purpose of drafting. The hopes of the people, elevated by the prospects before them, will induce a cheerful compliance with this and all the other measures of vigor which have been recommended and which the exigency requires.

And again, in writing to his brother concerning the raising of troops by volunteers, he had this to say:

I observe what you say respecting voluntary enlistment, or rather your scheme of raising 2,000 volunteers, and I candidly own to you that I have no opinion of it. These measures only tend to burden the public with a number of officers without adding one jot to our strength, but greatly to confusion and disorder. If the several States would but fall on some vigorous measures to fill up their respective regiments, nothing more need be asked of them.

On August 20, 1780, this great general had seen all of the defects of short enlistments under the volunteer system and the want of a well-trained and disciplined army, and in a letter of the same date he said:

Had we formed a permanent army in the beginning * * * we never should have had to retreat with a handful of men across the Delaware in 1776, trembling for the fate of America; * * * we should not have been the greatest part of the war inferior to the enemy, indebted for our safety to their inactivity, enduring frequently the mortification of seeing inviting opportunities to ruin them pass unimproved for want of a force which the country was completely able to afford, and of seeing the country ravaged, our towns burnt, the inhabitants plundered, abused, murdered with impunity, from the same cause.

And again, on September 15, 1780, he stated that—

Regular troops are alone equal to the exigencies of modern war, as well for defense as offense, and whenever a substitute is attempted it must prove illusory and ruinous.

It seems to me that, in view of the foregoing, those who criticize the selective-conscription plan of raising an army and rely upon Washington as authority are much mistaken. I could give many other quotations from the Father of our Country sustaining the plan of raising an army by universal draft or conscription; and it seems to me that the foregoing should be sufficient, but as further evidence of Washington's views as to universal conscription I desire to call attention to the law that was passed in 1792 at the beginning of the Republic, under his administration, which provides for universal and even compulsory military servce for every citizen between 18 and 45 years of age, which is as follows:

That each and every free, able-bodied, white male citizen of the respective States, resident therein, who is or shall be of the age of 18 years and under the age of 45 years (except as hereinafter excepted) shall severally and respectively be enrolled in the militia by the captain or commanding officer of the company within whose bounds such citizen shall reside, and that within 12 months after the passing of this act. And it shall at all times hereafter be the duty of every such captain or commanding officer of a company to enroll every such citizen, as aforesaid, and also those who shall, from time to time, arrive at the age of 18 years, or, being the age of 18 years and under the age of 45 years (except as before excepted), shall come to reside within his bounds; and shall without delay notify such citizen of the said enrollment by a proper noncommissioned officer of the company by whom such notice may be proved. That every citizen so enrolled and notified shall within six months thereafter provide himself with a good musket or firelock, a sufficient bayonet and belt, two spare flints, and a knapsack, a pouch, with a box therein to contain not less than 24 cartridges suited to the bore of his musket or firelock, each cartridge to contain a proper quantity of powder and ball, or with a good rifle, knapsack, shot pouch, and powder horn, 20 balls suited to the bore of his rifle, and a quarter of a pound of powder, and shall appear so armed, accoutered, and provided when called out to exercise or into the service, except that when called out on company days' exercise only he may appear without a knapsack.

What consternation there would be to-day among some of our citizens if such a law should be advocated, and especially if compelled to arm and equip themselves as was provided in this law!

Frequently I am told in letters that the bill under consideration is contrary to the Declaration of Independence. I wish to call your attention to what Thomas Jefferson, the author of tha. great document, had to say in a letter to Gen. Kosciusko on February 26, 1810, in explanation of his message to Congress:

Two measures have not been adopted which I pressed on Congress repeatedly at their meetings. The one to settle the whole ungranted territory of Orleans by donations of land to able-bodied young men, to be engaged and carried there at the public expense, who would constitute a force always ready on the spot to defend New Orleans. The other was to class the militia according to the years of their birth, and make all those from 20 to 25 liable to be trained and called into service at a moment's warning. This would have given us a force of 300,000 young men, prepared by proper training, for service in any part of the United States, while those who had passed through that period would remain at home, liable to be used in their own or adjacent States. These two measures would have completed what I deemed necessary for the entire security of our country. They would have given me, on my retirement from the Government of the Nation, the consolatory reflection that, having found, when I was called to it, not a single seaport town in a condition to repel a levy of contribution by a single privateer or pirate, I had left every harbor so prepared by works and gunboats as to be in a reasonable state of security against any probable attack; the territory of Orleans acquired and planted with an internal force sufficient for its protection; and the whole territory of the United States organized by such a classification of its male force as would give it the benefit of all its young population for active service, and that of middle and advanced age for stationary defense. But these measures will, I hope, be completed by my successor, who, to the purest principles of republican patriotism, adds a wisdom and foresight second to no man on earth.

Also, I desire to call your attention to a letter written by this great statesman to one J. W. Eppes:

I think the truth must now be obvious, that our people are too happy at home to enter into regular service and that we can not be defended but by making every citizen a soldier, as the Greeks and Romans, who had no standing army; and that in doing this, all must be marshaled, classed by their ages, and every service ascribed to its competent class.

In Jefferson's message to Congress he was continually calling attention to the condition of the country and to the attitude of the people, which was very similar to the attitude of the people of to-day, and many quotations could be produced from this great champion of the rights of the American people and freedom of the Nation which it seems should convince all good, red-blooded Americans that all owe an obligation to the Republic in time of peace, and most emphatically an universal obligation in time of war. I have quoted very extensively from the creators of this Nation. Now, let me call your attention to that great and grand statesman known as the savior of our country, the immortal Lincoln. No one to-day, I apprehend, will question his loyalty, his patriotism, his wisdom, and feeling for the American people as a statesman. He advocated universal conscription for the reason, as he saw it from experience, and, as he said, for expediency, and further that it was the fairest and most equitable way of raising an army. Amongst other things, he had the following to say:

It is at all times proper that misunderstanding between the public and the public servant should be avoided; and this is far more important now than in times of peace and tranquillity. I therefore address you without searching for a precedent upon which to do so. Some of you are sincerely devoted to the republican institutions and territorial integrity of our country and yet are opposed to what is called the draft, or conscription.

At the beginning of the war, and ever since, a variety of motives, pressing, some in one direction and some in the other, would be presented to the mind of each man physically fit for a soldier, upon the combined effect of which motives he would, or would not, voluntarily enter the service. Among these motives would be patriotism, political bias, ambition, personal courage, love of adventure, want of employment, and convenience, or the opposite of some of these. We already have, and have had, in the service, as appears, substantially all that can be obtained upon this voluntary weighing of motives. And yet we must somehow obtain more or relinquish the original object of the contest, together with all the blood and treasure already expended in the effort to secure it. To meet this necessity the law for the draft has been enacted. You who do not wish to be soldiers do not like this law. This is natural; nor does it imply want of patriotism. Nothing can be so just and necessary as to make us like it if it is disagreeable to us. We are prone, too, to find false arguments with which to excuse ourselves for opposing such disagreeable things. In this case, those who desire the rebellion to succeed, and others who seek reward in a different way, are very active in accommodating us with this class of arguments. * * *

The republican institutions and territorial integrity of our country can not be maintained without the further raising and supporting of armies. There can be no army without men. Men can be had only voluntarily or involuntarily. We have ceased to obtain them voluntarily, and to obtain them involuntarily is the draft—the conscription. If you dispute this fact and declare that men can still be had voluntarily in sufficient numbers, prove the assertion by yourselves volunteering in such numbers, and I shall gladly give up the draft. Or if not a sufficient number, but any one of you will volunteer, he for his single self will escape all the horrors of the draft, and will thereby do only what each one of at least a million of his manly brethren have already done. Their toil and blood have been given as much for you as for themselves Shall it all be lost rather than that you, too, will bear your part?

I do not say that all who would avoid serving in the war are unpatriotic; but I do think every patriot should willingly take his chance under a law, made with great care, in order to secure entire fairness. This law was considered, discussed, modified, and amended by Congress at great length, and with much labor, and was finally passed by both branches with a near approach to unanimity. At last it may not be exactly such as any one man out of Congress, or even in Congress, would have made it. It has been said, and I believe truly, that the Constitution itself is not altogether such as any one of its framers would have preferred. It was the joint work of all, and certainly the better that it was so. * * *

The principle of draft, which simply is involuntary or enforced service, is not new. It has been practiced in all ages of the world. It was well known to the framers of our Constitution as one of the modes of raising armies at the time they placed in that instrument the provision that "the Congress shall have power to raise and support armies." It had been used just before in establishing our independence, and it was also used under the Constitution in 1812. Wherein is the peculiar hardship now? Shall we shrink from the necessary means to maintain our free Government which our grandfathers employed to establish it and our own fathers have already employed once to maintain it? Are we degenerate? Has the manhood of our race run out?

Again, a law may be both constitutional and expedient, and yet may be administered in an unjust and unfair way. This law belongs to a class, which class is composed of those laws whose object is to distribute burdens or benefits on the principle of equality. No one of these laws can ever be practically administered with that exactness which can be conceived of in the mind. A tax law, the principle of which is that each owner shall pay in proportion to the value of his property, will be a dead letter if no one can be compelled to pay until it can be shown that every other one will pay in precisely the same proportion, according to value; nay, even it will be a dead letter if no one can be compelled to pay until it is certain that every other one will pay at all—even in unequal proportion. Again, the United States House of Representatives is constituted on the principle that each Member is sent by the same number of people that each other is sent by; and yet, in practice, no two of the whole number, much less the whole number, are ever sent by precisely the same number of constituents. The districts can not be made precisely equal in population at first, and if they could they would become unequal in a single day, and much more so in the 10 years which the districts, once made, are to continue. They can not be remodeled every day, nor without too much expense and labor, even every year.

This sort of difficulty applies in full force to the practical administration of the draft law. In fact, the difficulty is greater in the case of the draft law. First, it starts with all the inequality of the congressional districts; but these are based on entire population, while the draft is based upon those only who are fit for soldiers, and such may not bear the same proportion to the whole in one district that they do in another. Again, the facts must be ascertained and credit given for the unequal numbers of soldiers which have already gone from the several districts. In all of these points errors will occur in spite of the utmost fidelity. The Government is bound to administer the law with such an approach to exactness as is usual in analogous cases and as entire good faith and fidelity will reach. If so great departures as to be inconsistent with such good faith and fidelity, or great departures occurring in any way, be pointed out, they shall be corrected; and any agent shown to have caused such departures intentionally shall be dismissed.

With these views and on these principles I feel bound to tell you it is my purpose to see the draft law faithfully executed.

I should think this would be sufficient to show how this great statesman viewed this troublesome question.

It is said by historians that one of the greatest, if not the greatest, military genius of this country was Gen. Grant. At least I should think that no layman of to-day would question his ability as a warrior, and his ideas should have some weight from a military viewpoint. In his memoirs he had the following to say relative to universal conscription or draft adopted by the Southern Confederacy:

The cause was popular and was enthusiastically supported by the young men. The conscription took all of them.

He was referring to the universal draft or conscription that was adopted by the Southern Confederacy as early as 1862, and, furthermore, Gen. Grant said:

Before the war was over further conscriptions took those between 14 and 18 years of age as junior reserves and those between 45 and 60 as senior reserves.

I wish to quote further from this great general, as recorded in his memoirs on page 547:

To maintain peace in the future it is necessary to be prepared for war. There can scarcely be a possible chance of a conflict such as the last one occurring among our own people again; but, growing as we are in population, wealth, and military power, we may become the envy of nations which led us in all these particulars only a few years ago; and unless we are prepared for it we may be in danger of a combined movement being some day made to crush us out. Now, scarcely 20 years after the war, we seem to have forgotten the lessons it taught and are going on as if in the greatest security, without the power to resist an invasion by the fleets of fourth-rate European powers for a time until we could prepare for them.

It seems to me that this, to say the least, is very, very prophetic. He predicted years ago what our condition as a nation would be in the year 1917. We have moved along all through these years as though nothing would happen or could happen until at last, by the force of necessity, we have awakened to a realization of our situation. At least, some have, but I am sorry to say a great many have not. I fear it would take an actual invasion to cause some to realize the condition of our country to-day.

After all, when sentiment is eliminated, the question is: Which is the most efficient system of raising an army to fight the battles of this Republic, and the fairest and most equitable way to raise it, taking into consideration, first, the welfare of the Nation, and, second, the welfare of the people? It seems to me it needs no more convincing proof than already produced as to the efficient way to raise an army. As to the second proposition—the fairest and most equitable way—I wish to again quote from the lamented Lincoln a letter written by him on November 21, 1864, from the Executive Mansion to a mother in Boston:

DEAR MADAM: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the adjutant general of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I can not refrain from tendering you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully, A. LINCOLN.

I want to ask the most enthusiastic supporter of the volunteer system, Was it fair and just for this mother to make such a sacrifice for the Nation while others, no doubt, within the same block never made any sacrifice, although more able to do so? Under the system of volunteering for such service the slacker is permitted to stay at home. Under the selective-conscription plan advocated by the administration it would not be possible for such a sacrifice to be made by one individual. Under this plan the industries of the Nation would not be paralyzed, because the Government would have the right and power to protect its industries and compel the nonproducer and the loafer to bear his part of the burdens of government in such a crisis. No stigma is attached to any conscripted man, because the one chosen is on an equality with all others chosen for the same duty. I repeat, if the Republic is good enough to live in, every citizen should be proud of an opportunity to answer the summons in any capacity when called on to serve.

OF

HON. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 26, 1917.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to print the following resolutions from some of the prominent clubs and organizations of Chicago:

UNION LEAGUE CLUB,
Chicago, March 30, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At its annual meeting, held in the clubhouse on March 27, 1917, the Union League Club, of Chicago, stated its stand on the present crisis and the manner of meeting it in the following resolution:

"Whereas, with a desire to avoid armed conflict, the Government of the United States has for many months patiently endeavored by diplomatic negotiations to protect its citizens in their lives and property from intolerable attacks by Germany, and to secure trustworthy promise of security for the future, and all such efforts have failed, so that against its will this Nation is now on the verge of war; and

"Whereas the time has come when this country must defend its rights and vindicate its honor decisively and by all means necessary to those ends; and

"Whereas the present crisis shows that the United States must be prepared at all times to defend itself and to protect the rights of its citizens; and

"Whereas, subject only to such conditions as Congress may prescribe, all able-bodied men between 18 and 45 years of age are liable under Federal law to perform military duty in the service of the United States; and

"Whereas a system of universal military training will not only prepare the citizen for service in war, but will develop in him a sense of democracy, of discipline, and of responsibility to duty, and will add a dignity to the defensive military service of the country, which is most justly its due: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Union League Club, of Chicago, places itself on record as supporting the President of the United States in severing of diplomatic relations with Germany, and in all efforts made and to be made by him, even to the extent of war, to protect American lives and property and defend our national rights; and calls upon Congress to give to the President the fullest support, and further places itself on record as favoring the principles of universal military service in this emergency and for the future defense of the Nation; and also calls upon Congress to provide by the law for universal and compulsory military training and service in the United States, and to enact all laws that may be necessary to the end that the Government of the United States may prepare in the fullest measure to uphold the dignity and honor of this country."

Very truly, yours, HOWARD G. HETZLER, President.

COMPULSORY MILITARY TRAINING AND SERVICE.

Resolutions adopted by Hamilton Club, of Chicago, March 30, 1917.

Whereas the United States as a world power is now confronted with serious international questions and may be required at any time to defend its borders, protect the rights of its citizens upon the land and upon the sea, and to uphold with honor the cause of humanity in the councils of the nations; and

Whereas manifest, efficient, available power in a free people, used only in the cause of justice, right, and humanity, is a guaranty of the respect, support, and confidence of the world and a mighty influence for enduring peace; and

Whereas under Federal law all able-bodied men between the ages of 18 and 45 are liable for military service and may be called upon at any time for such service; and

Whereas to organize an army of untrained men in an emergency and to put them in the field unprepared is improvident and unfair to the men and the Nation and may result in irreparable disaster to the country; and

Whereas a proper system of universal military training will prepare men alike for war or peace and, properly administered, will be a benefit physically, mentally, and morally and create in the Nation an enduring sense of national spirit, of discipline, and respect for law and responsibility to duty: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Hamilton Club, of Chicago, subscribes to and indorses the principle of compulsory universal military training and service as an immediate necessity and a guaranty of future security, and urges the President and Congress of the United States to provide without delay for such training and service, and calls upon our Senators and Representatives from the State of Illinois to use their individual and united efforts to secure the enactment of such legislation; and we pledge our undivided and loyal support to the President and Government of the United States in upholding the honor of the Nation and protecting its citizens in their lives and property and in all of their just and lawful rights; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States and to each Member of the Congress.

Resolution of the Illinois Commandery Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War.

Whereas we, the members of the Illinois Commandery Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War, are believers in general military training and in the personal and national efficiency which would result therefrom: Now, therefore be it

Resolved, That at a general meeting of the members of said society held on March 24, 1917, the approval of the membership be; and it is hereby, given to the measure which has been pending in Congress and known as the General Staff bill. And be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the United States Senators from Illinois and to the Members from said State in the National House of Representatives.

This is to certify that the foregoing resolutions were adopted at a general meeting of the Illinois Commandery Naval and Military Order of the Spanish-American War at Chicago on March 24, 1917.

Resolutions adopted at a patriotic meeting of citizens held at the Auditorium Theater, Chicago, Ill., March 31, 1917, under the direction of the National Security League.

Whereas the Nation is on the verge of war; and

Whereas American ships have been sunk on the high seas by the submarines of the Imperial German Government with the loss of American lives in violation of specific and solemn treaty obligations and in violation of international law: Therefore we, citizens of Chicago, in mass meeting assembled, "with malice toward none, with charity for all, but with firmness in the right," do hereby

Resolve—

First. That as loyal Americans, without regard to political party lines, we approve the action of the President of the United States in severing diplomatic relations with the German Empire.

Second. That we pledge our hearty support to the Government in every act to protect the safety of our citizens, the honor of our Nation, and the cause of freedom and democracy throughout the world.

Third. That we urge Congress immediately to enact a law providing for universal obligatory military training and service as the only efficient, just, and democratic method of national defense.

Fourth. That we urge Congress without delay to equip our existing troops and all troops to be raised with the most modern appliances of war, so that the equipment and effectiveness of our Army and Navy shall be second to none.

Fifth. That if war occurs we urge the Government of the United States to conduct it with all the power of the Nation.

Sixth. That a committee, of which the presiding officer of this meeting shall be a member, be appointed by the Chair to place these resolutions before the President of the United States and the proper committees of Congress and to urge the adoption of the policies declared therein.

THE CHICAGO REAL ESTATE BOARD,
Chicago, April 4, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: The Chicago Real Estate Board at its regular monthly meeting, held in the assembly rooms, Wednesday, April 4, 1917, unanimously passed the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That we are heartily in favor of an act providing for compulsory universal military service which shall include all male citizens of a prescribed military age capable of bearing arms, which also shall provide definite organized, trained, and equipped military units sufficient in strength and numbers for the present and the future. In this hour of our country's trial we know all American citizens will present an unbroken front to the enemy of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, to the chairmen of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and the Representatives of the State of Illinois."

Respectfully submitted.

BOND MEN'S CLUB OF CHICAGO,
Chicago, March 31, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As secretary of the Bond Men's Club of Chicago, I have been instructed to send you the inclosed copy of a resolution passed by this club at its meeting Thursday, March 29, 1917.

Trusting this matter will have your thoughtful consideration, I am,
Yours, very truly,

CUTHBERT C. ADAMS, Secretary.

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has been called together in extraordinary session for the purpose of declaring war or a state of war against a foreign nation from whose illegal actions this country has long and too patiently suffered; and

Whereas this country is admittedly unprepared to wage effective war, a condition that would be disastrous should we be attacked by an enemy of even moderate strength; and

Whereas there is a large number of groups of various classes who are opposed to adequate preparedness, and these groups are so organized as to present effective objections to Congress and the administration, and while those in favor of preparedness and universal service are doubtless numerically as great, they are represented by few organizations, and but little effective and organized work has been done by preparedness sympathizers; and

Whereas the opportunity for securing adequate legislation covering universal service for preparedness is, under stress of the present crisis, better than any yet presented: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sentiment of the Bond Men's Club of Chicago that universal military service is not only desirable but essential, and that its members will individually and as an organization do all in their power to persuade Congress to pass legislation designed to put such a policy into effect at the earliest possible moment.

Resolved, That this organization expresses its loyalty to the Government of the United States in the present crisis and its desire to do all in its power to assist and support it; further

Resolved, That the Bond Men's Club of Chicago, through its officers, shall draft an expression of its views as above outlined and forward to each of the Senators from Illinois at Washington and to each of the Representatives in Congress from the Chicago district, and to the Representatives at large of the State, and that each member of the club be requested to wire and write both Senators and the Congressman of his district asking them to use every endeavor and all speed in obtaining universal military service and adequate preparedness.

CHICAGO, April 7, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSS,
Representative Tenth Illinois District, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Please find herewith a certified copy of the resolutions adopted by the Chicago Society of Illinois College at its annual meeting held April 6, 1917.

Respectfully,

E. D. JACKSON,
Secretary.

At the annual meeting of the Chicago Society of Illinois College, composed of alumni and former students of Illinois College, of Jacksonville, Ill., held at the University Club, Chicago, Ill., on the evening of April 6, 1917, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we, the members of the Chicago Society of Illinois College, do hereby record our approval of the action of the President and the Congress of the United States in proclaiming a state of war with the Imperial German Government, and do hereby pledge to the President of the United States our loyal support for the prosecution of this war of democracy against autocracy to a successful, and we hope an early, conclusion; and be it further

"Resolved, That we urge upon the President and the Congress of the United States our profound belief in the necessity for the immediate adoption of a permanent plan of universal and compulsory military training and service; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of this society be instructed to send certified copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the Senators and the Congressmen at large from Illinois, and the Congressmen from the Chicago districts, and to the president of Illinois College."

I hereby certify that the above is a true copy from the minutes of said meeting.

Resolutions Adopted by the Irish Nationalists.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, May 2, 1917.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a statement and resolutions adopted by the Irish Nationalists, pledging their ardent support to our country in the conflict which it has now entered.

The statement and resolutions are as follows:

IRISH NATIONALIST COMMITTEE,
Buffalo, N. Y., April 9, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith find resolutions unanimously adopted at a mass meeting held at the Majestic Theater, Buffalo, N. Y., Sunday evening, April 8, to commemorate the first anniversary of the Irish (Easter week) rebellion of 1916, and as a memorial for those who were executed. The attendance was upward of 2,000.

The resolutions contain a pledge of ardent support to our country in the terrific conflict upon which it has now entered, and state that if England—which will now be so greatly benefited by our participation in the war—is sincere in her profession that she is fighting for the "integrity of small nations" and "the liberties of suppressed peoples," she will now immediately give evidence of her good faith by declaring Ireland a free and independent nation.

They also contain a request that the Congress demand of England that she now immediately declare Ireland's independence. This we emphasize with parallel black lines. The psychological effect the making of such a request on England by this country will have upon the American soldiers of Irish birth or extraction is at once apparent.

Sincerely hoping that you will see the justice of it and that you will do everything you can to have the Congress take favorable action, we have the honor to remain,

With assurances of the highest regard and esteem,

Yours, very sincerely,

W. P. KILCAWLEY, Chairman.
W. O. SHIELDS, Secretary.

We, the Irish Nationalists, of Buffalo, N. Y., in memorial meeting assembled on this first anniversary of the Irish rebellion of 1916, renew our fealty to the ideals and the principles so gloriously exemplified in the gallant deeds and sacrificial deaths of the patriots engaged in that rebellion.

Their heroic efforts have reawakened the soul of Ireland, and were crowned with every element of success short of complete independence; the spirit they created has placed the achievement of their ultimate aim within the realm of present possibility.

We indorse the principles of liberty, equality, and justice set forth in the proclamation of the Irish Republic issued over the signature of Padraic H. Pearse and his compatriots, and the purposes they sought to attain.

Interested above all worldly things in the honor and welfare of the United States, and realizing that those authorized to act under our Constitution have declared that a state of war exists, we proclaim it to be the duty of all men and women of Irish blood to rally to the support of our country, and with all the loyalty and ardor of our race to maintain its rights, preserve its ideals, and advance its interests.

Our country now needs and should have the best that can be given her by all her sons and daughters, and appreciating the real seriousness of the vast struggle into which we have entered we pledge our best efforts to knit together and solidify all of the people of this country so that we may present a united front to the world.

To us war and conflict are nothing new; no fight for America has ever missed the men of our blood, from the Revolution to the Spanish War, and no men of any race have shed their blood more freely and even generously than we. So it has always been; so will it ever be in every conflict to which the Government of this country commits us; so it is to-day.

This terrific struggle into which we have entered has been proclaimed by England to be a contest "for the integrity of small nations" and for "the liberties of oppressed peoples." Our President has declared that we are entering the war because "the right is more precious than peace, and we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy * * * for the rights and liberties of small nations."

We acknowledge the sincerity of our own declaration, and we declare that if England is sincere in hers she should now, immediately, in all justice, show her good faith by declaring Ireland to be a free and independent nation.

On July 28, 1776, at the very inception of the conflict between the fathers of this Republic and England, the Continental Congress addressed "An appeal to the people of Ireland," requesting their assistance and paying tribute in these words to the men of Irish birth active in the cause of liberty in America:

"Your parliament has done us no wrong. You have ever been friendly to the rights of mankind, and we acknowledge with pleasure and gratitude that your nation has produced patriots who have nobly distinguished themselves in the cause of humanity and America."

And now we Americans of Irish birth or extraction, numbering to-day upward of one-fifth of the population of this country, deem it fitting and proper at this time—when we are called upon to make tremendous sacrifice of life and property whereby England will be greatly and directly benefited—to petition our President and our Congress that the English Government be immediately requested to acknowledge at once the independence of Ireland.

Ireland is a distinct and separate nation, with all the attributes of nationhood, geographically, ethnically, and in the political and military capacity of her people. She has fought for her independence for over 700 years, and has never relinquished her right. Seventy years ago Ireland had a population of 8,500,000, which is now reduced to a little over 4,000,000, although her magnificent natural resources render her capable of supporting a population of 25,000,000. This alone proves the case against England.

Our country freed Cuba and removed a blot from the Western Hemishere; she now has the opportunity of freeing Ireland and setting up a sister Republic in Western Europe as a beacon light of American liberty for the people of the Old World. That opportunity, we declare, should be availed of.

Resolved, That a synopsis of these resolutions be immediately telegraphed to the President, the Presiding Officer of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the members of the Cabinet, the Senators of the United States, and the Members of Congress; the governor, the executive officers, and the Senators of the State of New York; the members of assembly from the county of Erie; the mayor and the members of the council of this city.

Resolutions Adopted By the Pattern Makers' Association of Cleveland, Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,
OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 2, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave to extend remarks, I desire to insert in the RECORD a copy of resolutions adopted by the Pattern Makers' Association of Cleveland, Ohio.

The resolutions are as follows:

"Whereas the United States is at war with Germany; and
"Whereas immense war appropriations must be made immediately to supply the Government with funds necessary to carry on the war; and
"Whereas it is of paramount importance in this crisis that the financial burden of the war should be distributed among the citizens of the United States in accordance with their ability to bear it; and
"Whereas, in the interest of national unity and a spirit of harmonious cooperation between all classes, it is necessary that every citizen should know that the cost of the war will be paid promptly and not remain as a future burden upon those who fought, and their children: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That all bonds, certificates of indebtedness, and other obligations issued by the Government for war purposes shall be paid by a tax to be levied on all net incomes in excess of $2,000 (for unmarried persons) and in excess of $3,000 (for married persons), beginning at 2 per cent and increasing on a sliding scale to a point which will permit of no individual retaining an annual net income in excess of $100,000, such war tax to continue until said bonds, certificates of indebtedness, and other obligations issued for war purposes are paid; and be it further

"Resolved, That all war supplies or war service, including transportation, shall be furnished to the Government at a reasonable profit, to be fixed by Congress; that Congress shall enact legislation preventing the sale of necessaries of life during the war at excessive profits; and that intentional failure to supply the Government with correct figures as to income or other profits on such sales and service, and that furnishing the Government with defective war supplies shall be a felony punishable by imprisonment."

This resolution was adopted unanimously by the Pattern Makers' Association of Cleveland and vicinity.

Food Supply.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. THOMAS L. RUBEY,
OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 1, 1917.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous consent given me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I desire to say that the question of the food supply of the country has impressed itself upon me as one, not only of the greatest importance, but one which should be given immediate consideration by Congress. The "man behind the plow" is the important factor in this world-wide war. He must furnish the food, not only for our own armies and for our own people, but he must furnish a large part of the food to supply the armies and peoples of England and France.

Almost immediately upon the convening of Congress I began to study and investigate this subject. I soon realized that it was a problem not only for our Nation as a whole, but that it was one which should also be taken up by each individual State, where it could be studied at closer range. I felt that my own State should be among the first to take the lead in a great State-wide movement to encourage agriculture and conserve the food supply. On April 10 last I sent to the governor of Missouri the following telegram:

GOV. FRED D. GARDNER,
Jefferson City, Mo.:

The question of furnishing food for Army and Navy, supplying needs of a hundred million people at home, and having surplus to send abroad is greatest problem confronting us. This is the seedtime. Now is the time to take definite action encouraging our farmers to exert their utmost. Reports indicate difficulty in obtaining seed on account of scarcity and high cost. This is especially true of potatoes. Would suggest as our executive you get in touch, through the press or otherwise, with some one in every county in Missouri, find out what conditions are, and call upon the bankers and moneyed people everywhere to furnish money to buy seed and to remedy bad conditions where they exist. Urge every farmer in Missouri to do his utmost. Thus he will benefit not only himself but render a valuable service to his country. This plan has already been tried by several governors with good results. My extreme interest in this important phase of the present situation prompts me in making these suggestions.

THOS. L. RUBEY.

The next day I received from our governor the following reply:

Hon. THOMAS L. RUBEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram contains many valuable suggestions and I thank you for same. Am now fixing to carry them with others into effect in our State.

FREDERICK D. GARDNER, Governor.

Gov. Gardner of my State, with that promptness and patriotic zeal which has always characterized him, on April 12 issued to the people of his State the following proclamation:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the United States is now at war with a foreign enemy; and

Whereas it is conceded that the greatest problem confronting the United States will be the question of food supplies for both Army and Nation:

Therefore, as governor of this State, I call upon the bankers and those who have money to loan to perfect arrangements whereby every pair of willing hands in the State of Missouri may be furnished money on long time at low rate of interest, for the purpose of securing seeds, machinery, and teams in order that crops may be planted and harvested. It is imperative that not only the usual acreage be cultivated but that every vacant town and city lot be utilized, as well as railroad rights of way and hundreds of thousands of other available acres within the borders of our State.

The crisis confronting our State and Nation is the most critical in our history. It is time for every loyal and patriotic Missourian to make some sacrifice. It is within the power of the people of this State, if sufficient funds are forthcoming and sufficient encouragement is given to those who are willing to till the soil, to not only feed our own people during the strenuous days which confront us but millions of our fellow men as well.

I now call upon the mayor and chief executive of every village, town, and city in this State, from the largest to the smallest, also all bankers and representatives from all commercial bodies, as well as representatives of agricultural associations and clubs, to meet with me in conference with the State board of agriculture at Jefferson City April 23, 1917, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the new capitol building, for the purpose of carrying into effect the spirit of this proclamation.

Every newspaper in Missouri is hereby requested to publish this proclamation.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Missouri.

Done at the city of Jefferson, this 12th day of April, A. D. 1917.

FREDERICK D. GARDNER.

By the governor:

JOHN L. SULLIVAN,
Secretary of State.

As a result of that proclamation there assembled at Jefferson City, the capital of my State, on April 23, 1917, hundreds of citizens. They came from every county. Great interest was manifested in this movement. Men were there from every walk of life—farmers, merchants, bankers, representatives of commercial clubs, representatives of farm organizations. The conference was held in our splendid new capitol building, where the delegates met with the governor and the members of the State board of agriculture. At this meeting the following resolutions were adopted:

MISSOURI FOOD CONFERENCE RESOLUTIONS.

Herewith are the resolutions adopted at the Missouri State conference on the food situation, called by Gov. Frederick D. Gardner to meet with the State board of agriculture in Jefferson City on April 23, 1917, on which occasion were present several hundred citizens from all over Missouri. The resolutions follow:

"In the war upon which America has entered the agriculture of this country will be put to the supreme test. Already the nations of the world which are engaged in the great struggle may be facing a world-wide famine. The success or failure in this war will be determined by the ultimate food supply.

"The world's food reserves are low. The outlook for even a normal wheat crop this year is unfavorable. In 1915 America produced 10 bushels of wheat per capita; in 1916, 6 bushels, consuming 6½ at home and exporting 2½ bushels. The wheat estimates for 1917 are only 63 per cent of a normal crop, and the latest reports are that a similar condition exists throughout the world. In Missouri the estimated production is only 59 per cent of normal. The number of cattle and hogs now on feed in this State is but 55 per cent of the number on feed one year ago.

GARDENS.

"We urge the cultivation of every available lot or plot of ground, and its use for the growing of vegetables and garden truck. We approve the enlistment of the public schools and public-school pupils for this purpose. We commend the organization of boys and girls into garden, canning, and poultry clubs under the joint direction of the extension service of the College of Agriculture and the public-school authorities. We join in urging the planting of beans, potatoes, tomatoes, chard, sweet potatoes, beets, and such other vegetables as will materially add to the food elements necessary to human life.

UNIVERSAL SERVICE.

"We approve the principle of universal selective service that the Army and Navy may have men, the industries workers, and the farms the labor necessary for maximum production, and to that end this conference strongly indorses the administration bill providing for a 'selective draft, universal military service,' and we urgently request our Senators and Representatives in the National Congress to use their best efforts and cast their vote in behalf of this measure, and the secretary is instructed to send a copy of this resolution to each Member of the Missouri delegation in the National Congress.

FEDERAL REGULATION.

"We urge the adoption by Congress of the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture which would grant to him, under proper restrictions and at the proper time, the power to fix minimum and maximum prices of foodstuffs, to regulate all agencies of distribution, and to prohibit speculations in food products. We especially approve of Secretary Houston's recommendation for an appropriation by Congress of $25,000,000 for making a food survey, increasing food production, enlargement of the cooperative demonstration forces, and such other activities as may be deemed necessary for the national defense.

PREVENT WASTE.

"We appeal to all the people of Missouri to eliminate every source of waste in the home, that while every effort is being made to increase production so as to prevent suffering no foodstuffs shall be uselessly taken from the world's supply. (To this paragraph of the resolution committee's report the following 55 words were added by motion from the floor:) And to that end we are in hearty sympathy and full accord with every movement and effort of the Federal authorities to place an effective ban on the use of corn and all other foodstuffs for the manufacture of intoxicating drinks during the continuation of the present war in which the United States is engaged.

COOPERATION.

"Every organization and individual in Missouri is invited to lend assistance to the agencies already at work, rather than to form new bodies having the same purposes in view. All present agencies should be subject to the general supervision of the Missouri Council of Defense. The most effective work can be accomplished by the active cooperation of local bankers, commercial clubs, and other bodies with the State Council of Defense and with county boys' and girls' clubs, public schools, county farm bureaus, or other agencies which it may suggest or approve. We suggest the formation of local companies of able-bodied boys under military age that, at the call of the State Council of Defense, they may be ready for semimilitary assignment to such work as may be necessary to secure maximum production of food products.

THE FARMER AT WORK.

"The Missouri farmer has already demonstrated his patriotism by exerting unusual effort to help meet the food and feed emergency and is deserving of the active cooperation of all the financial and commercial interests of the State.

"It is the patriotic duty of all commercial organizations to assist all worthy farmers in the State who may need credit for planting and cultivating their crops. And the bankers serving on the resolution committee, backed by 50 of the bankers present here to-day, hereby give the governor assurance that the bankers of the State in general, and of each county in particular, are able, willing, and ready to cooperate in extending to all needy and worthy applicants such material assistance and credit as may be necessary to meet local conditions.

THE FARMERS' OPPORTUNITY.

"This is a time of great responsibility and brings with it the greatest opportunity that has ever been presented to the farmers of this country. The farmer will be both wise and patriotic if he exerts every energy toward the maximum production of food crops.

"Maximum production must come in two ways—first, by widely extending the acreage planted to food crops. This is the year to increase largely the areas planted to corn, wheat, potatoes, and all vegetables. Second, by growing a maximum crop on every acre. Apply fertilizers. Plant tested seed of known productiveness. Cultivate with unusual thoroughness.

"Build more silos. An acre of corn preserved in a silo will produce 25 per cent more beef, pork, or mutton than when harvested by the ordinary method.

"Grow staple crops. This is no time to experiment with unusual and untried crops.

"Plant all waste ground to some profitable crops which may be used for food for man or animal. Increase the number of hogs; plant rape for forage; increase the acreage in potatoes and beans. Plant special forage crops and feed good dairy cows the maximum ration. Every housekeeper should put up two year's supply of canned fruits and vegetables. Where cans are not available all fruits and vegetables that can be dried should be preserved in this manner and in larger quantities than ever before.

"The methods to be followed in obtaining maximum production have been definitely worked out. Farmers may get this information quickly and without cost by applying to the College of Agriculture or the State Board of Agriculture.

MISSOURI COUNCIL OF DEFENSE.

"In order that the State of Missouri may render the greatest service to the Federal Government and make effective all the activities of the State enlisted in the national service, we recommend that the governor appoint a Missouri State Council of Defense. It shall be the duty of such body to serve with him and to cooperate with the National Council of Defense and to place at the service of the Nation without restriction all the resources and activities of the State of Missouri.

LOYAL TO STATE AND NATIONAL LEADERS.

"This State-wide Missouri conference on food and public defense does unreservedly approve and commend the progressive and patriotic spirit of Gov. Frederick D. Gardner in calling this convention through the board of agriculture; we indorse the actions and policies of President Woodrow Wilson and the Congress of these United States; and we do pledge to the governor of Missouri and the President of the Nation the unqualified support of each and every Missouri citizen in this unparalleled struggle for world peace and human liberty."

Resolutions committee, names appointed: F. B. Mumford, chairman; C. O. Raine, E. W. Solomon, H. G. Windsor, W. C. Gordon, W. H. Stubblefield, W. K. James, A. L. McCawley, Uel W. Lamkin, A. L. Certified copy of resolutions: The foregoing is a certified copy of the resolutions as adopted. Instruction of convention that resolutions be sent to each member of State delegation in Congress obeyed. Jewell Mayes, secretary, Columbia, Mo.

In closing I want to say that Missouri will do her part, rest assured of that. Only a few days ago there assembled in the various school districts of my State 300,000 farmers. There they met to discuss the situation and to pledge their support to the great work of supplying food in this great emergency. The way of the farmer in my State has not always been a smooth one; in fact, he has had many difficulties and hardships. Especially has that been true in the Ozark regions of south Missouri, where out of five consecutive years he has had only one successful crop season. But, notwithstanding the fact that his crop has frequently been destroyed by drouth, he has not given up, but has come forward each spring with renewed vigor and energy, ready for another season. This year, realizing the necessities of his country, he will be more determined than ever to win success.

Agriculture in this great crisis is to become the important factor. The farmers of America should be encouraged in every possible way, both by the State and by the Nation. Not only should they be encouraged, but they should be helped where help is needed. Seed will be needed in many places, fertilizer will have to be supplied, and in many instances it may be necessary in some manner to furnish the farmer with funds to the end that he may be supplied with feed, farm implements, and other things absolutely necessary to enable him to raise a crop. Our Committee on Agriculture is at the present time considering a measure along this particular line, and we hope to complete it and to present it to the House within the next few days.

It may be necessary to send recruits to the farm from the cities. Some are advocating that. If this becomes necessary and recruits are sent out to assist in the work of planting, cultivating, and harvesting, those recruits should be placed in charge of experienced tillers of the soil, because in that way, and in that way only, can they be of any material aid to the farmers. Let us remember and take heed of this fact, that in this great State-wide, Nation-wide effort for increased production the trained and experienced farmers of America must be made the commanding officers in the great army of food supply if victory is to crown our efforts.

Extension of Suffrage to Women.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 2, 1917.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter from the head of the largest fraternal beneficiary order in the world, composed exclusively of women, Miss Bina M. West. To her notable ability as an organizer and proven business judgment has been due in large measure the success of the organization of which she has long been the head. The force of her suggestions with reference to the extension of the suffrage to women will be readily admitted and I am sure her letter will be of particular interest.

The letter is as follows:

THE WOMAN'S BENEFIT ASSOCIATION OF THE MACCABEES,
Port Huron, Mich., April 24, 1917.

Hon. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As chief executive of the Woman's Benefit Association of the Maccabees, the largest woman's fraternal beneficiary order in the world composed exclusively of women, with a total membership of nearly 200,000, I most respectfully urge the immediate submission of the Federal amendment for woman suffrage in order that the women of this great democracy may be placed on an equal footing.

The women of our association have by their acknowledged success in the business world proven their ability to think and act in matters of public importance. Moreover, as an insurance association our business interests are affected. Legislation and amendments to State constitutions are being annually proposed upon which, for our self-protection, we ought to have a direct voice.

As you may know we have insurance on the lives of our members—who are all women—of over $131,000,000. Our reserves in hand invested in municipal securities are over $10,000,000, and our association has disbursed to the families of our members in every State in the Union over fourteen and one-half millions of dollars.

Our society has a record in the business world of never having lost a dollar in investments made, bank deposits, or dishonesty of its officials.

Women are now being called upon to aid the Government in the prosecution of war, in defense of the Nation's interests. Without their aid and patriotism this war could not be conducted. Do you not think women who are successful in public affairs of this character and who are to be relied upon in the Nation's defense should have a voice in the administration of its affairs?

Surely the men of this great democracy will not permit women to suffer the humiliation of seeing the women of England, of Canada, of Russia, of France, and possibly of Germany, enfranchised before political freedom is granted to the women of the United States.

I, therefore, most respectfully ask that you urge upon Congress the immediate submission of the Federal amendment, and that you will use your influence to secure its passage, thus making suffrage Nation wide in 1919.

Very respectfully, yours,

BINA M. WEST,
Supreme Commander.

Publicity the Weapon of Progress.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD I desire to publish an able editorial which appeared in the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Daily Leader of April 27, 1917, entitled "The open book better than injunction court." The editorial is as follows:

THE OPEN BOOK BETTER THAN INJUNCTION COURT.

Publicity is the weapon of progress.

Publicity is the foundation of confidence.

Publicity leads enterprise before the people and creates mutual trust and confidence.

The open book is better than the open shop.

An emphatic illustration of the efficiency of publicity was given when the United States Steel Corporation—the greatest industrial organization of the world—went out of its way to give to the public full information as to its financial transactions.

The frank statement that the earnings for the first quarter of this year were $113,000,000 created no resentment.

The people accepted the corporation's action as an example of good faith, as a display of honesty, and applauded the publicity.

The incident marked the inauguration of a new era of good feeling.

The directors of the United States Steel Corporation met in New York on Tuesday of this week.

It was at this meeting that Judge E. H. Gary, chairman of the board, made public the fact that the earnings for the first quarter were $113,000,000, that the corporation had taken $5,000,000 of the Government's short-time loan, that it had recently again voluntarily increased the pay of its employees, and that it had subscribed $50,000 to the $3,000,000 fund which the Young Men's Christian Association is raising for war work in Army camps.

There is no law requiring Judge Gary and his associates to give publicity to any of these facts.

It was a voluntary act, an unforced recognition of the value of full publicity between the people and an immense corporation—a manifestation of the square deal between its labor and its capital—and a deliberate opening of its books to all.

The corporation's marvelous earnings attest not only to the extraordinary prosperity of the steel industry but quite as much to the marvelous efficiency of the organization.

Critics who have been telling us that these giant corporations were inefficient, wasteful, and bound to break down of their own weight must stand abashed before this wonderful record.

The United States Steel Corporation, it is now seen, is a great cooperative enterprise, with stockholders in every State of the Union, probably in every country in the world, with over 40,000 of its laboring men themselves actual stockholders, and with every officer and employee striving to increases the efficiency, such an organization can not help but contribute to public betterment.

And yet, under an antiquated trust law, passed before we hardly knew what the telephone was, before the advantages of cooperative effort were understood, our Government is seeking to disrupt this organization—to break it up when there is not a single complaint from its vast army of laboring men, from its enormous list of stockholders, from its many competitors, or from the public generally.

Will our lawmakers ever learn anything of modern economics?

What have they accomplished with the Standard Oil Co.?

A few days ago the Interstate Trade Commission officially acknowledged that the dissolution suit won by the Government against the Standard Oil Co. had been ineffective and that the whole matter should be opened up again.

Here is a situation where a company that has been dissolved by an edict of the Supreme Court, under the Sherman law, is still being complained of, while another company has not a single complaint lodged against it by labor, capital, or consumer.

Wherein lies the difference?

Simply in honest publicity. The Steel Corporation is out in the open, doing its business with open books, on the square, in the light of day.

If the Government, instead of trying to enforce the antiquated Sherman law, should replace it with a publicity act that will compel corporations to do by law what the United States Steel Corporation does voluntarily, the trust question will be solved.

It required a man of vision, a man of courage, and a man who knew the thoughts and the hopes of the people to step forward into the light as did Judge Gary.

In this time of war and war uncertainties commercial diplomacy is the peer of international diplomacy.

Patriotism can be exerted in many fields, and the patriotism that unites the people for the country's material good has its uses equally with the patriotism that meets the shock of battle.

This editorial may seem remarkable in the sense that this newspaper and very few other newspaper ever dare to write editorials commending any corporation.

But this is published in a community where the activities of the United States Steel Corporation are seen and known and their benefits felt and where fairness is appreciated.

The Steel Corporation is working in the light.

It is frank with the people, it has confidence in the people, and the people can afford to be frank with the corporation and return its confidence.

Selective-Draft Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOUETT SHOUSE,
OF KANSAS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 3, 1917.

Mr. SHOUSE. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the selective-draft bill I desire to publish a letter which I have sent to Mrs. J. B. Brown as president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Larned, Kans., in answer to a telegram from that organization. This letter explains itself, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 3, 1917.

Mrs. J. B. BROWN,
President Woman's Christian Temperance Union,
Larned, Kans.

MY DEAR MADAM: On Tuesday, May 1, I received the following telegram:

LARNED, KANS., May 1.

JOUETT SHOUSE,
Care House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

You have spoken in Congress. Your constituency will speak at the polls in 1918. The draft bill is an outrage.

THE SEVENTY-FIVE WOMEN OF THE W. C. T. U.

Inasmuch as this message was neither officially nor individually signed, I desired before answering it to know whether it represented official action by your organization. I therefore wired Mr. Leslie E. Wallace, of the Larned Tiller and Toiler, requesting him to secure this information for me. I am advised by Mr. Wallace that the telegram was sent by the executive committee of the Larned Woman's Christian Temperance Union, consisting of the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, and two or three committee chairmen. I therefore accept it as an official expression and am addressing this answer to you as president with the request that you may present it to your membership at your next meeting.

It is impossible within the reasonable limits of a letter to attempt detailed discussion of an important piece of legislation. The selective-draft bill was debated in the House for an entire week; in the Senate for a longer time. In many respects it brought out the most interesting and most forceful debate that has been heard in Congress for years. Probably the best speeches of the many on their respective sides were those of Mr. Speaker CLARK and Senator REED for the volunteer system and Mr. SHERLEY and Mr. KAHN for the selective draft. I should like to have your membership read these speeches, and I am sending you under separate cover marked copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing them.

Please bear in mind the fact that both sides were in entire accord in the view that a large and efficient army must be raised. The only disagreement was as to the method to be employed; and the same divergence of views that was evident in Congress obtained throughout the country. For example, I have had expressions from several hundred of my constituents, both previous and subsequent to the vote on the measure, and while sentiment, as evidenced by these expressions, has been pretty evenly divided, a slight majority of those who have communicated with me have been in favor of the selective draft.

Briefly summarized, my reason for favoring the bill in the form that it finally passed Congress is that, in my judgment, it provides the fairest, most equitable, most democratic, and most certain method of securing an effective fighting force. We have had thrust upon us by a foreign power a war that is serious in the extreme. We need to mobilize all the tremendous forces and resources of our Nation. We must get ready to face any contingency that may arise. Every citizen owes the duty of service to his Government in whatever capacity he can be best utilized. Why should only those whose patriotism induces them to volunteer be compelled to protect the slackers? Why should those who are needed on the farms and in the factories be sacrificed at the front?

If you have followed the history of England during the present war, you must realize what every thinking person in that land admits, that the volunteer system there was a failure. After the war had been in progress 18 months, England was compelled to send to the trenches in France and bring back skilled mechanicians in order to keep her munitions factories going. Is it not the part of wisdom for us to profit by her mistakes rather than to risk a repetition of them? For it is patent that if the volunteer system were tried and failed, then some form of conscription would become necessary and we should have the odium of implied lack of patriotism attached to every conscript. Such odium can not attach where all the men of the country are placed on the same basis and required, each alike, to perform necessary service for a Government that deserves the very best that any of us can give.

The implication in your telegram that because of my position on this piece of legislation I may expect the combined opposition of your membership at the polls in 1918 is interesting. Allow me to make one thing very clear: Whether I am reelected to Congress is a matter of small concern; that I should do my duty faithfully as I see it as long as I am a Member is of the utmost importance; and if I am ever influenced to cast a vote for its political effect rather than for the benefit of the Government I have sworn to serve, I very earnestly hope that I may be speedily and permanently retired from public life. Certainly such a district as the big seventh of Kansas is entitled to be represented by a man who strives to serve the best interests of his people through serving the Nation best rather than by one who would merely endeavor, through his vote, without conviction or study, to please a portion of his constituency.

I am not one who resents criticism of my official acts. I welcome any suggestions or advice that may come from my district; but I must reserve the right to vote as my conscience and my judgment dictate, and I am entirely willing to abide by the record I may make.

For your organization I have the greatest admiration and respect. I have been permitted to cooperate with the forward-looking men in Congress in the passage of legislation to destroy the liquor traffic, legislation which you have so earnestly urged. I sincerely hope it may be possible during the term of the present Congress to enforce prohibition throughout our land. To that end I shall work unceasingly. Feeling as I do toward you, I have endeavored to write with all respect; but also I have endeavored to make my own position very clear and definite. In justice to myself I could do no less.

I have the honor to be Faithfully and sincerely, yours, JOUETT SHOUSE.

The Military Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. AMBROSE KENNEDY, OF RHODE ISLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to place in the RECORD the following tribute to the American flag, recently published in the Worcester Telegram, composed by Rev. Francis P. Donnelly, S. J., ex-president of Gonzaga College, Washington, D. C., and now professor of literature at Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass.:

THE FLAG OF OUR SKIES.

[Dedicated to the Holy Cross Reserve Officers' Training Corps.]

(Air: Gounod's "Marche Processional.")

Red with the brightness
That flames the sky with coming morn;
White with the whiteness
That floods the day when fully born;
Blue with the azure
Of heaven and its starry host;
Hail to our treasure,
Our flag, our love, our proudest boast!

Then let it float with the glories of the skies,
And roll on high its white and red united bars;
Fling out its folds for the storm king it defies;
Let it flash thro' the gloom all the lightning of its stars.
Aye, let it float with its hues from the skies above it.
With the red of the dawn and the white of the day and the blue of the night, we love it.

CHORUS.

Wave it, proudly wave it;
With your life's blood gladly save it;
Praise God who gave it—
The flag of the good and true.
Round it now bravely stand,
Guard it ever with a strong right hand;
Love the banner of your native land,
The red, white, and blue.

Resolutions Adopted by the National Equal Rights League.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 3, 1917.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include resolutions adopted by the National Equal Rights League pledging their ardent support to our country in the conflict which it has now entered and disclaiming any speculation whether Americans of color will be loyal because of the denial of rights to a majority of them.

The resolutions are as follows:

Memorial to the President and the people of the United States.

To the President, WOODROW WILSON,
White House, Washington, D. C.

SIR: When this European war began the world involuntarily speculated whether the Irish would be loyal and the Russian Jews, because of the denial of home rule by England and of civil and political rights by Russia. As the United States of America enters this awful war the world speculates whether Americans of color will be loyal, because of the denial of rights to a majority of them.

Since colored Americans in the past have offered their lives in every way for the country, if Germany is seeking to induce them to revolt, it but proves how notorious is their proscription. If this Nation, knowing the active loyalty of the Americans in the past, believes this alleged plotting could succeed, it shows that the Government and people believe that colored Americans are most unjustly treated.

The Boston Branch of the National Equal Rights League, meeting when the country is at war, realizing its responsibility as a branch of the only Nation-wide organization formed by and of and led by colored citizens to oppose race and color discrimination, declares false all charges of disloyalty.

Colored Americans would be less than human if they did not feel bitterly every bar from employment, from public accommodation because of our race and color. Deep is the resentment against enforced segregation by city, State, or the Federal Government, whether in the civil or military service. But we have no thought of taking up arms against this our country. Ours it has been to save the Government from rebellion. This work of our fathers we shall not destroy. There is not gold enough in all the treasuries of the Nations of the earth to corrupt us, for it is not a question of money, but of equality of rights.

Let neither white nor colored Americans seek to deny the truths of human nature. Soldiers of democracies fight better than soldiers of autocracies. The same men fight better if in time of peace they can sell their labor in the open market than if denied work because of race; fight better if public accommodation in peace depends on conduct and the price than if it is denied for color; fight more eagerly if in peace encouraged by possession of a free man's ballot than if repressed by its denial; fight with more heart if in peace they have court protection than if their very race means possible murder by the mob.

To the National Government which calls us all to war, to our fellow Americans of every race variety we would appeal in the name of fair play, of justice, and humanity. We are all citizens of a common country.

There is need no longer of subjection of Americans to the race prejudices of fellow Americans. In the presence of a common danger and a common obligation, with a war devastating Europe caused by racial clannishness and racial hatred, under Almighty God, let the United States of America and the people thereof give up race proscription and persecution at home. Let the door of the workshop, the school, the college, the civil service, the Army, the Navy, the military school, the naval school now and henceforth open alike to every citizen of the Republic without regard to race and without distinction of color. Let the right to travel, to vote, to have court protection be free, without barrier or denial.

Give, Mr. President and all our governors, the same encouragement for volunteering or enlisting to white, to brown, to yellow, to black—Americans all—by vouchsafing the same free chance to enlist, to rise on merit, and on return home the same right to civil service and to civil rights without bar or segregation.

With our great Republic entering a world war for humanity, remove the need for the colored mother and father to suffer under the feeling that their son will return to find the color line drawn at factory, eating place, playhouse, and ballot box; make it not necessary for the colored soldier in the trenches to suffer with the thought that as he bares his breast to the bullet his sister is segregated in the Government service at Washington and his mother in danger of the lynching mob.

Recognizing the world-honored ethics of national defense, as England promised home rule to the Irish and Russia abolition of restriction and the ghetto to her Jews, the United States of America is now called upon to grant the abolition of Federal segregation and of disfranchisement to her colored citizens.

As this Nation goes forth to fight the "natural foe of liberty," let Americans highly resolve that all shall have liberty within her borders. As she fights for democracy as against autocracy, let there be a democracy at home 100 per cent, not 90 per cent, strong. As our President declares we "fight for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government," let us all resolve that when the war is over such shall be the privilege of 100 per cent of our people, not 90 per cent.

Now is the time for all in authority to declare for the abolition of all racial discriminations and proscriptions, and for all to join in our unhyphenated Americanism for victory under the favor of the God of all mankind.

Appeal from the President of Switzerland to President Wilson not to Cut Export of Grain to That Country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. WILLIAM RAMSEYER,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, Switzerland is the oldest democracy in the world. President Schulthess, of Switzerland, a few days ago made an appeal to our President which at this time is of special significance. The people of Switzerland have been free for 700 years. During that time they have not crooked the knee to any emperor, king, or potentate, and have held high the torch of liberty and freedom among the peoples or Europe. We have entered the war to aid the democracies of Europe.

Switzerland is neutral. She is surrounded by belligerent countries. On a mountainous area of only 15,976 square miles she has a population of nearly 4,000,000 to support. She must look to us for food, and if we fail her her people must starve. We have entered this war for democracy. We certainly will not aid the cause for which we entered the war if by our policy we aid in crushing Switzerland, the cradle of European liberty.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the appeal from President Schultess to President Wilson may be printed in the RECORD as it appeared in the New York American of yesterday.

The article is as follows:

BERNE, VIA PARIS, May 2.

There is growing anxiety in Switzerland that the United States may restrict exports to neutral countries. Edmund Schulthess, president of the Federation, to-day gave the Associated Press a comprehensive statement of the situation.

The President made a warm appeal to President Wilson and the American people not to allow a small sister Republic to meet starvation, which would be her inevitable lot if her imports were reduced. He clearly outlined Switzerland's utter dependence not only on America but on both groups of European combatants.

President Schulthess likewise pointed out just what supplies were needed from the United States, but denied categorically that any portion of such supplies goes to the central powers. He explained the measures taken to control imports and prevent them from being sent out of Switzerland. He said:

"Situated as it is in the heart of Europe and bounded on the north and east by the central powers and on the south and west by the entente, Switzerland is dependent on both belligerents. Our land does not produce sufficient food, and particularly lacks grain and fats, which must be supplied by importation.

"Switzerland has no raw materials, such as coal, metals, and oils. To offset this she has highly developed industries."

Asked why the export of many articles from America to Switzerland, especially grain, had increased during the war, President Schulthess answered:

"Before the war Switzerland imported 50,000 tons of grain from Russia. This importation has been completely stopped by the closing of the Dardanelles. The same is true for Roumania. Switzerland, therefore, is compelled to procure her entire grain supplies from America and Argentina to-day.

"We actually can exist only by the help of shipments that come from the United States and Argentina. For us it is nothing less than a question of existence or nonexistence. Were America to restrict or stop the exportation of grain to Switzerland, our position would be critical. Without exaggeration, the danger of starvation would then be at hand."

Concerning reports that foodstuffs sent from the United States merely passed through Switzerland to the central powers, President Schulthess concluded with the following appeal:

"It seems to me out of the question that so high-minded and just a man as President Wilson will lend his hand to a measure which would hit the oldest Republic in the world hard and place it in an extremely critical situation.

"We claim the right to live and work. We have done nothing to forfeit this right. He who thinks justly must admit this.

"Tell this to your big-hearted American people and convey to them an expression of my sympathy and the greeting of the Swiss people."

Address of Hon. Isaac Siegel at Cooper Union, New York City.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert an address delivered by Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL at Cooper Union, New York City, May 3, 1917. The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. ISAAC SIEGEL, OF NEW YORK, ON MAY 3, 1917, AT COOPER UNION, NEW YORK CITY.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, in no country on the face of the earth have men enjoyed greater blessings than in this Republic of ours. Nowhere under the sun have the rights of civil and religious liberty been more zealously guarded than here, and no citizens of the United States have been more appreciative of those great privileges than those of the Jewish faith. Here they have come from places of oppression and persecution with the sole idea of becoming good and law-abiding citizens. They have recognized that with the benefits and opportunities of America came the reciprocal duty and obligation to make every sacrifice for her in the hour of national peril.

It is therefore fitting and proper that here in Cooper Union, where many notable meetings have been held in the cause of human freedom and religious liberty, that we gather to-night to demonstrate to the world that, as American citizens of the Jewish faith, regardless of the place of nativity, we are just as loyal, just as patriotic, just as true, just as devoted to our flag and country as those who are the direct descendants of the Puritans and Pilgrims.

From the time of Haym Solomon the citizen of the Jewish faith has served the Union, giving up life as well as treasure in its behalf. In the Revolutionary War, in the War of 1812, in the Mexican War, in the Civil War, in the Spanish-American War, and on the Mexican border during 1916 he willingly shed his blood for her both on land and sea.

The known number of Jews who participated in our wars until 1865 was 8,257. In the Spanish-American War 2,551 answered to the call of our lamented martyred President, William McKinley.

It has been estimated that at the present time the number of our boys in the Army and Navy of the United States and National Guard is over 6,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is but right at this time for me to state as emphatically as I can that I am unalterably opposed to the formation of any regiment which is to be composed exclusively of men of the Jewish faith. As in the past, I want to see men of all faiths fighting side by side for Old Glory, symbolic of the fact that we have no state religion.

We point with pride to the fact that the man selected by the administration to carry on its fight in the House of Representatives in behalf of a proper army at this critical hour was JULIUS KAHN of California. There is no man who loves America more than JULIUS KAHN, and I know that by act and word he reechoes your feelings.

Mr. Chairman, on June 20, 1895, the late President William McKinley, then governor of Ohio, at Ottawa, Kans., in a speech gave utterance to the following noble sentiments:

> What more beautiful conception than that which prompted Abraham Kohn, of Chicago, in February, 1861, to send Mr. Lincoln, on the even of his starting to Washington to assume the office of President, a flag of our country, bearing upon its silken folds those words from the first chapter of Joshua: "Have I not commanded thee? Be strong and of good courage. Be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee, whithersoever thou goest. There shall not any man be able to stand before thee all the days of thy life. As I was with Moses, so shall I be with thee. I will not fail nor forsake thee."
> Could anything have given Mr. Lincoln more cheer or been better calculated to sustain his courage or to strengthen his faith in the mighty work before him? Thus commanded, thus assured, Mr. Lincoln journeyed to the Capitol, where he took the oath of office and registered in heaven an oath to save the Union. And the Lord our God was with him until every obligation of oath and duty was sacredly kept and honored. Not any man was able to stand before him. Liberty was the more firmly enthroned, the Union was saved, and the flag which he carried floated in triumph and glory from every flagstaff of the Republic.

To-night, my fellow citizens, all over this broad land of ours, regardless of political belief, we are standing solidly behind President Wilson. He speaks in behalf of the whole people, and the words of prayer uttered in behalf of the Great Emancipator, Abraham Lincoln, by Abraham Kohn, we repeat here to-night for your President and my President, Woodrow Wilson.

Let us then bear in mind that this war is being waged to bring freedom and religious liberty to the Finn, Pole, Armenian, and Jew. Let us not forget that when the smoke of battle shall have cleared away we can look forward to beholding the dream of the ages fulfilled and Palestine once more the home of Jewish learning and culture. We shall also witness the Irish question successfully solved to the thorough satisfaction of all concerned, and the Jew in Roumania at last come into his own.

This is our war and it is for us to bear that constantly in our thoughts.

Mr. Chairman, I have often referred to the necessity of our teaching the rising generation in as impressive a manner as we know what our flag means and what it stands for. It is a flag standing for peace. It is a flag that has ever gone into battle for the sake of humanity. It is a flag that has ever stood and been the sign of justice, freedom, and fair dealing amongst all men. The blue has stood for God's blessings that have been showered upon this land; the white typifies justice and the red exemplifies the blood that Americans have spilled in its defense and expressive of their willingness to again make every sacrifice for its continued triumph. It has never known defeat. That flag embodies the hope and the ambition, the desire, and the will of 103,000,000 people determined that it shall ever float over the land of the free and the home of the brave. As American citizens we are resolved that it shall bring the same blessings to those suffering people who have been crushed for many years by militarism and autocracy.

That flag has the right to command the self-sacrifice of every individual that lives under its folds. That flag, with its glorious history and noble achievements for mankind, reminds us that the duty of the hour requires every man to sink self in the effort to render to America such service as will help to make her not only victorious but will render the conflict as short as possible.

In the past we have spoken many times in this country of the rights of the individual. Now the rights of the individual must temporarily give way to the paramount and superior rights of our country to command and receive the unselfish and full support of all men regardless of race, creed, or color.

America is calling. Its sons and daughters must answer the call. The war must be won. It can only be won by all men and women having the fixed purpose to render the most efficient service in their particular sphere of activity. Whether in the armed forces of the United States or in the factory or on the farm, every man, woman, and child must give the most efficient service that mankind has ever seen or known.

There is no room, Mr. Chairman, in the United States for any man who has any divided sentiment as to what his imperative duty is in this critical hour. Let us remember that men, women, and children abroad are battling for the same principles of equal rights, the right to live, and the inherent right to have the same opportunities that we have here.

We must realize that we have very serious business before us. We have the greatest militaristic power on earth to fight. It is only fair and just that America should expect all men who are walking upon her soil and who have been attracted to our land from all over the world because the Stars and Stripes have been to them the emblem of freedom, of religious liberty, and of opportunity, that they should now be ready and willing to make the necessary sacrifice in defense of those ideas and principles which have helped to make the Republic what it is.

Real Americanism requires us to be faithful in this hour of trial, for we must help save the world from an autocracy of the foulest kind, which was bent on crushing us when we least expected it.

When peace finally comes let us be resolved to mold America into a greater, stronger, and mightier adherent of the doctrine that right makes might and that all men are to be judged in the future as in the past by the value of their services to our country when she needed them most.

Let us then awaken to the situation which is before us. Let us, if business men, do our duty to the United States by being willing to forego profits when selling to the Government during this war; if we are capable of rendering military service let us be amongst the first to respond, and if for any reason we can not do that, let us do our part by helping the families and dependents of those who are going to the front, that they shall not be in want. Let us make sure that when these boys return that a grateful Republic will make certain their reemployment.

Let me recall a few lines of a poem by Elias Lieberman:

> "See," said my father, pointing to the flag that fluttered near,
> "That flag of stars and stripes is yours;
> It is the emblem of the promised land.
> It means, my son, the hope of humanity.
> Live for it—Die for it.
> Under the open sky of my new country I swore to do so;
> And every drop of blood in me will keep my vow.
> I am proud of my future.
> I am an American."

We are all born to die. The length of man's years is in God's hands and not ours. What grander, greater, and more beautiful bequest can one leave to posterity when he goes from this world, than the words written upon his tombstone: "He gave his life for his country."

Resolutions Adopted by the City Council of Wilmington, Del.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT F. POLK,

OF DELAWARE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein certain resolutions adopted by the City Council of Wilmington, Del., relating to the acquisition of the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal as a part of the plan of preparedness of this Government.

The resolutions are as follows:

WILMINGTON, DEL., April 19, 1917.

Whereas it has become alarmingly apparent that the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, in time of war, would be absolutely necessary for the perfect protection of a great portion of the Atlantic coast, with its great cities and important manufacturing plants: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Council of Wilmington, That Congress is hereby urged to take immediate action looking toward the purchase of the canal or to institute immediate proceedings for acquiring the same by condemnation; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Senators and Representative in Congress; and, be it further

Resolved, That the Council of Wilmington heartily approves of Senator SAULSBURY'S interest in the project, and his endeavor to have the Government purchase or condemn the canal, and the council respectfully solicits the cooperation of Senator WOLCOTT and Representative POLK in bringing about the Government control of the canal, and later of its improvement.

[SEAL.] THE MAYOR AND COUNCIL OF WILMINGTON,
By HENRY C. DOWNWARD,
President of the Council.

Attested:
HOMER C. SIMMONS,
Clerk of the Council.

Resolutions Adopted at a Meeting of the Citizens at Murfreesboro, Tenn.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM C. HOUSTON,
OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions adopted at a meeting of the citizens at Murfreesboro, Tenn.

The resolutions are as follows:

Resolutions adopted by patriotic mass meeting held at the Grand Theater, Murfreesboro, Tenn., on Friday night, April 20, 1917. About 1,000 people attended this meeting and the spirit of enthusiasm and patriotism ran very high.

Whereas the United States of America has made formal entrance into the world's greatest war, combining its destinies with those allied nations of Europe long engaged in open warfare with the Imperial German Government; and

Whereas the American people, always jealous of their inalienable rights and priceless liberties, ready always to resist any form of attack upon their institutions of government, have for almost three years watched with unusual interest the trend of relations between their own country and its present enemy; and

Whereas the people of America, loving peace and having always advocated the fellowship of all nations in a common pact of peace, especially appreciate the efforts of their President, throughout all the long period of disagreement and controversy with Germany, to amicably adjust differences and secure a lasting peace; and

Whereas the United States, seeking no territorial extension by conquest, and having utterly no selfish ends to subserve by the waging of war with any great world power, bravely enters this conflict in behalf of the rights of mankind and the ultimate establishment of peace throughout the world in the future; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, practically with one accord, met the view of the President, in that war was inevitable; that the body of the Nation favored it; and that, without delay, its declaration should be made, that the honor of the Nation may be upheld; and

Whereas the representatives in Congress from the State of Tennessee, consisting of 2 Senators and 10 Congressmen, solidly aligned themselves with the President and voted for a declaration of war on the part of the country with the Imperial Government of Germany; and

Whereas the Nation faces the gigantic task of speedily providing all necessary preparations for the proper prosecution of the war, including greatly enlarged armed forces on land and sea, together with adequate equipment and maintenance therefor; and

Whereas the President has stressed the shortage of food reserves throughout all food-producing countries of the world, and has made patriotic appeal to the country, especially the South, to increase and conserve the food supply in order that the armies, the country generally, and the European allies of this Government may be properly supplied with such necessities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, in mass meeting assembled, indorse the course of President Woodrow Wilson in his consistent advocacy of peace so long as there was hope for peace. We also commend his wonderful alertness, patience, conservative, and decisive course in dealing with all the causes responsible for war with the German people. We also pledge him our cooperation and loyal support and promise our best efforts toward the maximum production of food supplies during the whole progress of the war; and be it further

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the course of Tennessee's Representatives in Congress in casting their votes for the declaration of war against a known enemy of our beloved country, and express to them our thanks in view of their prompt, courageous, and patriotic action; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be furnished to the President of the United States, the honorable Secretaries of War, Navy, and Agriculture, Members of the National Congress from Tennessee, the local newspapers, and the press at Nashville.

Cotton Prices.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES B. ASWELL,
OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article on cotton prices.

The article is as follows:

COTTON PRICES NOT UNREASONABLE.

Theo. H. Price in Commerce and Finance of April 12 and Arthur R. Marsh in an article printed in his paper, the Economic World, and reprinted with applause by Mr. Price, under the patriotic license of the times makes certain statements in respect to the cotton situation which are so grossly incorrect in fact and indulge in certain generalizations which are so palpably unfair in application that a contradiction is demanded.

Both Mr. Price and Mr. Marsh seem to be disturbed by the present prices of cotton and feel called upon to criticize the producer and holder for rapacity and unpatriotism in their efforts to maintain present prices and in their expectation of a still further enhancement in step with the advance in other commodities.

Mr. Price starts out with the eminently correct statement of principle that the hope of personal gain must in time of war be subordinated to the duty of supplying our military forces and our civil population with the essentials of life at a reasonable price. He then states that the only question with which those who own or produce cotton should concern themselves is, Does the present price of cotton pay a fair profit on the cost of production? So far, so good. But then he makes the preposterous statement that the present price of cotton shows a profit of nearly 200 per cent on the cost of production. From this correct declaration of principle and this incorrect statement of fact his thought flows to the conclusion that it is the patriotic duty of the owners and producers of cotton to sell at the present price and to try to produce an adequate supply for the future. He does not tell his readers that if his advice were followed, and if the present owners of cotton should put their stocks on sale and the producers should plant a largely increased acreage, then the bottom would fall out of the market, entailing present loss and future shortage of supplies.

Mr. Marsh's assault, although delivered from the same high plane of altruism upon which Mr. Price stands, is somewhat more truculent than that of his copatriot. He begins by reciting the harrowing details of the oppression to which certain short sellers on the New York Exchange have been subjected. He then declares that the present price of cotton is inexcusably high, that the producer is already making fully 200 per cent profit and that by his greed he is "besmirching the face of patriotism." The cotton producer alone seems to be guilty of the high crime of rapacity against the commonweal. Mr. Marsh pointedly excuses the excessive rise in the price of foodstuffs upon the theory that the people are prone to wastefulness and extravagance and that the only known means by which they can be brought to habits of economy and frugality in respect to food consumption is through severe enhancement of prices. From Mr. Marsh's reasoning it would therefore appear that high food prices are good because they force the people to economize, but that high cotton prices are bad because, by analogy, they breed in the people habits of extravagance. In other words, Mr. Marsh would have us believe that the patriotic position at this time is to be long on foodstuffs and short on cotton.

Aside from any collateral objections, the trouble with the arguments of both Mr. Price and Mr. Marsh is that they are based upon a flagrantly incorrect premise. Both declare that the producer is at the present price (20 cents) making a profit of 200 per cent on the cost of production. Both base their percentage statements on the alleged figures of the average cost of production published by the United States Department of Agriculture in December, 1914. If the cotton producer was making a profit of anything like the figures stated, I would join Messrs. Price and Marsh in condemning such profit as excessive. But this is not true. The obvious incorrectness of this figure should be apparent to even a journalistic cotton economist in New York City; its actual falsity is well known to every man who is in the least conversant with the problem of cotton production.

In the first place, it is practically impossible to arrive at any accurate statement of the cost of producing cotton. Mr. Price will no doubt recall that a conference which he and I and many others attended in Washington in August, 1914, the request was made of the experts of the Department of Agriculture there present to supply us with production cost figures; to which request answer was made that due to the wide difference in conditions, physical, seasonal, and financial, prevailing in the several sections of the cotton belt, it was impossible to secure any dependable figures on average cost. He will also remember that the consensus of opinion among the practical cotton men there assembled was that the cost of production was upwards of 8 cents per pound on the then existing scale of expenses.

But regardless of the correctness of the department's figures in 1914, and assuming for the sake of the argument that 20 cents per pound (which the producer has not received) represents a profit of 200 per cent on the 1914 cost of production (which it does not), why do Messrs. Price and Marsh take the cost figures of 1914 and deduct them from the alleged selling price of 1917? It is not possible that these distinguished disciples of patriotic economics are unaware that there has been an excessive advance in the price of every single item (money alone excepted) that contributes to the cost of making cotton. Disingenuousness could hardly reach any more intense expression than it does in the effort to convict the cotton producer of extortion by the statement that he is making 200 per cent profit and to undertake to prove that he is making this profit because in 1914 it cost him only around 6½ cents per pound to make his crop, whereas in 1917, after two years of progressive war prices, he was selling for 20 cents per pound.

I am no apologist for extortion. On the contrary, selfish greed is to the last degree offensive to me, and I would go as far as any man to circumvent it. But we must not permit either half-baked or specious calls to patriotic duty to obscure the real facts of the situation and mislead not only the producers of cotton but the users of cotton goods and the Government itself into costly error.

It is quite true that the producer has made some profit out of the past year's crop, but he was entitled to some profit, and he made it not by favor but because the law of supply and demand and his own fortitude enabled him to make it. But he did not make any 200 per cent or 100 per cent or 50 per cent profit. I do not know just what the average per cent profit amounted to, as that is not accurately ascertained, but I do know from a rather wide practical experience that the past season did not produce any cotton plutocrats, and that the profits of these producers were small in comparison with the gains of those industrial enterprises which spun the staple and trafficked in the manufactured product The present high cost of such foodstuffs as the cotton farmer must buy, of agricultural implements, of work stock, of transportation; the scarcity and high cost of labor; the scarcity, poor quality, and high cost of fertilizers; the wide extension of boll weevil infestation which has increased cost and decreased productive capacity, are the elements which have reduced the producers large theoretic profit to an actual modest remuneration, and which make it necessary for him to realize high prices for his product if he is to live and do his duty as a producer.

As for the future, the cotton farmer faces an inevitable increase in all his costs aggravated by enlarged boll-weevil activity and the wholesale exodus of labor to the Army and to the industrial establishments and avocations which pay higher wages than the farmer even on the basis of present cotton prices is able to pay. The real danger to this country in so far as the cotton problem is concerned is that the farmers will not be economically able to produce an adequate crop. The contingency to fear is not that prices will go too high, but that they will not go high enough to encourage or permit the production of sufficient supplies. If economists of the Price-Marsh school were followed, the present spot holders would offer their reserves, break the market below the cost of production, transfer the remnant to spinners to be manufactured, and then sold at God knows what prices, and next year the world would face a cotton famine which would strain the industrial and military necessities to the breaking point. The Government can and will and should prevent extortion, but the Government will not and should not and can not compel the production of an adequate supply of cotton under cost. The patriotic issue is an economic one. The salvation of the country, in so far as its cotton supply is concerned, lies in advancing the price of cotton so that it will keep pace with the increase in the cost of production. A decline in price at this particular time would be the worst thing that could happen both from the military and industrial point of view. The great essential fact is the need of an adequate supply of cotton for the portentous future. The distress of a few short traders on the New York Exchange will not weigh against the economic necessities of the Nation.

The farmers of the South are as patriotic as the journalists of the East. They will give without stint of their men, their means, and their blood, if necessary, for the Nation's cause. They will freely coordinate their resources and efforts with those of the Government and of the other sections and other departments of industry. They will make all necessary sacrifices for the common cause and the common victory. But they can not make bricks without straw. They can not produce an adequate supply of cotton if they are obliged to pay high and higher prices for everything that goes into the production of the crop and required to sell on the altruistic basis proposed. And, finally, they will not take advice either in patriotism or economics from Messrs. Price and Marsh, of New York.

Militarism and Mr. Anthony's Speech.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. PHILIP P. CAMPBELL,
OF KANSAS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an editorial from the Topeka (Kans.) Capital, April 29, 1917. The editorial is as follows:

[Editorial from the Topeka (Kans.) Capital, April 29.]

MILITARISM AND MR. ANTHONY'S SPEECH.

Congress has done what everybody knew would be done with the issue of volunteerism—it has destroyed this traditional American system in the bill passed yesterday. This was done against the best opinion of Congress itself. It was done because military authority had won over President Wilson. Such is the confidence of the Nation in its President that Congress was forced to accept the President's bill.

The bill, nevertheless, was amended by the House in one matter, though not one of principle. The President's bill in its original form proposed to skim the cream of the young blood of the Nation into the Army Staff's army. It proposed, under its preposterously misstyled "liability to universal service"—a term invented to deceive the chambers of commerce of the country and bring their pressure to bear through resolutions and telegrams—to exempt 15,000,000 men of military age at a stroke, to restrict the conscripts to 7,000,000 under 25 years of age, and to select from this 7,000,000 of the cream of the young men of the land the 500,000 or 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 desired.

Nothing could be more entertaining than the Army's crocodile tears over volunteering—that the volunteer system sacrificed the best blood of the young of America and let off the "slacker"—in view of this well-conceived Army scheme to skim off precisely this volunteer element of superfine military material, and yet not permit it to call itself volunteers or to volunteer its services?

The House, in fact, defeated so much of the Army Staff scheme by amending the bill so that conscription goes on up to 40 years, instead of quitting with 24.

But the amendment will not amount to anything in reality, because selection is still left to the Regular Army, and the Army will do what it intended to do. It will restrict its selections precisely as if the bill remained as in its original shape.

Congressman ANTHONY was scarcely permitted to make his speech, so constant was the fire of interruptions and questions from every part of the House. He has been for 10 years on the Military Committee. His familiarity with Army men and matters is known to the House, if not to the country. But the questions and interruptions only served to bring out the real "milk in the coconut," as the Capital's readers will perceive this morning.

The Kansas Congressman is not a foe of the Army—far from it—nor has he ever been a bitter critic of big business. In this speech he had been exasperated to the point of telling the truth to the country regarding the combine between these two interests for the military government of the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY says, in answer to a question, that the new law means the wiping out of the National Guard. That has been the determined aim of the Army militarists ever since the militarism issue arose. If this plan lasts it is good-by to the National Guard and to every trace of the volunteer idea in the United States. Every National Guard officer knows this in his heart. It signifies that hereafter all military matters, all military organizations, will be wholly under the thumb of the professional Army chiefs.

There are those short-sighted Americans who approve; they see nothing objectionable in the professional militarists having supreme control of military policy; they are as blind and infatuated as if they should also approve that professional railroad officials should have exclusive control of railroad regulations. As well provide that the professional officials of big business should have supreme control of national policy relating to the regulation and control of trusts and monopolies. Democracy's use for the professional expert is in administration of the policy; in determination of the policy he is interested, biased, and dangerous.

It never has been the instinct or the practice of democracy to trust special interests with supreme control of State policy relating to such interests.

Why the Army has favored this "selective" conscript scheme is too obvious to require elucidating. It breaks the back of all opposition to the Army as the self-dominated military power. As it contemplates destroying the National Guard, so it involves increasing the Regular Army by a similar number.

Why big business has entered into the game, has organized a score of national defense and national security and Army league and Navy league socities, and has sent out glib orators representing these organizations to "educate" the democratic West, whose instincts and knowledge of militarism have cautioned it to resist everything of the sort, is also obvious. Big business wants a Federal Army of magnitude, free from the local control and local sympathetic weakness of a National Guard or militia in its war against strikes and against labor. And big business wants a real military power at its back when it goes out through its large organizations, for that purpose, to obtain special privileges—"concessions"—from weak rulers in South America, in Mexico, in Central America, in China above all, for the exploitation of feeble peoples. Big business and the professional soldier have similar opinions of democracy, similar instincts, and are natural allies.

All this is implied in Mr. ANTHONY'S speech, if not expressed. The speech itself is too long to be printed in the Capital to-day, but the extracts from it in another column will be found to be very good reading.

Opponents of the conscript system and the abolishment of the volunteer have expressed themselves. When war is over or when the issue again comes up they will again be heard from. When Congress acts, the Nation falls in line, and so it will be now. It is the duty of all elements to cooperate once the policy is settled, as it now is settled for the present war.

Espionage.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM E. MASON,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, while we are spreading democracy in Europe we are making the same mighty thin in the United States. This section 4 of the espionage bill leaves the President power to make law, execute the law, and to determine who shall be prosecuted. Those who voted as directed by the General Staff and scolded those of us who could not surrender our convictions, now worship no longer at the shrine of the General Staff, and demand their liberty to think. We welcome you from the rubber-stamp column to help us knock out this section 4. It will, if enacted, protect every Army contractor and prevent the people from knowing what is happening to our boys.

Newspapers are a necessary evil and a great blessing. Do not get mad when they roast you, or lie about you. Very soon they will tell just as big ones flattering you. The people do not believe what they read there unless they want to. We had better stand by the Constitution for free speech and a free press. The editors are like Congressmen—mostly honest, with here and there an exception. There are some small editors printing large papers and some great editors printing small papers. These great editors are loyal. Give them all a chance. If they print anything willfully to aid the enemy the law will punish them. To illustrate the danger of placing law making and law enforcement in one branch of Government: It is treason to discourage enlistment in time of war. The administration—General Staff—papers print letters and editorials begging Col. Roosevelt not to enlist. If one of our great editors of a small paper should discourage our boys from enlisting in the Regular Army during this war he would be invited to go to jail by the shortest possible route.

Our hearts thrilled when our President changed the purpose of this war from the exercise of a "doubtful legal right" to the spread of democracy. We believe he meant it. The people of Chicago believe he meant it. At a meeting in Chicago 100 of loyal patriotic men signed the following statement. It is headed by our ex-governor, Edward F. Dunne, and by many of the judges of our courts; by the clergy, by business men and leading professional men. Here is the declaration and the signers:

DECLARATION.

The cry for liberty from the people of China, Russia, Poland, and Portugal has been heeded. The avowed purpose of America, as well as England, on entering the world war was to establish the rights and liberties of small nations, to advance the cause of permanent world peace, and to make the whole world free.

Ireland is one of the small nations and is demanding her liberty. Over her destinies the present enemies of England and America have no control and England has full power to give Ireland her liberty.

As America has an opportunity to bring about the freedom of Ireland now, we Americans of Irish birth or ancestry ask that the Congress of the United States pass a resolution calling upon Great Britain to stand by her solemn declaration and grant to Ireland her rights and liberties by permitting her to establish an Irish Republic.

Kelly; Dr. William P. Honan; Leo J. Doyle, judge municipal court of Chicago; Hon. William E. Dever, judge of the appellate court of Cook County; James R. Quinn, assistant State's attorney.

This is not the cry of Irish-Americans alone. It is the cry of every lover of human liberty all over the world, who said "Amen" when the President demanded liberty and self-government for all the "peoples" and all governments of the world.

Baltimore Raises Quota for Navy in Time Specified.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM, OF MARYLAND,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article:

LED ALL CITIES IN THE EAST—BALTIMORE ONLY ONE THAT RAISED QUOTA FOR NAVY IN TIME SPECIFIED.

Of the big Atlantic seaboard cities, Baltimore was the only one to meet the President's call for more men for the Navy in the specified time. Figures are beginning to become known about what happened in other parts of the East and in the country at large.

New York was called upon for 2,000 men, and raised only 960, not many more than Baltimore. Philadelphia's quota was 1,200, and she contributed but 590, over 200 fewer than this city.

Four cities arrived at their goal in time. They were Baltimore, with 800; Kansas City, with 800; Cincinnati, with 400; and Portland, Oreg., with 800.

Since the expiration of the time limit, Minneapolis has completed her 800, but several other large cities, such as Boston and Cleveland, have not yet reported.

It is believed that the Navy at the present time is nearly up to the emergency complement of 87,000 required by the President's call, but it will not stop there. A bill which has the approval of the President and has been favorably reported by the committees of both branches of Congress authorizes a further increase to 150,000. This will provide plenty of men for all the Navy's needs—the work on shore at the navy yards and the manning of the new ships, including the "mosquito fleet."

If this new force is authorized, the drive for more men will start all over again, regardless of whether the selective-draft bill passes Congress, as the machinery for conscription will require some time to be put in working order.

Lieut. Wilson is chiefly concerned at present with the gathering of 30 hospital apprentices, who are needed badly, and with the enlistment of machinists and firemen, of whom there is a dearth in the Navy and whose promotion is correspondingly rapid.

The Espionage Bill—Shall the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights be Deleted by a Censor? Shall the American People be Compelled to Fight in the Dark? Shall the People be Gagged as Well as Chained?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,
OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, on April 5, 1917, Good Friday, the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled decided that this great country should enter the great war. Acting according to my honest and sincere convictions, I voted against such action, along with a small minority. War has been declared, and once the Stars and Stripes are unfurled in the front of an American army there is but one path of duty for a patriotic American to follow, and that is to think, talk, act, and shoot from his country's side, always and only.

On April 28, 1917, the House of Representatives threw into the discard our time-honored volunteer army system and decided that this great people could not be trusted to assemble at the trumpet call of duty and "rally 'round the flag" but must be driven into military servitude instead of being led into patriotic military duty. Believing, as I did, that American manhood would rather be led than driven, I voted against this measure of iniquity and am proud of my vote.

To-day you come with a still graver proposition, a proposition so full of menace to every vital principle of liberty, so contrary to every precedent and tradition of our past history, and, what is of still more importance, so fraught with peril to any possible success in our conduct of this war that I am at a loss even in this day of denaturing representative democracy to understand the mental processes of those who are responsible for the introduction of this measure.

Before considering the peril to us in present conditions let us for a moment look back to the past. Let us summon from the glorious pages of American history the mighty intellects and patriotic souls that wrought the constitutional concrete foundation upon which our magnificent Republic was built.

The very first amendment to the Constitution reads as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

This, Mr. Speaker, is very plain and simple. It requires neither learning nor education to understand, and I may say frankly if somewhat brusquely I do not think the most astute lawyer nor the most subtle and adroit interpreter of constitutional law and history can get around the obvious truth that Congress to-day is trying to do something plainly and explicitly forbidden by the Constitution. Are we going to treat the first amendment of the Constitution as a "scrap of paper"?

Now, let us examine what the master minds who framed the Constitution had to say on this very subject. Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson differed very widely on many fundamental doctrines of government and were in their day leaders of two schools of thought with conflicting theories of constitutional construction, amendment, and interpretation, but both agreed that under the Constitution Congress should not have any power over the press.

Hamilton said in reference to the first amendment:

They would contain various exceptions to powers not granted, and on this very account would afford a colorable pretext to claim more than were granted. For why declare that things shall not be done which there is no power to do? Why, for instance, should it be said that the liberty of the press shall not be restrained when no power is given by which restrictions may be imposed? I will not contend that such a provision—would confer a regulating power; but it is evident that it would furnish, to men disposed to usurp, a plausible pretense for claiming that power. They might urge with a semblance of reason that the Constitution ought not to be charged with the absurdity of providing against the abuse of an authority which was not given, and that the provision against restraining the liberty of the press afforded a clear implication that a power to prescribe proper regulations concerning it was intended to be vested in the National Government.

Therefore—

Said Mr. Hamilton—

as the power does not exist in the National Government to legislate concerning the press, to adopt an amendment with reference to the subject matter would be an implication that the power does exist, and it does not.

Very well—

Said Mr. Jefferson—

I agree with you that the power is not legitimately here, and that it was not intended to be here, and that it is a subject matter which belongs to the States, the same as the common police power of the States. But there is in the Constitution a provision that Congress shall have power to pass all laws necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the powers here granted, and it might be held and might be construed to include regulation and legislation concerning the press. Therefore, accepting your view that it is not among the powers of the General Government, and that it should not be among such powers, we ask for a declaratory amendment to the Constitution which shall put it beyond peradventure that it is not one of the powers granted to the National Government.

James Madison, often referred to as the father of the Constitution, submitted a report to the Virginia Legislature which has direct bearing upon the subject, and I will insert here an excerpt from this report:

When the Constitution was under the discussions which preceded its ratification it is well known that great apprehensions were expressed by many lest the omission of some positive exception from the powers delegated of certain rights, and of the freedom of the press particularly, might expose them to danger of being drawn by construction within some of the powers vested in Congress, more especially of the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying their other powers into execution. In reply to this objection it was invariably urged to be a fundamental and characteristic principle of the Constitution that all powers not given by it were reserved; that no powers were given beyond those enumerated in the Constitution, and such as were fairly incident to them; that the power over the rights in question, and particularly over the press, was neither among the enumerated powers nor incident to any of them, and consequently that an exercise of any such power would be manifest usurpation. It is painful to remark how much the arguments now employed in behalf of the sedition act are at variance with the reasoning which then justified the Constitution and invited its ratification.

Without tracing further the evidence on this subject, it would seem scarcely possible to doubt that no power whatever over the press was supposed to be delegated by the Constitution as it originally stood and that the amendment was intended as a positive and absolute reservation of it.

But the evidence is still stronger. The proposition of amendments made by Congress is introduced in the following terms:

"The conventions of a number of the States having at the time of their adopting the Constitution expressed a desire, in order to prevent misconstructions or abuse of its powers, that further declaratory and restrictive clauses should be added; and as extending the ground of public confidence in the Government, will best insure the beneficent ends of its institutions."

Here is the most satisfactory and authentic proof that the several amendments proposed were to be considered as either declaratory or restrictive, and, whether the one or the other, as corresponding with the desire expressed by a number of the States and as extending the ground of public confidence in the Government.

Under any other construction of the amendment relating to the press than that it declared the press to be wholly exempt from the power of Congress the amendment could neither be said to correspond with the desire expressed by a number of the States nor be calculated to extend the ground of public confidence in the Government.

Nay, more; the construction employed to justify the "sedition act" would exhibit a phenomenon without parallel in the political world. It would exhibit a number of respectable States as denying, first, that any power over the press was delegated by the Constitution; as proposing next that an amendment to it should explicitly declare that no such power was delegated, and, finally, as concurring in an amendment actually recognizing or delegating such a power.

Let me quote here from the very illuminating speech of Senator BORAH in the Senate on April 19, 1917:

Mr. President, I do not want to take too much of the time in recurring to these historic incidents; but I think it is well to know what was the actual view of those who wrote the Constitution, in order that we may more properly construe its terms. Without insisting that this historic interpretation is to be accepted as the true and final construction, it is exceedingly important in arriving at the true construction.

I have before me Jefferson's Works, volume 18; and in the forefront of that work is an article by the Hon. Josephus Daniels, present Secretary of the Navy, on the subject of "Jefferson's contribution to a free press." It is a very interesting and illuminating article and has a direct bearing on the present question. He quotes at length from Jefferson's view. There can be no doubt as to what Jefferson understood to be the import and purpose of the first amendment, and with him Hamilton entirely agreed, and so did Madison.

Says Jefferson:

"The people are the only censors of their governors; and even their errors will tend to keep them to the true principles of their institution."

In the days of the Civil War, when Mr. Lincoln was being criticized and assailed as no other man in public office ever was by some of the great journals of the country, which are still among our great journals, his reply was that the administrators and administration had better suffer some of the evils and some of the sorrows which accompany such work than that the people should lose control of or forfeit the great benefits flowing from the absolute fredom of the press.

Jefferson and Lincoln both always adhered to the principle that the evils of attempting to restrain the press or speech must be incalculably greater than the evils flowing from their freedom.

Again quoting Mr. Jefferson:

"To punish these errors too severely would be to suppress the only safeguard of the public liberty.

* * * * * * *

"Our liberty depends on the freedom of the press, and that can not be limited without being lost.

* * * * * * *

"The liberty of speaking and writing guards our other liberties."

Says Mr. Daniels himself, in regard to the first amendment:

"For this amendment and the healthy agitation that secured it all men who believe in a free press will ever hold Jefferson in grateful esteem. It was contended that this amendment was wholly unnecessary—'useless surplusage,' as one Federalist declared—but the prophetic eye of the liberty-loving sage of Monticello looked from Paris across the Atlantic and saw that the influences that distrusted the people would muzzle the press unless the Constitution forged chains that would deny power 'abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.'"

Later I may have occasion to refer to this in reference to the sedition laws.

Mr. President, it is my judgment that whatever may be the construction placed upon this provision of the Constitution now, there can be no doubt that those who wrote this instrument thoroughly understood that they were excluding from the National Government all power with reference to the press; that it was a subject matter entirely withdrawn from the National Government. There was no difference of opinion upon that subject among those in the best position to know. The only reason for the first amendment was to prevent a possible construction which might include control of the press as one of the powers which the National Government could exercise. The only difference of opinion was as to whether it was necessary to put into the Constitution an inhibitory power which would prevent a misconstruction of the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have indicated briefly some of the traditions of the past which are all against the adoption of a censorship system. Let us, however, look at the matter from a present-day point of view. If we want the American people to stand firmly behind the Government in the prosecution of this war to a successful issue, the sooner we let them know all of the real facts the sooner they will realize the size of the job we are undertaking and the quicker they will be ready to do their effective bit. But do not deceive yourselves about one thing, and that is they will not fight in the dark. Our people are not servile, willing slaves that will follow blindly at anyone's beck or call; nor are they timid, shrinking souls who can not be trusted with the knowledge that they have a hard battle to fight. And if any further reason against this absurd folly were necessary the consequences on England to-day of a mediæval censorship system should be a sufficient warning for us to profit by.

Let me quote from an editorial in the New York American of April 27, 1917, which is full of patriotic wisdom:

IT IS NEITHER WISE NOR RIGHT TO COMPEL THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO FIGHT THIS TREMENDOUS WAR IN THE DARK.

But when we see the mischief and damage and dangers which our people have suffered through the concealment, falsification, distortion, and garbling of the news and the truth, during more than two years, by the British censorship which has had control of our cables, our mails, our news agencies, and every avenue of information, then we are stirred to strong opposition to this proposed grant of the same powers, to be used in the same harmful way by a department of our own Government.

The British people at this very moment have no conception at all of the true political and military conditions in Europe, owing to the operation of their censorship, and neither have most Americans, for that matter. So far as we know, the only publications in this country which have steadily told the truth about the real conditions are the Hearst publications, and that these publications have had to do under great difficulties, because the British Government has been permitted to deny any American publication the use of the cables, to rifle the mail of any American publication, and to deprive any American publication of its rights under international law, and did do those very things to any American newspaper or other publication which tried to obtain true and reliable news from Europe.

The extent to which this policy of suppression, concealment, falsification, distortion, and garbling has been able to impose on the American people is one of the chief wonders of the war. It probably imposed on the President, upon the Cabinet, and upon Members of the Congress, as well as upon the man in the street, and it is quite possible that even some of the newspapers were imposed upon by the very stuff they were more or less obliged to print.

We call your attention to this extract from the daily report of the World's Washington correspondent, Mr. Louis Seibold, a very capable journalist and high in the good graces of Mr. Wilson, the report appearing under date of April 24:

"The President and his Cabinet this afternoon obtained a clear view of the task confronting the United States in its war against Germany.

"What is required to strengthen the weak links of the narrowing allied ring about the Teutonic forces was brought out in detail for the information of the President and his Cabinet in the memoranda presented by Mr. Balfour and his associates. These necessities were grouped under three general heads. The first, of course, was money; the second, ships to carry to the allies what money will buy, and finally and more remotely, men, if occasion requires.

"The exact situation in Russia and Italy was revealed by no other information previously received.

"Suggestions for relieving these conditions, which admittedly have been the cause of much concern to the allied Governments, were presented with such unmistakable clarity as to confirm the belief that the first country to receive attention should be Russia and the second Italy."

Of one thing we are sure, and that is that the President and the Cabinet have now, for the first time, an adequate conception of European conditions; and the reason they have an adequate conception for the first time is due to the fact that they have persisted in believing the false and utterly untrustworthy reports and so-called "news" with which the British censorship has stuffed American newspapers through its control of the only avenues by which American newspapers could get any news at all from Europe.

And we can not refrain from pointing out that if our Government had firmly insisted upon the inviolability of mails between other countries and ours—a long-established and undeniable neutral right—this abuse of censorship in deceiving and misleading our people would not have been possible.

At this moment Mr. Wilson and his Cabinet know at last whether or not we have been right all the time in denouncing this censorship, in exposing its unscrupulous and lying character, and in warning our Government and our people that they were being constantly deceived as to the real situation of affairs, political and military, in Europe.

If they do not know this, if we have been wrong, if our statements are substantially incorrect, we stand ready and willing to be corrected.

If, on the contrary, the President and his Cabinet do now know that we are, and all the time have been, substantially right in our statements, then it seems to us that the portion of the American people who do not read the Hearst papers have a right to be told the truth by our Government itself—and the right to be guarded against any more such wholesale suppression and falsification of the truth as have marked the whole course of censorship during this war.

We stand upon the broad ground that the American people are the rulers as well as the citizens of this country, and that they have the sovereign right to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about matters which affect their fortunes and their lives and the safety and honor of the Republic.

We appeal to the Congress to kill this contemptible and dangerous espionage bill where it stands.

It is an offense to decency and to our common liberties, and it will become, like the British censorship, an instrument to hoodwink and deceive the American people to their humiliation and undoing—exactly as the English people have been deceived and are deceived at this very moment.

We are not children, that we can not be trusted to know our own business affairs; we are not cowards who dare not be told that we have lost a battle—we Americans.

We are free men—our own sovereigns in our own land—and we insist that there is nothing the Government can possibly know that we have not all of us the right to know, the courage to hear, and the sense to deliberate upon with just as much intelligence and just as good judgment as any of our public servants—President, Cabinet officer, Congressman, or anybody else.

Is not that so, citizens?

I can readily understand one element in our country desiring a censorship and that is the stockjobbers, food manipulators, armor-plate swindlers, and other grafters who scent enormous possibilities during this war. They have succeeded in getting some sort of censorship already, but a kept press is costly, and no matter how much money this precious pack can gather in, they always hate to pay any out, and if they could get the Government to keep the press from giving the news they would be just that much money in.

And then what an orgy of rapacious swindling we would be up against. The Civil War and the Spanish-American War are still fresh in the memories of lots of people, but the performances of the Army contractors of those days would fade into insignificance if the lid was put on all independent criticism and this hungry horde were left to work their own sweet will. Can not any intelligent man draw a picture of what will happen?

Shoddy uniforms to brave the rigors of winter, paper-soled shoes to wade in the swampy trenches, embalmed beef and other delectables to feed on, defective armor plate on our ships—oh, it is a beautiful picture. And if anyone dared to say a protesting word or print a line of intelligent criticism, to jail with the traitor. Verily, this is in truth "the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Now, let us examine another feature. Along with the censorship I suppose we will have the same kind of publicity that we have been getting. Everywhere we would see headlines announcing that the enemy had suffered a crushing defeat; that the war would soon be over; that this line or that line had been pierced, and so on ad libitum. And the weeks and months would grow into years and we would be asked just for a few more billions of dollars, just for a few more million soldiers, and yet the truth would be withheld, and our boys would be sent to slaughter without knowing or comprehending the game they were up against.

I say this is an insult to the intelligence of the American people. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," should be the eternal motto of a democratic government.

Let me quote right here from another editorial in the New York American of May 1, 1917:

* * * * * * *

We have never believed, nor do we ever mean to try to believe that any national good—military or economic or political—can be achieved by telling lies and by a general deception of the people.

That is the most false, foolish, and mischevious policy that can possibly be adopted by a government, either in peace or in war.

Let him who doubts that look at England, in her distress and peril, crying to us for help to save her from the deadly strangle hold of the German submarines, and then remember that if the English and American peoples had been told the whole truth for months past they could have saved enough food and stored enough food to have carried England through her peril.

But the inconceivable stupidity and fatuous folly that persisted in deriding the danger, in concealing the conditions, in buoying up the people with false reports of victory, and bragging prophecies of their enemies' imminent ruin, persisted day after day—and day after day England went on wasting its precious food, jeering at the careful and provident Germans, talking of its invincible navy's ability to destroy any puny menace of submarine boats, denouncing wise and prudent men's warnings as the utterances of faint hearts and disloyal tongues until now, astonished, dazed, and helpless, the English people have waked to the terrible truth that the German submarines have England by the throat and will choke her into defeat unless we—the despised Yankee dollar chasers—save her from her doom.

That is what the fatuous and idiotic censorship has done for England.

That is the disastrous result of the so-called patriotism which denounces truth-telling as disloyal—which waves flags and brags about licking all creation, when it ought to be planting potatoes and preparing for the future.

That is what comes of the idiotic folly of belittling the power and skill and bravery of strong and wise enemies.

That is what comes of jeering at and denouncing the warnings of loyal men and newspapers who have sense enough to perceive facts and to forecast emergencies.

That is what comes of senseless lying, of still more senseless bragging, of yet more senseless refusal to recognize danger and to prepare for it before it comes.

Countrymen, incredible as it seems, it is now proposed to follow that same identical policy of concealment in this country.

As a matter of fact, that same identical policy is being followed.

In a very large measure, your newspapers are still at the mercy of the same British censorship which has brought England to the verge of defeat and ruin.

You are being deceived every day as to the military and political situations in Europe, because your newspapers are filled with the colored, distorted, garbled, and frequently false narratives of the war's progress which alone are permitted to pass, either by cable or by mail, through the hands of this stupid and arbitrary London censorship.

And now we are told that another censorship like it is needed in America.

If these men who, unhappily for the sad and wretched earth, have the fate of nations in their hands really did possess that broad statesmanship which wisely looks ahead, which trusts in its people's courage and intelligence, the last vestige of censorship would be removed before the sun sets this night. The whole truth, the bad as well as the good, would be spread before the peoples of France and England and America, open as the daylight, for their inspection and their information, so that they, who have to pay the huge money cost and shed the streams of blood which this terrible and awful war demands, might know the extent of their task, the extent of the sacrifices to be made, and, so knowing, brace themselves to do or die, courageously and intelligently, and not go like dumb cattle, driven in herds to die, they know not why nor for what.

The fundamentals of liberty are freedom of speech and freedom of printing.

These two necessities and guaranties of freedom are just as essential to the intelligent conduct of war, by a democracy, as they are essential to the intelligent conduct of peace.

If the Congress shuts its eyes and ears to all the piled-up evidence of the mischief and disasters wrought by espionage and censorship abroad, and inflicts upon our own country this stupid and criminal blunder by passing the espionage bill, we do not see what possible excuse they can find in the day of reckoning that must surely come.

For nothing can be more certain than that this war must end, that these times of excitement must be succeeded by times of calmness, that everything which is now done in haste and amid hurrahs, must be explained to a people who will no longer be hurrahing, who will have learned what haste and blunders cost and who will not be in a mild mood or a pleasant mood.

The Congressman who votes right upon the espionage bill and other bills may not be popular at this time, but he will hear his people's plaudits some day

Kill this espionage bill, gentlemen of the Congress.

You know it is wrong and un-American and offensive to all the instincts of a free people, don't you?

Then kill it.

It is very difficult to understand why any statesman who is at all familiar with American citizenship should desire a censorship. We have plenty of laws now to punish treason and prevent espionage if they were properly enforced. I will insert here a clipping from the Milwaukee News of April 30, 1917, which is pertinent to the subject:

THE WHY OF THE LAW.

The censorship bill which would muzzle the American press and stifle all attempts at criticism that fail to meet the approval of the powers that be, has aroused such a storm of disapproval that the President seeks to allay popular indignation at this glaring attempt to void constitutional rights, by pledging that he himself will under no circumstances apply the rigid measure to prevent criticism of himself as an official. The President, in a letter to a New York editor, says:

"I approve this legislation, but * * * so far as I personally am concerned, I shall not expect or permit any part of this law to apply to me or any of my official acts in any way to be used as a shield against criticism"

If the law is not to be enforced, then why enact it? If the measure Mr. Wilson approves is to be nullified in advance of passage by presidential decision, then why the law?

And even if the President personally will not wield the unconstitutional club to muzzle the press, what guaranty have the American people that no other official will wield it? And even if Mr. Wilson pledges that neither he, his official family, nor any other Federal officials shall be permitted to gag the press, the utter asininity of passing a law that by presidential decree is guaranteed enforcement—proof still remains to challenge the sanity of Congress and the administration.

The very fact that leaders pledge not to enforce a law is a confession of fear that the law itself will not hold water. And by what right does an Executive, who is sworn to enforce the law, set himself as a judge as to whether or not a law shall be enforced?

The whole program to muzzle the press seems to smack of unconstitutionality, tyranny, and deceit.

Mr. Speaker, it is very distasteful for me to be compelled to vote against any war measure. I have always believed in absolute loyalty to America and believe in it still. I know no other country; I am not deeply concerned in any other country; but as long as I remain in Congress I will continue to vote against any proposition, war measure or no war measure, that seeks to place upon the shoulders of my countrymen any of the repressive statutes that have made the Old World suffer for centuries.

I do not believe the fetters have yet been forged to chain the spirit of American liberty, and I for one will not help to forge them.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID A. HOLLINGSWORTH,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under general leave to extend remarks I desire to add a few words to what I said on this bill in the House on Wednesday, April 25, page 1113 of the RECORD.

I then, with a full realization of my words and after much consideration and thought, said:

I can not vote for this bill if its volunteering features are stricken out as proposed; I will vote for it if such features are retained.

My convictions of duty in this regard as thus expressed have grown and strengthened with the masterful discussion of the subject pro and con, to which I have listened with care, on the floor of the House; and, much as I would like to be able to agree with a few sincere friends in my district who have written me differently, urging that I ought to give up my own convictions of a lifetime and as a Member of Congress automatically register the will of the General Staff of an army soon, as I believe, to be reorganized on a Prussianized basis, I can not so do. I may be wrong, but every instinct within me rebels at such humiliation. I would rather resign and let the people back home send to Washington a more subservient tool of militarism.

A large conscript army organized as must be done under this bill, permanently to be kept in service as a standing army after peace has come, is, in my judgment, the end of free institutions in America, destructive of that form of government which Lincoln in his inspired words at Gettysburg said our forefathers had brought forth on this continent and which he and other sturdy, unflinching American patriots have ever since maintained without foreign cooperation or entanglements. I know the ready answer to this is that, as our country is at war, no citizen should haggle as to means. In a sense this is true; but, on the other hand, the same majority vote that strikes down the volunteering system in favor of an exclusive conscript system will be able to pass the bill, however radical its tendency toward militarism, and the responsibility for the measure must and should rest with such majority. I do not wish to aid by my vote in robbing anyone of this distinction. The rules of the House very properly provide for just such contingency, and a member of the minority, feeling as I do about the situation, may by answering "Present" when his name is called show and thus record the fact that he opposes only a part of the bill, leaving its good and bad features to be approved by an already ascertained majority. No other vote is possible in explanation of vital issues of conscience when they arise with men of conviction and honesty of purpose; but this does not absolve the dissenting minority from further duty in regard to the bill or from aiding the majority in efforts to perfect it by fair consideration of its other provisions. Accordingly, although this vital question of the right and duty of the citizen to voluntarily enlist, if he desires, without being conscripted, in defense of his country when assailed, has been stricken from the bill by a decisive majority in favor of organizing our American armies on a conscript, militaristic basis; yet I have and shall continue my best efforts in aiding to perfect the bill in a number of other important respects which the discussion has developed to be faulty, although it is admitted to have been drawn by the scientific "high-brows" of the General Staff:

In the minority report, headed by Mr. KAHN, it is said:

The bill as originally forwarded to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was drafted in the War Department and has the approval of the Commander in Chief of the Army, his civilian representative, the Secretary of War, and the officers of the General Staff and the Staff Corps. The military officers are the experts of the Government in military matters. It is to them the Nation will look for the organization and the conduct in the field of our armies in the present war. The study of military plans and problems constitutes their life work. On the other hand, the members of the Committee on Military Affairs are laymen. They are not military men. And yet the majority of the committee have seen fit to set their own views on the raising of the proper military forces for the successful conduct of the war above the views of the trained military experts of the Government.

We are expected to accept mandates as to this legislation from the War Department without question or individual thought of our own; expected to abrogate our functions as representatives of the people. No one is to question the wisdom of the genial gentleman in the War Department, although recently appointed from civil life.

But do the facts connected with the drafting of this bill warrant belief in its author's infallibility or in that of the General Staff who are supposed to assist him?

The discussion of the bill had not proceeded far until a mistake of $3,000,000,000 was discovered and on motion stricken out by a large majority. So much for one item of saving by vigilance of House Members in refusing to adopt blindly the suggestions of the Army experts. In speaking in favor of this motion, its author, Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the powerful Appropriations Committee, a most level-headed leader on the Democratic side of the House, used these words:

The sum of $3,000,000,000 is placed in the hands of a single official of this Government to be expended by him in his discretion, without any restriction or limitation whatever on his power. It is a greater sum and a greater power than has ever been committed to any one man in any country in the history of the world. It is practically three times the entire annual cost of the Federal Government up to within a few years. * * * This is not all. * * * This is a critical time for us. We are guardians of the public purse. We should give every dollar essential for the proper conduct of the war, but we should not, in the guise of doing so, surrender the most precious right reserved to the representatives of the American people—the control of the public funds.

Of course, I voted for this amendment, although having made up my mind as a matter of vital principle not to vote for the final passage of the bill unless its volunteering features should be restored. Amendments of this character certainly tend to improve a bill, and they should be supported by Members favoring them without regard to their intentions as to final action on the measure.

In like manner and for like purpose I shall support or oppose other amendments according to my best judgment of their merits.

I voted for an amendment to authorize the President to have a division of volunteers organized, distinctly to be enlisted, not drafted, for foreign service, and to be led by a former Commander in Chief of the Army, Theodore Roosevelt, whose judgment to-day ought to be as reliable as that of a civilian Secretary of War, and who is still young and vigorous and willing to lead his volunteer followers, if need be, on foreign soil into the jaws of death, anywhere they may be ordered, in defense of American rights or the honor of Old Glory. We can not think of a man of his type leading an army of conscripts; they are not as a rule of his way of thinking or fighting, and no amount of training can imbue them with the independent self-respecting spirit of an intelligent volunteer. As well imagine George Washington leading a band of hired Hessians as of Theodore Roosevelt leading an army of unthinking conscripts. Brains and brawn and bravery are characteristic of Roosevelt's followers; they believe in his personal integrity and patriotic purpose. They are anxious to follow his banner, answer to his bugle call, and, if denied, as now seems probable, I predict that the refusal of the War Department and Congress to allow Col. Roosevelt to call around him an army of such men, willing and glad to go with him into the trench fighting of Europe, will be resented sooner or later by the American people. One word of command from him to a division of American volunteers on any of the bloody battle fields of Europe would be cheering to our allies and be worth more to humanity than all the conscript armies our infallible Secretary of War can draft into the service.

Amendments to the bill of possibly less importance have been adopted and there is now no doubt of the measure being in better form than when it came fresh from the red-tape rooms of the General Staff with the military stamp of perfection upon it.

The age limit has been raised to 40, making it apply to men and not alone to schoolboys; the pay of $15 per month for private soldiers has been doubled, and the hiring of substitutes has been forbidden. All in all, it has been much improved, and but for my unalterable objection to conscription without first giving the citizen an opportunity to volunteer, I should be glad to vote for the bill in its entirety.

One amendment for which I have voted somewhat doubtfully is worthy of special mention. It gives to the President authority to exempt from the draft features all persons engaged in agriculture without regard to the length of time they shall have been so engaged. Such provision may develop a back to the farm stampede, but I hardly think it will. The farmer boys of my district, the eighteenth Ohio, blessed with pure air, good health, and hardy constitutions, patriotically alert mentally, and without enervating habits of idleness, are as brave, courageous, athletic, and venturesome as their village or city neighbors, and I prophesy that this gracious tenderness toward them will fail of its purpose, and that, like Putnam from the plow and the Minute Men of Lexington, the farmer boys of 1917, as in every war of the Republic, will find some way of getting to the front with their rugged fighting spirit, and when the war ends, as it will in victory for the American Army, they will have won imperishable honors and the lasting gratitude of the Government and people. They belong naturally at the front like Col. Roosevelt, and are likely in the end to resent any attempt to classify them as mollycoddles.

Nor is the proposed mobilization of farm products and farm activities, of which we hear rumors from the same sources whence came the influence back of the conscription movement, likely to be satisfactory to the farming classes. Men of mature years, accustomed to think for themselves in their own business and transact it according to their own ideas, are not likely to look kindly upon a shoulder-strapped deputy when he comes round to inspect and order them in regard to ordinary details.

But it is perhaps better not to speculate as to the future. No one in Washington seems to be able to tell what a day or an hour may bring forth.

As this discussion draws to a close it has become apparent that the American volunteer system, successful heretofore in all our wars, is to be stricken down. The militaristic conscription system is to be substituted in its place as the future military policy of the Republic by influences powerful enough in this House to override the earnest pleadings of our honored Speaker, former Speaker CANNON, the chairmen of both the Military and Naval Committees, the majority leader, Mr. KITCHIN, Dr. FESS, Mr. MONDELL, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and many other leaders of experience and conscience.

In conclusion, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a last word on this subject to fellow Members of this House, whose good opinions I value, and to my constituents. By constituents I mean the sturdy, intelligent citizenship of a district far above the average, some of whom, with candid sincerity, which I highly appreciate, have sent me telegrams and letters containing views radically differing from my own conclusions. I do not mean alone the few who, not subject to conscription themselves, have suddenly assumed patriotic prominence by sending sensational telegrams and communications urging, in some instances under penalty of political ostracism, that I support their ideas without regard to my own reasoning or judgment. By constituents I also mean real constituents who have no selfish motives to subserve in favoring conscription as against volunteering, and to these I say that while my feelings and convictions are unalterably opposed to forcible conscription until opportunity be afforded for volunteer enlistments, yet my opposition to this feature of the bill shall not weaken my support of the administration program in other respects. If a law favoring conscription and leading to permanent militarism be enacted, I shall stand ready to vote full power to the President to exhaust, if necessary, all the resources of a brave, free people, all the resources of the Government in men and money, to bring the war to a successful conclusion. My loyalty does not depend upon the form of government of which I am a citizen. Citizenship with me implies duty; and if my worst fears shall be realized and this proposed change in the basic methods of the Republic shall be accomplished and the ideals of Washington, Lincoln, and McKinley be Prussianized in fact, I shall still be an American, pure and simple, hoping and trusting that the God of our fathers may go with and watch over our beloved land and people on the imperial highway of the Cæsars and eventually save them from the fate that overwhelmed ancient Rome.

Resolution Indorsing the President.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
OF OHIO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, April 19, 1917.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution unanimously adopted at meeting of Kirkup Lodge, No. 401, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Ohio.

The resolution is as follows:

KIRKUP LODGE, No. 401, I. O. O. F.,
Norwood, Ohio, April 10.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Last night the following resolution was unanimously adopted at meeting of Kirkup Lodge, No. 401, a copy of which resolution I am mailing to you, and we trust that you will see to it that the same may appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This is one of the largest Odd Fellow lodges in the State of Ohio, and some of the boys have already enlisted in the service of their country.

Loyally, yours,
[SEAL.] C. S. BURDSALL,
Recording Secretary.

Whereas it is the duty of every patriotic citizen or organization to proclaim the ideals of justice and righteousness to all mankind in the support of a just and upright cause: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That Kirkup Lodge, No. 401, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in meeting assembled, stand firmly back of the President of the United States of America in his attitude toward the central powers and pledges to the President and the country its unqualified support and the individual support of its members in order that peace and righteousness may soon reign upon this earth again, when brother shall not take up arms against brother and when the teachings of Odd Fellowship shall control in the council hall of the nations; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the records of this organization and that a copy of the same be sent to the President of the United States of America and to our Representative in Congress, and that copies of the same be published in each of the Norwood newspapers.

Very respectfully, F. W. LERSCH, Noble Grand.

Attest:
[SEAL.] C. S. BURDSALL, Secretary.

The Cost and Value of Food.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES B. ASWELL,
OF LOUISIANA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 5, 1917.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the urgent necessity of utilizing the scientific knowledge available in combining our wholesome vegetable and animal oils, milk and cream, into edible foods that are more reasonable in price and at the same time most sanitary and wholesome.

This is not a time to talk in general terms. The demand is for definite plans to meet the world food shortage.

I have to-day introduced a bill in the House to authorize the agricultural colleges and experiment stations to teach, free of license or tax, the use and advantages of our vegetable and animal oils and the art of scientifically combining them into palatable food products.

In the national food campaign no question is of more importance than the matter contained in this bill. I appeal especially to the South for cooperation and assistance in the realization of this idea. There is a tremendous world's shortage of all kinds of edible fats, and it was because of a similar emergency that France in 1871 offered a reward for a practical way of combining animal and vegetable oils with milk and cream, which resulted in the creation of margarine, now accepted throughout the world as a food necessity, but knowledge as to the manufacture of which is limited in this country.

The South produces annually 1,450,000,000 pounds of cottonseed oil, 50,000,000 pounds of peanut oil, 10,000,000 pounds of creamery butter, and 1,000,000 pounds of margarine.

Holland, one of the greatest dairy countries in the world, produces (vegetable oils all imported) 286,000,000 pounds of margarine.

Twenty pounds of oil properly churned in milk enough to make 1 pound of butter will make about 23 pounds of margarine.

Why should not the South's agricultural colleges teach the science and art of producing margarine?

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Bulletin No. 469—page 7—gives the food value of vegetable fats as 4,080 calories per pound, and—page 12—when these vegetable fats are churned in milk with animal fats, thus making oleomargarine, the food value is given as 3,500 calories per pound. The food value of butter—page 7—is given as 3,490 calories per pound.

Bulletin No. 505 gives the digestive availability—page 18—of peanut oil at 98.3 per cent, of cottonseed oil at 97.8 per cent, of olive oil at 97.8 per cent, of cocoanut oil 97.9 per cent, of sesame oil 98 per cent.

Bulletin No. 507 gives the digestive availability—page 18—of butter fat in cream at 96.9 per cent, of brisket fat 97.4 per cent.

Certain substances have been found in milk, apparently of lipoid nature, necessary in human food to maintain health and growth. It has also been found that the seat of this "food accessory" is not in the fat itself, but the casein solution mixed with it; and that margarine, produced by churning vegetable oils in milk, carries a higher percentage of this "food accessory" than is carried in butter, the percentages being in butter four-tenths of 1 per cent and in margarine nine hundred and seventy-five thousandths of 1 per cent. Prof. E. V. McCollum has found by experiment that 5 per cent of butter added to otherwise desirable food furnishes about the required amount of this accessory food substance to promote growth.

Prof. L. V. Allyn says:

Cottonseed oil is an excellent food product and has practically the same food value as olive oil.

Dr. William Brady says:

Peanut oil is as nourishing as olive oil. Food value for food value, peanuts are cheaper than bread.

Senate Document No. 141, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, "Adulteration of Food Products," page 47:

Prof. Atwater says that margarine is perfectly wholesome and has a high nutritious value. Prof. Schweitzer states that careful physiological experiments reveal no difference whatever in palatability and digestibility between butter and the brand of margarine which he has examined. Prof. Baker considers margarine quite as valuable a nutritive agent as butter. Prof. Johnson says that for all ordinary and culinary purposes it is the full equivalent of good butter made from cream. He regards the manufacture of margarine as a legitimate and beneficent industry. Prof. Jolles says that pure margarine is as digestible and nutritive as pure butter. Dr. Ames declares that the manufacture of margarine in properly constructed factories is much cleaner than the manufacture of butter. He says: "It should be more generally used and not looked upon as an inferior article and makeshift for butter, when it is really superior."

The pressing demand for food is every day now being brought to our attention by our own experiences, by the constant newspaper attention to the subject, and by the appeal of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States. The inadequate supply of butter is well known.

Consideration of the facts relating to the food situation of the country, the food materials produced by that part of the country in which southern agricultural colleges are located, and the duties and opportunities of these colleges with respect thereto is a duty resting heavily upon trustees, faculties, and patrons.

Those parts of the South devastated by the boll weevil are beginning to produce large quantities of peanuts, from which it is said the most excellent food oil is expressed, and for which a good and permanent market should be provided. The peanut hay is easily and profitably used for cattle, and the peanut cake or meal is high-class feed for all kinds of live stock. Hogs are necessary to use that portion of the crop left in the ground.

Those sections not yet reached by the weevil must be relied on to supply the necessities for cotton. For many years, and even now to some extent, a mysterious prejudice has existed against cottonseed oil as food, but the most exhaustive investigations by the highest authorities have demonstrated that cottonseed oil has food value fully equal to that of peanut or olive oil or any of the animal oils. Cottonseed meal has also been demonstrated to belong among the high-class concentrated feeds. Millions of tons both of the oil suitable for food purposes and the meal and hulls suitable for feed purposes are produced annually by southern people. An overwhelming majority of them are engaged in such production.

As an outgrowth of these feed productions and the adaptability of the climate, the growth of cattle for dairying purposes and of cattle and hogs for slaughtering purposes is steadily increasing, calling for new activities and markets. Encouraged by this call, a number of creameries have been established and several packing houses. These packing houses ought to produce certain quantities of oleo oil and neutral lard, which are the choicest food oils, from the beef and the pig.

The oils referred to, viz, peanut, cottonseed, oleo, and neutral, are relatively newly discovered foods. They are all nearly tasteless. In order, therefore, to be of the highest value they must be combined with other food materials. While each of them possesses a greater energy-producing value than butter, they do not possess the desirable flavor of properly made butter. They will when properly churned in milk, however, combine with butter to produce a pleasing, palatable table food of high nutritious value. This combination is legally designated as oleomargarine and can not lawfully be made except under inspection of the Federal Government.

Due to conditions which need not here be detailed, southern butter and southern oils are each marketed in their simple forms, and, of course, are less valuable both to the producer and the consumer in such forms, just as all other marketable products. There has been no education of southern people either as to methods of producing desirable combinations of these food fats or the value of such combinations. This industry has been developed only in the great dairying and packing sections of the country, and vegetable oils are shipped to those sections and the people of these sections largely use the product. Every oleomargarine plant must have dairy routes to supply the large quantities of milk and cream needed.

Here in the South all the elements of margarine are produced by practically all the people. We do not know how to use them in combination. The agricultural colleges were founded primarily to develop agriculture. They owe an impartial duty to each class of producers—whether they be producers of peanut oil or cottonseed oil or animal oil or butter—to teach the children of the South how to produce the largest quantities of raw materials and the most skillful and useful combinations of these materials.

In the matter under consideration it clearly appears that practically all southern people have a common interest—the cotton planter, the peanut producer, the live-stock raiser, the consumer. It seems plain, therefore, that the southern agricultural colleges should consider their duty and their opportunity to teach those members of the student body who desire to learn the scientific and practical methods of producing from the materials under consideration the best forms of food possible rather than limit their efforts to the one item of butter.

If this duty and opportunity are clear, then the means must be found. To this end the need must be brought to the attention of the country. When fully advised of any line of usefulness along which these colleges may travel, the people have generously opened the way. No doubt they will do so in this instance; and there is no doubt that the United States Department of Agriculture, under whose supervision all margarine must be made, will lend every possible support.

To do this new work will require some extension of the creamery equipment of the various colleges. It will enable the colleges to cooperate much more substantially with their dairy routes and will require but little, if any, modification of the agricultural, live stock, and chemical departments.

Shall the United States, and particularly the South, lose this opportunity to benefit by the experience of France in a great war emergency not only to conserve but to increase the use of its wholesome vegetable and animal oils, milk, and cream? Should we not take fullest advantage of the war-born invention which has been proved by 45 years of experience to be one of the great sources of food, and should we not teach its manufacture in the broadest possible way, that our people and the people of all friendly nations may have an increased supply of the edible fats which are an absolute necessity to life itself?

Universal Service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE R. LUNN,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Speaker, in presenting a petition containing the names of 2,000,000 people favoring universal service I addressed the House as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, I was compelled to differ with the conclusions of the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. I fought as a member of the minority for the President's plan of an army based on the universal liability to service. Our minority bill will pass. It is being supported regardless of party affiliation. I have received hundreds of petitions urging that Congress support the President's plan. This petition is the largest petition ever presented to the House, so far as I know.

"All these men of splendid public spirit who, without regard to politics, have come to the support of the President in this hour of national crisis, are to be congratulated that an effective law whereby an army can be raised has been passed.

"One of the sacred rights of every citizen is that of petition to Congress, and I trust that this House will not be unmindful of the fact that these 2,000,000 signers are desirous of universal service based on the principle of democracy. I like the idea, which is the true one, of having the people tell their representatives what they want us to do, rather than for the representatives to force upon the people our own will.

"In times of war we must center all our thoughts and plans on a successful prosecution of the war. I would not have this army, however, solely for military effect, even in time of peace. I would not have it trained solely for war. I would not have the precious years of millions of our youths devoted to the one item of learning how to kill, no matter how necessary the killing might be.

"A really democratic army, I believe, could be devoted to public service of other kinds. There are other enemies of democracy besides foreign powers; there are other crises besides those that arise from foreign threats. There is hunger in the United States, and poverty. There are slums in our cities unfit to shelter a single human child.

"And yet there are vast stretches of desert territory which only need the magic touch of labor, directed by intelligent engineers, to turn them into fruitful lands.

"Our forests need protection—from plutocrats and other vandals. We need better railroads and harbors and canals. There are ever so many things which a great army might help us do if we will only take it over to the service of democracy.

"As for defense, I believe with all my heart that America is worth defending. If I did not think so, I might oppose preparedness. This is one of the psychological facts which I hope to help Congress to see, for if I were born in a dark tenement, half starved through youth, and denied the right to work in manhood, I might not think America worth defending. There are thousands still to whom America has meant just that, and it is utter foolishness to expect them to be patriotic.

"The best preparedness we can undertake is to make the country worth loving and worth dying for. A thorough program of preparedness must include the mobilization and development of all our resources, and, most important of all, the human element.

"If we are going to develop sturdy youth, the handicaps of poverty, sickness, and unemployment must be removed. These are social problems which can easily be solved by a willing acceptance on the part of the people of our social responsibility.

"A democratic army could do much toward making our country worth dying for. This is not Utopian. It is practical politics. It was the Army organization that enabled us to build the Panama Canal and turn a fever-stricken belt into a health resort. It is all wrong to suppose that an army must spend its time in ceremonies and dress parades. We should make it work, and we should make that work as honorable as any heroism on the battle field.

"I want a citizen army that will make for citizenship, an army that I will want my son to join. I believe we can have an army that parents generally will be glad to have their sons enlisted in. Just as they now say proudly, 'Our boy is in Harvard,' they may then be saying with equal pride, 'Our boy is in the Army of the United States.'

"The citizen army should be a training school in which the young man can develop the best that is in him, and in which he will constantly be giving that best to the immediate needs of his fatherland. As in Switzerland, the mere military drill should take but little time; the major portion of the training should be training for everyday citizenship and social service."

Telegram from the Governing Board of the Los Angeles Home Garden Committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY Z. OSBORNE,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 5, 1917.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I request permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by reproducing a telegram from the governing board of the Los Angeles home garden committee, which shows the extent to which this organization is increasing the supply of food by encouraging the planting of home gardens and vacant lots in a large city:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 2, 1917.

Hon. H. Z. OSBORNE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The home garden committee of Los Angeles, Cal., appointed by Mayor Woodman, has for 10 weeks been carrying on a most active campaign to encourage the planting of home gardens and vacant lots, and we intend to make Los Angeles city the biggest small garden farm in the United States. We are supplying free garden seed to an average of 500 people every day, and there are ten times as many home gardens planted in Los Angeles as in any previous year. We consider this the most practical form of efficient patriotism in the present emergency of world-wide shortage in food and labor. You can promise the President and the Congress of the United States that the people of Los Angeles will do and are doing their part to the utmost limit. Send us as many copies as possible of the Government bulletin entitled "The Small Vegetable Garden." We can use 10,000.

GOVERNING BOARD LOS ANGELES HOME GARDEN COMMITTEE, LUTHER G. BROWN, Chairman.

Resolutions Adopted By the National Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH McLAUGHLIN,

OF PENNSYLVANIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I take the liberty of inserting the resolutions adopted by the national board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians at a meeting held in this city on May 2, 1917.

These resolutions are as follows:

Resolved, That an assessment sufficient to realize a fund of $500,000 be levied on the membership of the order, and payable before September 1, 1917, the same to be used in caring for the families of those members who are serving, or who will hereafter serve, in the armies and Navy of our country in the great world war into which it has just entered, said fund to be disbursed by the national officers; and be it also

Resolved, That all members of the order whose means will permit be, and hereby are, requested to make such voluntary contributions to that great cause—a cause that aims to secure world-wide freedom and permanent world peace—as will insure the raising of at least a million dollars in all.

The following resolutions were also adopted:

Whereas the confluence of the sentiment of free nations bears triumphantly forward the spirit of Irish liberty, exhibiting in this magnificent land that historical and traditional sympathy which has ever linked the peoples of America and Ireland in a generous friendship; and

Whereas recent events of mighty significance touch not only the fate of the people of Ireland, not only the principles of the people of America, not only the aspirations of followers of freedom of every land but also influence the destinies of the human race, and these events culminating in the refusal of the British Government to establish an Irish parliament imperil the cause in which the United States is engaged by denying the claims of the oldest of the small nations: It is therefore

Resolved, That the President and Government of the United States are hereby memorialized to use all those friendly influences and good offices permitted by the customs of diplomacy to secure at once such action by the British Government as shall restore self-government to Ireland, placing in full operation a parliament having legislative authority over every rood of Irish soil, over every individual whose life is cast in that country, and over every department of national activity which is necessary to promote the prosperity, the happiness, and the safety of a united people; and it is further

Resolved. That this board requests the President and Government of the United States to present the claims of Ireland to complete national independence at the peace conference to be held at the close of the world war, confident that the justice of the cause of Ireland will enlist the same generous encouragement that has been given to the cause of Poland, the restoration of whose freedom is advocated by the President, and the cause of Belgium, Serbia, and Roumania, for the freedom of which the United States is now marshaling its armies and assembling its fleets. The action of the United States in assuming the advocacy of Irish independence would complete the analogy of history, for in 1777 the Continental Congress thanked the people of Ireland for their sympathy; during the Revolution no voice was raised in more powerful vehemence for the liberties of America than the voice of the Irish orator and statesman, Edmund Burke; in the armies and navies of the revolted Colonies there were throngs of Irishmen; in all our wars, on every page of our annals, in the very texture of our American people the blood of Ireland gleams in eager service in all that contributes to the power and glory of this great Republic. The peace conference in examining the claims of Ireland to national independence will have within the scope of its vision a nation geographically complete, a people possessing a history reaching back to the early ages of civilization, a people whose soldiers have written their names in the records of many armies, whose statesmen have lent their intellects to the service of many nations, and whose fitness for independence is not only vindicated by every material evidence but also by the unexampled survival, through 800 years of undaunted effort, of the precious ideal of ultimate national freedom. We are confident that the peace conference will join the hands of the democracy of America and the democracy of Ireland. We are sanguine that the statesmen who will rearrange the affairs of mankind will recognize that the Irish question is not a religious question, for the patriots of Ireland have been, and are, of all religions; it is not a political question, for the narrow sphere of politics can not bind within its limits the world-wide aspirations of the Irish race. It is an exalted moral question, exhibiting in all its aspects the unchanging truth that no question is ever settled until it is settled right. The Irish question must be settled right. The Irish people in every land are thrilled by the prospect of a free Ireland at the peace conference, where they hope that the hand of the most powerful of the free nations will break the chain that for dark centuries has fettered the aspirations of their island home.

Right Rev. D. J. O'Connell, national chaplain; Joseph McLaughlin, national president; Patrick F. Cannon, national vice president; Peter J. Doyle, Canadian vice president; Thomas J. Mathews, national secretary; Michael W. Delaney, national treasurer; Philip J. Sullivan, Edward R. Hayes, John E. Healy, and Myles F. McPartland, national directors; and John O'Dea, national historian.

I have no desire to comment on the resolutions; they clearly express the sentiment and the feelings of the members of the organization represented by the board, and require no extended elaboration. The members of the organization understand fully and definitely where their first duty lies in this crisis, and they are prepared to discharge that duty on this occasion as they have on every occasion in the past when the supreme test of patriotism was required, and as they will on every future occasion that calls for the same test. Their record has been too often written and proclaimed to make it either necessary or desirable that I should call special attention to it now. It has occurred to me, however, that the insertion of these resolutions at this time, setting forth what the Ancient Order of Hibernians—of which I have the honor to be the national president—purpose doing in the way of looking after the dependents of those who may give up their lives in the struggle that is before us, may be an incentive to other organizations, equally patriotic and equally anxious to do their full share of the work, to take the same or similar action.

I desire also, Mr. Speaker, to say just a word on section 4 of the bill that the House has to-day been considering, although I realize that it is largely a work of supererogation to attempt to add anything to what has been said in opposition to that section by my distinguished and eloquent colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM]. Nevertheless, I feel that I would be false to my convictions were I to fail to record in this formal way my opposition to that section of the bill. Few of our institutions—perhaps none of them—have been guarded more jealously than that which concerns the freedom of the press. To place restrictions upon it, even in a time like the present, seems like weakening a structure that has hitherto been considered well-nigh indestructible. The newspapers of the country surely can be depended upon not to abuse the trust that is placed in them. The menace of this section is not needed to point out to them that which is a prime and patriotic duty. No agency is or can be more effective than the newspaper in stimulating the patriotic impulses of the people, and a suggested restriction upon its prerogatives seems like an uncalled-for and unmerited attack on its honesty and patriotism.

There is no suggestion, of course, that the power which this section proposes to confer upon the President would be or might be used by him in any other way than to protect and advance the country's interests. His course in the past with respect to the momentous questions that have engaged his attention almost since the first day of his inauguration is the best guarantee of what is to be expected from him in the future. It would therefore be idle to speculate on what his course might be if this power is conferred upon him, since we know it would be used wisely. But notwithstanding this certainty of what his position would be, I believe that this—one of our most cherished ideals—should not be suspended or interfered with even in such trying times as these, but rather that we should trust to the honesty and patriotism of those whose privilege it is not only to help mold public opinion, but to keep an ever-watchful eye on the things for which this great Republic stands, and one of the most cherished of these is the freedom of the press.

There is another section of the bill, Mr. Speaker, which I feel constrained to notice, and which, it seems to me, should have been eliminated. I refer to section 704, page 53, of the bill as reported to the House. Under that section, if I interpret it correctly, it will no longer be permissible for people to applaud or give encouragement to the oppressed people of other lands who are striving to achieve for themselves some measure at least of the liberty that we enjoy. I can not believe that this is a step in the right direction. On the contrary, it seems to me like getting away from another ideal which has been part of our country's glory. It would seem as though another historic landmark has been swept away. It has always been our privilege as well as our proud boast that we have extended the hand of fellowship and the kindly greeting and sympathy to every people, wheresoever they be, who are struggling to set up a government of their own and to work out their destiny in such ways as suited them. Few perhaps have contended more firmly for this very principle than President Wilson himself, and to abolish that privilege, or even to curtail it, is like giving up one of the things that have enshrined our country and its citizens in the hearts of the people of every known section of the world where history is read and where the records and achievements of the human race are studied.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GILBERT N. HAUGEN,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is safe to say that never has a bill or a committee been more misrepresented than the pending bill and the majority members of the committee. The people and the country have been made to believe that Congress is about to determine whether the proposed army of 1,900,000 is to be raised under a volunteer or conscription policy. Hundreds of communications and copies of resolutions passed by patriotic meetings have been received by many, if not all, Members of Congress, many of them demanding conscription; many for voluntary enlistment; others demanding conscription pure and simple and at the same time expressing the belief that Col. Roosevelt's offer to raise an army to go into service against the enemy should be accepted. Col. Roosevelt's volunteer army is now reported to be about 123,000; that would make it about 94 per cent conscription and 6 per cent volunteer.

Members have argued the question just as if we had two pure and simple propositions presented to us in the two propositions under consideration and that an opportunity will be given us to vote and decide the question whether the proposed army shall be raised by one or the other. No such bill has been submitted or suggested by the President, by the War Department, or the majority members of the committee. What are the propositions presented? First, the one submitted by the administration.

Secretary Baker, in his statement to the committee, had this to say about it:

I have drawn, or, rather, caused to be drawn, a bill which has been presented to you.

In explanation of the bill, he said:

The President was of the belief that the volunteer spirit and principle ought to be preserved to the extent of authorizing the filling of the Regular Army and the National Guard to full strength by that process if the process proved sufficient to accomplish that end.

According to the table submitted by the Secretary, printed in the hearings, he gave the number that may be filled by voluntary enlistment under the War Department plans to be 724,718. According to Secretary Baker, under the administration bill

724,718 recruits are to be selected, not by conscription but under the present volunteer system. After that the Secretary says:

As to the additional forces to be raised, a policy ought to be adopted which, without becoming the beginning of the practice of universal training or service, policy of selective conscription, the policy of the administration is made clear. First, the Regular Army and National Guard, full strength; approximately 1,000,000 recruits shall be raised by volunteer enlistment and the additional 1,000,000 men, if called for, by selective conscription—here we have a half-and-half proposition.

Now, what does the committee's bill provide for—the bill designated as a volunteer bill, the one so much feared by those contending for conscription? It provides, after volunteer enlistment has been given a trial, for the selective draft, exactly as provided for in the administration bill. The President is given full and complete authority to refuse to accept in and to discharge from the service any and all persons designated in section 3 of that act. The President is authorized to call for volunteers under and in accordance with the act of April 25, 1914. Further on the bill provides—

In the event the President decides that such additional force or forces shall not have been effectually raised under the call for volunteers as herein provided, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to raise by draft as herein provided.

The question then is, What will the President do in the event additional forces shall not have been effectually raised as provided for? The President in his address April 2, advising the Congress to declare war, made it clear what such a decision would involve. Among other things, he said:

It will involve the immediate addition to the armed forces of the United States already provided for by law, in case of war, of at least 500,000 men who should, in my judgment, be chosen upon the principle of universal liability to service and also the authorization of subsequent additional increments of equal forces so soon as they may be needed and can be handled in training.

Here we have it both from the Secretary of War and the President what the administration policy will be, and that is, first, volunteer enlistment up to 724,718 men, if that process proves sufficient to accomplish that end; if not, an additional force is to be raised by selective conscription. The only difference in the two plans is that under the administration plan the additional forces of 1,000,000 recruits shall be raised by selective conscription, while under the committee plan the President may first call for volunteers, and upon the completion of taking the census and preparing a roll of people eligible for military service as provided for in the bill, if in the event the President decides that such additional force or forces shall not have been effectually raised under the call for volunteers, he may raise by draft. So then, if the maximum number of recruits authorized do not volunteer by that time, authority is given the President to make selective draft. In that case the only difference is that one is mandatory and one discretional. According to the Secretary of War, no draft is to be made until the completion of the roll, hence the authority granted the President goes into effect the same day; the same hour.

In the light of experience and the President's determined policy in regard to the matter, it seems to me there can be no question as to what policy will be pursued. With our experience in the past, conscription seems unavoidable. During all these years our Army has not been filled to its authorized maximum strength. When the national defense act of June 3, 1916, was under consideration, Chairman HAY pointed out the difficulty of recruiting the Army to its full strength. He told the House that the volunteers were not joining freely. He called attention to the resolution passed in March, 1916, and said that in two months they succeeded in getting only 6,000 recruits, which number would about take the place of the number to retire at the expiration of the term of enlistment. When asked about the enlistment in the Regular Army, from Boston, in about five weeks, Mr. HAY replied: "I heard they got one recruit there." It will be remembered that Texas, in response to the country's call for 4,000 recruits, sent 3,945 men to the National Guard in the time mentioned. Only about two months ago we were told that enlisted men were compelled to serve beyond the term of their enlistment, and even with that no material increase was made.

In the report of the Secretary of War [Mr. Baker] to the committee on April 15, 1917, he reports the authorized strength of the Regular Army, all increments included, exclusive of Philippine Scouts, as 293,000 men; present strength, 131,491; short, 161,509.

If with all the endeavor in all this time we have failed in raising one-half of 293,000 recruits, how are we to get 2,000,000 men now by volunteer enlistment? No; the fact is that the required number of recruits can not be had under the volunteer system, which I take it accounts for the President, the Army experts, and the committee now abandoning their pet scheme. It goes without saying that men getting from $35 to $50 per month on the farm or men drawing high salaries from the Government or good wages in factories and mills are not going to give up their positions and join the Army for $16 per month.

Much has been said about universal obligation to service that is generally recognized. If so, the existing apathy is no reflection on the patriotism of our people. It is not necessary to discuss why the apathy. It is enough to say that conscription had to be resorted to in the Civil War, both in the North and the South. If it had to be resorted to then in raising an army of less than 3,000,000 men in the North to fight for the preservation of our Union, certainly no one will contend that the millions estimated necessary to go into the trenches can now be raised by voluntary enlistment. If volunteers failed to enlist in the Regular Army in our recent war with Mexico, what assurance have we that they will volunteer now? No; the apparent fruitless efforts of patriotic meetings, the press, and the numerous recruiting officers throughout the country to induce enlistment have, I believe, fully demonstrated that in order to raise the many millions that may be asked for, right or wrong, conscription must be resorted to. The sudden change made by the administration and war experts and the committees of both Houses of Congress is evidence as to that. If not, why the sudden change? Here is what they had to say about the volunteer system.

As recently as 1914, Gen. Wotherspoon declared the Volunteer Army law, drawn by the department and passed by Congress in 1914, to be decidedly the best bill he had ever seen drafted, and, so far as he could see, met every requirement of the Government that could be anticipated.

Gen. Wood in 1916 had this to say about the national-defense act, another volunteer bill. Speaking for it, he said, "I believe the bill to be a thoroughly good bill and I recommend its approval."

Gen. Murray, Chief of the Coast Artillery and assistant to the Chief of Staff of the War Department, said that the bill was prepared first by the branch of the General Staff known as the War College Division, and later received approval of the Chief of the Staff of the Secretary of War. He said the bill, as a whole, was an excellent one and that it should be enacted into law.

Secretary Stimson, in his annual report for 1916, said:

I earnestly recommend the passage of the volunteer bill.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN, in his report submitting the volunteer plan in 1914 to the Senate said:

It has been pending before Congress for the last seven years. It has been universally recommended by every Secretary of War since the incumbency of Mr. Root. Our President went to the country speaking and begging for it a year ago. If a good thing then, why not now?

The answer is, Congress passed it. As a result we have a big army on paper, but few soldiers to fight our battles. Unfortunately, battles can not be fought and won without men and money. It is not sufficient or proper for Congress to declare war and provide for money and a paper army. This is no pink-tea affair. This is no paper army war. No; we started with a $7,000,000,000 bond issue. We have already passed bills appropriating more than $600,000,000. This bill carries $3,000,000,000. Nobody knows how many millions of men or billions of dollars will be required before we get through with it.

I did not believe a year ago that the maximum number of recruits authorized in the national-defense act could be had in the Regular Army by volunteer enlistments. I do not believe that the required number authorized in this bill can be had under that system. If so, the only way of raising an army is to draft. My contention then, as now, is that in time of peace, instead of depending altogether upon the volunteers for training we should give encouragement to the National Guard, young men in our universities, colleges, high schools, and citizens' training camps. But now that we are at war and have not the required number of men to fight, we must deal with the situation as best we can.

True, many volunteered immediately after Congress declared for war, but according to reports but few now. Another thing, according to reports the recruits are coming largely from the farm, the agricultural States, those that can be spared the least. The highest percentage of enlistments is from Iowa, and Illinois second. It hardly seems fair that the States furnishing solid votes for declaring war should furnish the smallest percentage of men to fight our battles. Besides food for the Army is quite as necessary as men and equipment. All recognize that battles can not be fought and won without men skilled in the art of war. Armies can not exist or fight without food. Farmers are expected to supply the food. They are the only ones to be relied on. Farming can not be successfully conducted without men skilled in the art of farming. So if our farmers are transferred from the farm to the trenches, where is the food supply to come from? It has been proposed to mobilize young men and to supplant the practical farmer with young inexperienced men. I have had some experience in farming. I have employed a number of men, among them a number of young inexperienced men during their vacations. As a rule they are intelligent, industrious, and willing, but not practical. They have to be taught how to harness and drive the team, to hold the plow, to adjust the mower and harvester, and in many instances the time consumed in teaching and the expense incurred by runaways exceeds the service rendered, and in the end nothing is gained. So if we are to provide the Army and people with food, the industrious, experienced, and practical farmer must be permitted to farm our farms.

Much has been said about "standing by the President." Yes, always, when right; but never when wrong. If in doubt, give him the benefit of the doubt. Of course, consider always that the opinions of our President, his Cabinet, and Army officers, and those in possession of inside information and charged with grave responsibility, are worthy of the highest consideration; certainly now, when they are charged with the responsibility of prosecuting this war, it is our patriotic duty to yield much of our judgment to theirs.

Still, under my oath of office, I am under equal obligations to weigh the reasons and arguments of the people whom I have the honor to represent, so in the end not to serve simply as a "rubber-stamp Congressman" but to discharge my duty as my conscience and best judgment dictate.

I did not vote for the war resolution. I am not responsible for bringing on the war. This is not the time to discuss that question. That is behind us.

War is here. We went into it with our eyes open. The President, in advising Congress to declare war, made it clear as to his position and what war would cost. He told Congress it would be necessary to issue bonds. As before stated, the Congress has already authorized a $7,000,000,000 bond issue at 3½ per cent, "convertible into bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than the rate at which the same was issued, if any subsequent series of bonds shall be at a higher rate of interest before the termination of the war"; hence, to begin with, the annual interest on the $7,000,000,000 alone will be $245,000,000, in addition to our present interest account. We have already passed an appropriation for war aggregating more than $600,000,000. This bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000,000.

The President told us that we will need more men. He told us that the volunteer system, which he went to the country with, pleading and begging for a year ago, must be abandoned. Now comes the administration and the committee admitting its failure. All agree that it shall go, and the only question seems to be how to dispose of it.

I have repeatedly said that if war is declared I shall consider it my patriotic duty to aid the President and those charged with the responsibility of carrying on the war in every honest and patriotic endeavor to successfully conduct the war. Inasmuch as the results to be attained under either of the two propositions will in the end be the same, I shall vote for the one submitted by the administration and those whose duty it will be to administer it.

Home Rule for Ireland.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, April 30, 1917.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me I desire to print a copy of a cablegram which was sent to the Right Hon. David Lloyd-George, M. P., London, England, on Saturday evening. This message was signed by approximately 140 Members of this House.

I may say that the reason for the action taken by those 140 Representatives was based on a speech delivered by the English premier Friday, on receiving the freedom of London. He said:

> We must convert Ireland from a suspicious, surly, dangerous neighbor to a cheerful, loyal comrade. Settlement of the Irish question is essential for the peace of the world and essential to a speedy victory in the war. I appeal to the patriotism of all men to sink everything for the one purpose of getting this question out of the way.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if there is one certain way to do this, and that is to put the home-rule bill into operation at once, even persuading or compelling the few counties that oppose it to yield to the will of the majority. If Lloyd-George and his Government are strong enough to do that, the question is settled. I believe that Ireland should be given the same measure of self-government that is now enjoyed by Australia and Canada.

The message sent to Lloyd-George reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1917.

The Right Hon. DAVID LLOYD-GEORGE, M. P., London, England:

You are quoted as saying that "the settlement of the Irish question is essential for the peace of the world and for a speedy victory in the war."

May we, Members of the American Congress, suggest that nothing will add more to the enthusiasm of America in this war than a settlement now of the Irish problem?

We believe that all Americans will be deeply stirred and their enthusiastic effort enlisted if the British Empire will now settle this problem in accordance with the principles announced by President Wilson in his address to Congress asking it to declare war on autocracy for the world-wide safety of democracy and of small nationalities.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN S. SNOOK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, there has been much confusion in the minds of the Members of the House of Representatives and that of the public in general as to the provisions of the law under consideration.

This has no doubt been caused by newspaper articles written by men who have never read the text of the proposed law. From the letters I have been receiving I take it that many seem to think that the bill provides for a system of universal military training.

There is no foundation for such belief; it is purely a war measure, its sole object being to authorize the raising of an army; it has no application whatever to universal training; neither does it, as many think, apply the principle of universal liability on the part of the citizens to miltary service.

The persons liable to conscription are those between the ages of 20 and 40 years of age, while the law drafted and recommended by the War Department, which is now pending in the Senate, fixes the ages of those liable to draft at 19 to 25.

The bill further provides for many exemptions and confers authority to assign many of the persons who will be drafted to work in many civil callings rather than the military duty.

I have been surprised to learn that many intelligent men believe, from the notion they have acquired from reading the newspapers that this bill as reported by the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs provides that the army shall be raised solely by the volunteer system and do not know that it also authorizes the President, when he shall deem it necessary to do so, to raise such army by the selective-draft system.

Few men outside of the House of Representatives seem to know that the only thing proposed by the Members who favor conscription is to strike out of the bill as it now stands all provisions relating to raising the army by the volunteer method, except those relating to the Regular Army or the National Guard.

The bill first gives to the President authority to organize the Regular Army and the National Guard to their full war strength under existing law by calling for volunteers for service during the present war; it then authorizes the President to call for 500,000 volunteers, and in the event that it becomes necessary a second 500,000.

The volunteer army is to be apportioned among the States and Territories according to population, and is to be raised in regimental units or parts thereof from such States and Territories; that is to say, if the volunteer system is used, neighbors, friends, and acquaintances are to be kept together in companies and regiments.

The law then provides that in the event the President shall decide that a sufficient force has not been raised under the call for volunteers he may proceed to raise an army by selective draft, gives the details under which the draft shall be made, and provides for boards which shall pass upon the questions relating to selection and exemption.

It is evident that if this last method is to be applied it will result in many hardships and inequalities and that under it it will be possible to exercise great favoritism in making such selections and exemptions.

We are now actually at war. The time for talk is past; the time for action is at hand. There should be no delay in raising an army and putting it in actual training so that our enemy may understand that we mean to carry on that war immediately and with all the power and strength our Nation possesses.

In the hearings on this bill the War Department informed the committee that it will take from four to six months to take a census of the persons who will be subject to conscription and to organize the force of officers and men that it will be necessary to have in order to make the draft.

Therefore it is safe to say that it will take nearly six months before we can begin to raise an army under the draft system authorized in this law.

I know men are claiming in this debate that it is impossible to raise an army by the volunteer system. In answer to that I will say that the volunteer has fought all of our wars and that he has never yet failed to offer his services to his country in time of war.

We are certain that without any law authorizing a call for volunteers one man has already received offers from more than 120,000 American citizens to volunteer for immediate service at the front.

I believe that there is no one thing that this country could do that would so tend to arouse the patriotism of our citizens and give cheer to our allies as to accept the services at once of Col. Roosevelt and his volunteers.

There is no class of men in all American history that is so universally loved—yea, idolized—as the volunteer soldier; he sustains a record for courage, bravery, and efficiency equal to that of any soldier of any time. I therefore favor the raising of a volunteer army at once, while the machinery is being built up to carry out the draft if one should be necessary.

This will give the men who actually wish to become soldiers and take part in the war an opportunity to serve their country without being subject to draft, and will result in the raising and putting an army into training long before it can be raised under the conscription plan. This argument appeals to me with great force, and ought to have great weight in favor of retaining the provision for volunteer soldiers.

I know that there has been much criticism in the House and the newspapers of the volunteer method of raising an army, and that some, in their zeal for the conscriptive system, have gone so far as to even criticize the efficiency of the volunteer soldier.

I am old-fashioned enough to have not forgotten the wonderful things I have been hearing from my boyhood days of the prowess and heroism of the volunteer soldier on the battle fields of the Civil War. I believe that the words of Gen. William T. Sherman come to us at this time with great force and that they are now peculiarly applicable. He says:

> But the real difficulty was, and will be again, to obtain an adequate number of good soldiers. We tried almost every system known to modern nations, all with more or less success—volunteer enlistments, the draft, and bought substitutes—and I think that all officers of experience will confirm my assertion that the men who voluntarily enlisted at the outbreak of the war were the best—better than the conscript and far better than the bought substitute.

Some one has said during the course of the debate that the question involved should be considered purely in the light of reason and that sentiment should have nothing to do with our decision.

I deny the truth of that statement. At this time the one thing most needed in this country is to arouse the public spirit; we need a public conscience on fire with a spirit of patriotism.

We want the people to understand and believe that this is their war, that it is being undertaken to preserve their rights and the honor of their country.

The spirit that prompts a man to volunteer to fight and not to wait for conscription is the one that causes him to love his country and to offer her the very best that he has to give.

The volunteer is ready and willing to make any sacrifice that may be necessary in the interests of his country, and this is the spirit that will make a fighting, a conquering nation.

We need an army; we need the best army, and we need it now. The highest attribute of man is the right to exercise and control his own will.

This is the power that distinguishes man from the beast; take away that right and you are robbing him of the very thing that makes him a man.

The right to volunteer in the service of his country recognizes this principle; it animates the soul of the soldier and leaves him to serve his country without reserve and with every fiber of his being.

The recognition of this principle gives us a soldier and not a machine. If the question was not settled by tradition and history the meaning and the sense of the very words themselves, "volunteer" and "conscript," tell the whole story and ought to settle the controversy once and for all.

Even if it is so, as some men claim, that we will not be able to raise an army under the volunteer system, I believe it should be tried, for the reason that there are many men who believe that an army can be successfully raised in this way; and if it is demonstrated that this is impossible, then these men and the whole country would be prepared to accept the draft on the ground that it was necessary. The favorite argument used by those who favor conscription is that the volunteer system takes the flower of our manhood; that is, under it the Army gets the best and most patriotic men.

To my mind this is the most convincing of all the arguments in favor of the volunteer system.

We have been forced into this, the most gigantic struggle the world has ever known, against our wish; yet the result will mean more to the cause of civilization the world over than that of any war that has ever been waged.

Some one has said, "Does a man want a thing? Let him pay the price and take it."

This thought applies with great force to the present situation and to the nations engaged in this war; the thing we and they are fighting for is of tremendous value to the world.

It is the cause of democracy. If we wish to enjoy liberty ourselves and to have it bless the nations of the world we must pay the price. If we win this conflict it means sacrifice. We can not win it unless we are willing to pay the price.

We need the best blood, the most chivalrous spirits, our bravest and most patriotic men.

We can not win with the laggards and slackers you talk about. If Belgium is to be restored and freedom is to become the heritage of all people we must be willing to sacrifice and undergo suffering and privation and even death. We will need soldiers whose conduct and action are animated by their own will, and who are willing and ready to make any sacrifice that may be necessary for the success of our cause.

I have listened during the course of this debate to the statement so often repeated that the conscript system is the only fair and just way of raising an army.

Yet no argument advanced has caused my mind, try as I may, to think otherwise than that there is something odious connected with the very word "conscription," and I still have the fear that many a boy who will be drafted will carry the same thought in his heart.

I shall do all I can to have this army raised under the volunteer system, which has hitherto been the system of honor to Americans. If, however, the provision for volunteers shall be stricken out of the bill by the vote of the majority of this House, then the necessity of my country to raise an army to protect the rights of her citizens will impel me to vote for it as it stands, with this provision stricken out, for I recognize that there is no other way in which I can join in authorizing the raising of such an army, and with me my country's cause and her necessity stand above and over all.

And if it so happen, as now it seems certain, that the Army will be raised under the conscriptive plan, I shall pray that somehow in His infinite wisdom and mercy God will cause this cruel war to be brought to a close in such a way that will vindicate the rights of our people and the honor of our Nation without compelling the mothers of our land to drink the bitter cup which we are about to press to their lips.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM H. CARTER,

OF MASSACHUSETTS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on the 5th day of April last, by a vote of 373 to 50, Congress recognized the existence of a state of war between this country and the Imperial German Government. This war resolution was the most solemn occasion which has ever occurred in this House in 50 years. It passed both branches of Congress, was signed by the Chief Executive of our Nation, and is an expression of the wishes of the majority of the people of this country.

We entered this war wholly because we were forced to defend the lives and liberties of our citizens. We are now at war and our opponents are recognized as the strongest military power on earth. For nearly half a century they have been perfecting a military system that is recognized as the greatest fighting machine in the history of the world.

It now becomes the duty of this Congress to take the necessary steps whereby we can cope successfully against this country. In my judgment, there are four great resources necessary for us to win a war—men, money, food, and ships. We must conserve all four in every way possible.

We have just passed an immense sum of money to carry on the expenses of this war, and the next question for us to decide is how we can best conserve our human resources. When this great war was started in Europe it was believed that it would last only a few months. It has now lasted over two years and a half, and to-day Germany has 5,000,000 trained soldiers fighting. Anyone who underestimates the fighting strength of the German nation is making a very serious mistake.

If this war is to be won it must be with fighters and not with words, so it is the solemn duty of Congress at this time to consider the best way for us to carry on this great war. The question now before us for consideration is just what is the best method of raising our Army. The majority of the members of the Military Affairs Committee have recommended that we should retain, for a while at least, the volunteer method.

The minority members of the committee, headed by that distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], have proposed a substitute in the form of a selected draft. This substitute is substantially the same proposition as has been recommended by the majority of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, with the exception of the age limits, upon which they do not agree. The draft system, or, as it is more commonly called, the universal military system, has been recommended by all of the military experts in this country. We are called upon now to decide which system we shall select.

I intend to register my vote in favor of the selective draft. In my opinion it is the only fair, just, democratic, and adequate policy for us to follow at this time. I believe that the volunteer system is antiquated, inadequate, unjust, and inefficient. The universal system proceeds in recognition of the first principle of universal liability to national military service and adopts the system which has proven to be adequate and effective.

While this bill provides for selective draft it allows the volunteer spirit also to exist, as men over the age limit can enlist and others who are not drafted may volunteer. I do not want to say anything against the volunteer, because he has proven his patriotism in every emergency. What I do say is that the whole volunteer system is at fault.

Under the volunteer system the patriotic, courageous, and high-spirited man goes out and in many cases gives up his life for his country. The coward and timid are permitted to shirk their duty. I do not believe that the burden should fall upon the former alone, but with universal obligation it would fall equally upon the shoulders of all the people.

A glance at the history of our own wars will show that it has not proven successful, and we were compelled to draft our men.

In the Revolutionary War the volunteer system proved a failure, and but for the help of the French nation it is doubtful if we could have brought it to a successful end. George Washington in a letter to Congress in 1789 said, in part:

> Regular troops alone are equal to the exigencies of modern war, as well for defense as offense, and when a substitute is attempted it must prove illusory and ruinous. No militia will ever acquire the habits necessary to resist a regular force. The firmness requisite for the real business of fighting is only to be attained by constant course of discipline and service. I have never yet been a witness to a single instance that can justify a different opinion, and it is most earnestly to be wished that the liberties of America may no longer be trusted, in a material degree, to so precarious a defense.

In 1792 Congress passed a militia bill, which provided that every free, able-bodied white male citizen between the ages of 18 and 45 should be enrolled in the militia. This law gradually fell into disuse, owing to the fact that it was not enforced. However, the Congress of that time, after the experiences of the Revolutionary War, recognized the need of compulsory universal military training.

In the War of 1812 the volunteer system proved to be inefficient, and two States—Massachusetts and Connecticut—refused absolutely to furnish any troops for the war. As a result the burden was not distributed equally among all the States.

The Mexican War of 1846 was fought largely by men from a few States. Under the universal plan each State must furnish its full quota of men. In the Civil War the volunteer system proved to be a failure in raising a sufficiently large army. It has just been estimated that there was paid $289,900,000 for the various States in order to induce men to volunteer. In this war dozens of regiments went into battle with only a small percentage, as it was impossible to fill up their ranks under the volunteer system. I believe that had the selective-draft system been in force at the beginning of this war that it would have ended much sooner, and we would have saved thousands of lives and millions of dollars.

In the Spanish-American War the President called for 200,000 men, and but 163,000 volunteered. Many States sent far more than their quota, while others were permitted to send but a few. Was this fair? Under the selective-draft system each State would have to furnish her quota according to her population.

England has had her experiences with the volunteer system. She had, like this country, permitted that principle of government which is fundamental with her as well as with us to drag into obscurity, so far as her army was concerned. See what happened in England during the first two years of the great war.

The young, patriotic, and high-minded men and boys went out and gave up their lives fighting for their country. Shoved to the brink of calamity and with defeat staring her in the face, she abandoned the volunteer system, and compulsory service was established instead.

On May 25, 1916, the British Parliament passed the most sweeping compulsory-service act ever known, and every male British subject of Great Britain between the ages of 18 and 41 was made a member of the regular force for general military service. Under this arrangement the Government selects at its will for active service such numbers as it deems necessary. The men who are not serving are working in the shops and factories, making the necessities in order to carry on the war.

In Canada it has taken from four to seven months to raise local battalions. Under the compulsory system this battalion could be raised in two weeks. A great deal has been said about the Australian troops and their splendid fighting qualifications. For years compulsory military training has been in vogue in that country. Look at the French Army. Paris would have been captured two years ago but for the fact that the French laws make it obligatory for their men to do service for their country in the time of need. It would be folly for this country not to profit by the mistakes of others at this time.

The volunteer system is undemocratic, because it shifts the burden of national defense from the masses, where it belongs, on the shoulders of a few men who are willing to accept the hardships of war for their country. I quite agree with the report of the Senate Military Committee, which says that the volunteer system is undemocratic, unreliable, extravagant, inefficient, and, above all, unsafe. This report further states:

The system established by the selective-draft bill will have one other effect greatly to be desired in this Nation, consisting as it does of varied elements of all races and tongues. It would directly and very effectually tend to the unification of our people by common association in a common cause in furtherance of the principle that it is the duty, as it should be the desire, of all citizens of whaetver race or origin to undergo all necessary sacrifice for the national good. It strikes down that opportunity, which the volunteer method deliberately induces, for the selfish and unpatriotic to remain at home in time of war and to profit out of the Nation's adversity at the expense of those whose patriotism has impelled them to perform a citizen's duty.

This is no time to tolerate uncertainty in the raising and the maintenance of the large numbers of men which the present emergency is likely to require, nor uncertainty in the methods to be adopted for the establishment of an adequate, efficient military service. The bill makes certain the raising and maintenance of the required forces with the utmost expedition. It establishes the principle that all arms-bearing citizens owe to the Nation the duty of defending it. It selects only those who by reason of their age and physical capacity are the best fitted to receive the training and withstand the actual hardship of a campaign, and, who, happily, can be taken with least disturbance of normal economic and industrial conditions.

In closing this report upon the measure under consideration it seems appropriate to refer to what President Lincoln had to say upon the subject of the draft at a critical stage of the Civil War. No one would have the temerity to doubt either his patriotism, his democracy, or his great ability as a lawyer and as a statesman. While opposition to the enforcement of the draft law was at its height he prepared an address to the American people, which, though never issued, has been published from the original manuscript in his own handwriting by those who were most intimately acquainted with him and who could speak with authority. In that address, which is a fitting conclusion to this report, he said amongst other things:

"It is at all times proper that misunderstanding between the public and the public servant should be avoided; and this is far more important now than in times of peace and tranquillity. I therefore address you without searching for a precedent upon which to do so. Some of you are sincerely devoted to the republican institutions and territorial integrity of our country, and yet are opposed to what is called the draft or conscription.

"At the beginning of the war, and ever since, a variety of motives, pressing, some in one direction and some in the other, would be presented to the mind of each man physically fit for a soldier, upon the combined effect of which motives he would, or would not, voluntarily enter the service. Among these motives would be patriotism, political bias, ambition, personal courage, love of adventure, want of employment, and convenience, or the opposite of some of these. We already have, and have had, in the service, as appears, substantially all that can be obtained upon this voluntary weighing of motives. And yet we must somehow obtain more or relinquish the original object of the contest, together with all the blood and treasure already expended in the effort to secure it. To meet this necessity the law for the draft has been enacted. You who do not wish to be soldiers do not like this law. This is natural, nor does it imply want of patriotism. Nothing can be so just and necessary as to make us like it if it is disagreeable to us. We are prone, too, to find false arguments with which to excuse ourselves for opposing such disagreeable things. In this case those who desire the Rebellion to succeed, and others who seek reward in a different way, are very active in accommodating us with this class of arguments. * * *

"The republican institutions and territorial integrity of our country can not be maintained without the further raising and supporting of armies. There can be no army without men. Men can be had only voluntarily or involuntarily. We have ceased to obtain them voluntarily, and to obtain them involuntarily is the draft—the conscription. If you dispute this fact and declare that men can still be had voluntarily in sufficient numbers, prove the assertion by yourselves volunteering in such numbers, and I shall gladly give up the draft. Or if not a sufficient number, but any one of you will volunteer, he for his single self will escape all the horrors of the draft and will thereby do only what each one of at least a million of his manly brethren have already done. Their toil and blood have been given as much for you as for themselves. Shall it all be lost rather than that you, too, will bear your part? *

"I do not say that all who would avoid serving in the war are unpatriotic; but I do think every patriot should willingly take his chance under a law, made with great care, in order to secure entire fairness. This law was considered, discussed, modified, and amended by Congress at great length and with much labor and was finally passed by both branches with a near approach to unanimity. At last it may not be exactly such as any one man out of Congress, or even in Congress, would have made it. It has been said, and I believe truly, that the Constitution itself is not altogether such as any one of its framers would have preferred. It was the joint work of all and certainly the better that it was so. * * *

"The principle of draft, which simply is involuntary or enforced service, is not new. It has been practiced in all ages of the world. It was well known to the framers of our Constitution as one of the modes of raising armies at the time they placed in that instrument the provisions that 'the Congress shall have power to raise and support armies.' It had been used just before in establishing our independence, and it was also used under the Constitution in 1812. Wherein is the peculiar hardship now? Shall we shrink from the necessary means to maintain our free Government which our grandfathers employed to establish it and our own fathers have already employed once to maintain it? Are we degenerating? Has the manhood of our race run out?

"Again, a law may be both constitutional and expedient and yet may be administered in an unjust and unfair way. This law belongs to a class, which class is composed of those laws whose object is to distribute burdens or benefits on the principle of equality. No one of these laws can ever be practically administered with that exactness which can be conceived of in the mind. A tax law, the principle of which is that each owner shall pay in proportion to the value of his property, will be a dead letter if no one can be compelled to pay until it can be shown that every other one will pay in precisely the same proportion, according to value; nay, even it will be a dead letter if no one can be compelled to pay until it is certain that every other one will pay at all, even in unequal proportion.

"Again, the United States House of Representatives is constituted on the principle that each Member is sent by the same number of people that each other is sent by; and yet, in practice, no two of the whole number, much less the whole number, are ever sent by precisely the same number of constituents. The districts can not be made precisely equal in population at first, and if they could they would become unequal in a single day, and much more so in the 10 years which the districts, once made, are to continue. They can not be remodeled every day, nor, without too much expense and labor, even every year.

"This sort of difficulty applies in full force to the practical administration of the draft law. In fact, the difficulty is greater in the case of the draft law. First, it starts with all the inequality of the congressional districts; but these are based on entire population, while the draft is based upon those only who are fit for soldiers, and such may not bear the same proportion to the whole in one district that they do in another. Again, the facts must be ascertained and credit given for the unequal numbers of soldiers which have already gone from the several districts. In all these points errors will occur in spite of the utmost fidelity. The Government is bound to administer the law with such an approach to exactness as is usual in analogous cases and as entire good faith and fidelity will reach. If so great departures as to be inconsistent with such good faith and fidelity, or great departures occurring in any way, be pointed out they shall be corrected, and any agent shown to have caused such departures intentionally shall be dismissed.

"With these views, and on these principles, I feel bound to tell you it is my purpose to see the draft law faithfully executed."

The President and his war council have demanded this selective draft and have announced that they can not accept compromise. They believe that we should profit by the lesson from across the sea. I intend to vote to support the President as he must be relied upon at this time to do that which is best. He has taken the only course that will insure the future prosperity and safety of this Nation.

Under the selective-draft system this Nation can engage in this war in a large scale without disturbing its manufacturies, agricultural fields, and mines. By the selective draft the Government will only take those men of military age who can be spared for service. A great many patriotic men will want to enter the war who can do far more good for their country by remaining at home working on the farms, in the factories, and the mines.

Under the selective-draft plan the President and his representatives will determine which men shall remain at home and which men shall be called. At this time it would be folly for all of the farmers to go to war because their services are needed in raising the food for the armies.

It was announced a few days ago that we are to build 1,000 wooden ships. No man who is needed to build these ships should be allowed to enlist, and under the selective-draft system such a serious mistake would be prevented. This also applies to other industries.

The figures given out by the War Department, published from day to day, prove conclusively that no army of any size can be raised by the volunteer system. We have actually been at war for three weeks and the ranks of the National Guard and the Regular Army have not been filled up, as the volunteers are coming in slowly.

We voted for war and our country is now fighting the enemy. In the time of need our country has a right to demand the services of its men. It is the duty of every citizen to serve his country in some form at this time.

With a profound consciousness and willful appreciation of the results, I am going to cast my vote for the selective-draft bill. I will not put any obstacle in the way of the President in carrying out this war. I stand for the selective draft because I believe in it, and, second, because the President and War Department have asked for it. I am not afraid to assume my share of the responsibility of the people of my district that I represent on this question.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN R. CONNELLY,

OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, April 27, 1917.

Mr. CONNELLY of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with an open mind to the splendid and able discussion now running through a number of days on this bill and I have come to the conclusion that it is my duty to vote for the amendment which provides for the selective conscription to meet the emergency that now confronts us as a Nation. I have not been impressed or convinced with the argument that it possesses all of the merits that is claimed for it by those who have sung its praises. I have a good deal of sympathy with those who contend for the volunteer system. I believe that if the proponents of the war are right and the country is afire with the war idea, that there will come to the support of the flag enough men who will volunteer to carry this war to a successful termination. If their premises are right there can be no doubt as to the conclusion. But the war has been voted.

The Government has spoken, the die has been cast, and we must provide for the defense of our country and the prosecution of the war. I can not go the length that has been gone by some who have spoken and say that this will establish a permanent military system; I shall vote for it with no such conviction or with no such hopes. I shall vote for it because I want to give to the men who must conduct the war a very wide latitude in order that the war may be brought to a successful conclusion at the very earliest time and with the very least sacrifice. It is not the time, as I view it, to establish a permanent policy of the Government, but rather is it a time to stand a united people behind the men whose shoulders must carry the responsibility. There are those who argue that in establishing this policy at this time that we commit ourselves to it for all time as a national policy. These men, honest and sincere as they are, forget that this is still a Republic; that the policy, whatever it be, must at intervals be referred back to the people, and they will always have the last say through their chosen representatives in the years to come as to whether this will be the established policy of their Government or not. As I view it, this is not the time to establish permanent policies, this is not the time to wage internal battles when there is call for a united action in the face of a foreign foe. I was one of those who refused to vote for the war resolution, for I was not in my own mind and heart convinced that we had reached the time when we should cease to forbear. But the President of my country and the Congress of my country did not agree with me. They voted to go into the war, and all that we have and all that we hope to have in the future of life and property must now be placed upon the country's altar, if need be, to sustain the Government and make it a place where free men can continue to wage continued and constant contests for the supremacy of their ideals. Under other conditions I can not say what my course would be, but under the condition that now faces us as a Nation my mind is clear as to where my duty lies and I shall do that duty as I see it.

Mr. Speaker, I have received from many of the people whom I represent letters and telegrams, as have all who sit here as Representatives. Some have urged me to vote against the conscription plan of raising an army. I have said to these that I had not agreed to a vote for the war resolution, but I would not oppose those who must now be held responsible for the conduct of the war. Now that we are in, I believe that we should do everything in our power to win. The volunteer system is glorious in its accomplishments of the past. The valor that the American volunteer has shown on the battle fields of the Republic will remain a precious legacy of memory of the millions that are yet to be born and live under the flag that they raised in the sky. He would, indeed, be unmindful of the grateful respect and honor that these volunteers deserve who would say a sentence that would detract from their immortal renown. When I get to reflecting on the glorious deeds of the volunteer soldiers of the past in this Republic I can not but have much respect for those who allow their hearts to sway their judgments in the situation that we now find ourselves. I can not find it in my heart to question the motives or the patriotism of those who plead for the volunteer system and yet we must now be practical men. It was pointed out in a speech by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on the floor of the House yesterday that while the War of 1812 was fought by volunteers, that two States in the Union—Massachusetts and Connecticut—refused or failed to send a soldier to help in that fight. This made it necessary for the other States of the Union to fight the battles which was the common cause of every State. I do not anticipate that any State or any community will refuse to do its share in this contest, but if every citizen and every State in the Union knows that every other State and citizen will be called upon to do equal service and make equal sacrifice that assurance will help to create a spirit of national unity that is essential at this time. No true patriot will complain of the sacrifice demanded if he knows that the same sacrifice is demanded of others who are like situated.

I shall vote for this method to raise the Army, and next week when the bill comes in to levy the taxes to pay the bills for the war, I hope to be able to vote for such a bill that will show that this Congress is as willing to conscript wealth as it is to conscript men. There must be no half-way plan on either. If it is right that we shall call upon those who are of a certain age and best able to fight to do all of the fighting, we should see to it that the fellow best able to pay should do most of the paying. I am willing to take the position that so far as it is possible that no man or set of men shall be allowed to retain a dollar of profit that can be directly traceable to this war. It is, in my opinion, absolute folly for men to hope and pray to be spared the horrors of war so long as any man or set of men are permitted to retain the unholy profits that come from war. It would be unfair and incorrect perhaps to say that it is the sole cause of war, but that it is a potent factor, no one who is entitled to be termed a casual reader of history would care to deny. If the lessons that we learn in this war enables the great masses of people to place the burden of paying for the war where it rightfully belongs it will in a small part at least compensate for the sacrifices that they will be called upon to make. In practically all the wars of the past that this country has fought the poor man has been the fellow who has marched away to fight the battles, and if he has been fortunate enough to come back at all, he has found the burden of taxation so arranged that his shoulders have borne the heavy part of it. If we permit this system to prevail here it will show that we have refused to accept the responsibility that is ours and that we have failed to measure up to the full stature of true representatives.

Mr. Speaker, in these days when it is not an uncommon thing for men to become unduly excited there is still a good deal of charity and forbearance in the world. I sometimes think that we give too much concern to the critic. The honest man in public life is necessarily sensitive to criticism, and sometimes he is liable to exaggerate the few letters that come to his desk expressing disapproval. While he knows that he can not act so as to avoid it, he never becomes so that he can entirely ignore it. While this is true, it only requires a little thought to show the average Representative here that the great majority of the people in his district are sensible and sane, and while they may many times disagree with their Representative, they are fair enough to know that to most questions there are different angles of vision. In the district that I have the honor to represent here there are more than 70,000 men and women who cast their votes last November. Less than 25 of that 70,000 have gone to the trouble to abuse me through letters for the vote that I cast on the war resolution. I do not flatter myself that there were not many good men and women who did not agree with the wisdom of that vote, but they are the class of people who realize that abuse of men who follow honest convictions is unworthy of fair people. The real man and woman in my district and in every other district in this country—that is, the people who are really worth the while—are not frothing at the mouth and yelling traitors at other men and women who fail to agree with them on matters where honest minds may differ. It is the fellow who does not amount to much in his own community who rushes into abusive print at this time when men of all parties and creeds are really seeking to know the best way to serve their country and humanity. I have never known a man who questioned the common honesty of his neighbors in general or who believed that practically all people who disagreed with him were crooks, whose integrity I would care to depend upon or whose advice I would want to follow. We sometimes pay too much attention to the faultfinder and refuse to see the great heart of the ninety-and-nine who constitute the real citizenship of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that no one will be misled as to the seriousness of the step that we are taking now and have taken since this session of Congress convened. I hear the idea expressed by some that this is to be a short war, and that our enemies will be defeated before the winter comes. God knows how much I wish that should be the case, but to the average thinking mind how little there is to base such a hope upon. I think it is fair and honest not to deceive ourselves or those whom we represent here. Now that we are actually in war, how necessary that we tell our people that they must prepare for sacrifice. I know how sincerely every mother and every father and every brother, sister, and wife who are called upon to see their loved ones march away in the ranks of the country defenders will hope that in some way they may escape the supreme sacrifice that they are in their pride and patriotism offering to their country. In the summer of 1914, when the war broke out in Europe, how many of us believed that with its fearful destruction and cost it could grow to its present dimensions and involve the whole of the great nations of the earth? How certain to be disappointed are those who now hope that this country and this people shall escape serious sacrifice in blood and treasure.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress last week passed by unanimous vote a bill appropriating $7,000,000,000, the first increment of cost that will stagger the minds of men to grasp. Another tax bill taking from the people an annual tax of nearly $2,000,000,000 will come in for consideration next week, and if it appears that such a sum will be needed to prosecute the war there will not be a vote against it. The great Congress of the United States is a united body, so far as the prosecution of this war goes, and the country is a united country behind Congress. But that does not mean that Congressmen do not have a duty to perform in scanning every appropriation and sitting in quiet and uncoerced judgment upon matters that come before this body.

The next few months will try the souls of Members here. In times of peace there are always designing men who would cry patriotism for ulterior purposes, and they can always enlist that part of the great press of the country which has a purchasable influence. In times of war, when the minds of the people are inflamed and excited, we can hardly hope to escape the cry of this enlarged element who will take advantage of the conditions and under the pretense of patriotism try to advance their own selfish interest. The Member of Congress who in the next two years refuses to jeopardize his political life by opposing the wrongs that will be attempted here, has no right to claim common cause with the splendid young men of the Nation who will gladly lay down their physical lives in the forefront of the battle line. It will require courage of a high character to meet this test, but my association with the membership of this House gives me confidence that they will not fail.

Mr. Speaker, there is one hope that in common finds place in the heart of every true patriot at this hour. That hope is that in some way we may yet escape the full sacrifice that this hour portends. It is the hope that before the full sacrifice is demanded that reason will again become enthroned in the great heart of the world and love and mercy take the place of hate and revenge. But if the full test is required, may He who searches the hearts of men and women and finds there the gold and the dross when He looks into the heart of every patriot find only the pure gold of an honest desire to be true to the country and its best traditions and meet whatever test the times demand.

War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES H. RANDALL,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 7, 1917.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am bitterly opposed to war. Here are the exact words of Gen. Sherman about war:

WAR IS HELL.

I confess without shame that I am tired and sick of war. Its glory is all moonshine. Even success, the most brilliant, is over dead and mangled bodies, the anguish and lamentation of distant families appealing to me for missing sons, husbands, and fathers. It is only those who have not heard a shot nor heard the shrieks and groans of the wounded and lacerated, that cry aloud for more blood, more vengeance, more desolation. War is hell!

DISARMAMENT ONLY REMEDY.

War does not necessarily settle any dispute on the right side. The most powerful enemy wins, whether right or wrong. Other means of settling disputes between nations will come when all nations are disarmed. If out of this war should come an international disarmament agreement, then peace will be established and justice will prevail throughout the world.

MANY WARS DISHONORABLE.

Wars are usually covered with a false raiment of glory, but most of the wars of history have been dishonorable wars.

The Mexican War of 1848 was denounced by both Lincoln and Grant as unjust and unconstitutional.

The Spanish-American War might have been avoided, because Spain had already agreed to withdraw from Cuba, and the document is on file in the Department of State. But newspaper hysteria plunged the Nation into that war, while our own representative at Madrid was begging by cablegram for a few more days in which to complete Spain's evacuation agreement.

LINCOLN ON THE MEXICAN WAR.

On January 3, 1848, Congress passed a resolution declaring that the War with Mexico, then in progress, was unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the President. Abraham Lincoln, then a Member of the House of Representatives, voted for this resolution, and on February 14, 1848, he voted against a resolution to expunge the action from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Mr. Lincoln, speaking in the House on January 12, 1848, while the country was in a state of war, nevertheless stood upon his rights as a Representative of the people, and criticized the President in the following words:

Mr. Chairman, some, if not all, the gentlemen on the other side of the House have spoken rather complainingly of the vote given a week or 10 days ago declaring that the War with Mexico was unnecessarily and unconstitutionally commenced by the President. * * * The President, in his first message of May, 1846, declares that the soil was ours on which hostilities were commenced with Mexico. * * * Now, I propose to try to show that the whole of this—issue and evidence—is, from beginning to end, the sheerest deception. * * * Let the President answer the interrogatories I proposed. Let him answer fully, fairly, and candidly. Let him answer with facts, not arguments. Let him remember he sits where Washington sat; and, so remembering, let him answer as Washington would answer. As a nation should not, and the Almighty will not, be evaded, so let him attempt no evasion, no equivocation. * * * But if he can not or will not do this—if, on any pretense or no pretense he shall refuse or omit it—then I shall be fully convinced of what I more than suspect already, that he is deeply conscious of being in the wrong; that he feels the blood of this war, like the blood of Abel, is crying to Heaven against him; that he ordered Gen. Taylor into the midst of a peaceful Mexican settlement purposely to bring on a war; that originally having some strong motive—what I will not stop now to give my opinion concerning—to involve the two countries in war, and trusting to escape scrutiny by fixing the public gaze upon the exceeding brightness of military glory—that attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood; that serpent's eye that charms to destroy—he plunged into it and has swept on and on till, disappointed in his calculation of the ease with which Mexico might be subdued, he now finds himself he knows not where. How like the half insane mumbling of a fever dream is the whole war part of his late message!

Conscription.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES R. CRISP,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

On the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I love peace and my soul abhors war, for war means tears, sorrows, sacrifice, suffering beyond description, and great loss of life. For over two years I hoped and prayed that our country would not be drawn into the conflict now destroying the brave and valiant of Europe, and as a Representative in Congress I have left nothing undone that I could do to maintain honorable peace for our beloved country.

President Wilson for more than two years, by his patience, watchful waiting, Christian forbearance, and marvelous wisdom in conducting our diplomatic affairs, kept us out of the awful carnage. The Imperial German Government, gone mad with Prussianism, obsessed with the idea that it was ruler of the universe, systematically began to make ruthless war on all mankind. German submarines, without warning, destroyed ships of friendly nations, consigning to a watery grave men, women, and children, citizens of friendly governments. President Wilson, the foremost man of all the world, the Chief Executive of the only great and powerful Nation not engaged in the awful conflict, speaking for humanity, called Germany to task for her barbaric warfare. Germany agreed to abandon her unjustifiable and outrageous course and we all hoped and believed that the lives of noncombatants would be safeguarded and that the United States would not become involved. Notwithstanding the solemn assurances of the Imperial German Government that in future it would observe the rules of international law, German submarines continued to sink without warning neutral ships, among them American ships, destroying American lives. Not content with this the Imperial German Government, through its accredited diplomats to the Government of the United States, sought to stir up within our borders riots, treason, and insurrection, trying to incite German-Americans to strike, to paralyze our manufacturing industries, and even to destroy the fortifications of our country. Nor did the German Government stop here, but, through its diplomatic ambassador, sought to induce Japan and Mexico to declare war against us. These facts were brought to the attention of Congress by President Wilson in a formal message.

Thus it is clearly seen that the Imperial German Government wantonly and willfully was waging war in every way possible against the United States. No self-respecting nation could longer submit to the willful murdering of its citizens, the destruction of their property, and insults to even its sovereignty, and maintain the respect of the nations of the earth.

With these facts before Congress, as an American Representative, I could not do otherwise than vote for the resolution, declaring that Germany had made war on the United States, and that a state of war exists between the two countries. I have had many duties to perform, but never in my life did I perform one that tore my heart as did the voting for the war resolution, for I knew the horrors, sacrifices, sorrows, tax burdens, and suffering it meant to the people of the United States, but from the depths of my soul I believed that the American people preferred war to dishonorable and cowardly peace.

The President has asked of Congress that legislation be enacted providing for the raising of an army of 2,000,000 men, or so many of them as may be necessary, to be used in prosecuting our war with Germany. The duty of Congress is plain; there is but one course open to it, to give the President all the money and men he may need to prosecute the war to the end that Germany may be speedily crushed and peace and happiness again restored to all the world. The War College, composed of Army officers, prepared for raising this army, the bill being known throughout the country as the "select conscription" plan. Let me briefly state the salient features of this bill.

The bill provides that the Regular Army shall be increased from 135,000 men, its present peace strength, to its war strength, 290,000 men; that this increase shall be secured by the President calling for volunteers, with the proviso that if volunteers can not be secured he was authorized to conscript men to bring the Army to its full war strength. The bill further provided that the President should have the right to draft the militia of the various States and to call for volunteers to recruit the militia to its full war complement, 625,000 men, with the provision if volunteers did not come forward the President could conscript men for this purpose also. The third proviso of the bill was that there should be conscripted from the males of the country, between the ages of 19 and 25, an army of 1,000,000 men, in two increments of 500,000 each, and no one should be permitted to volunteer for this army. The War College bill authorized no territorial recognition, but under it soldiers drafted in Georgia were not required to be put in the same regiment with soldiers drafted in their neighborhood but could be scattered throughout the army, wherever the Army officers saw fit to send them. The bill contains many other features to me objectionable, to which I shall refer later. This bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, after weeks of hearings from Army officers and consideration by the committee, the majority of the committee reported the bill to the House with sundry material amendments.

The bill of the majority, known as the Dent or volunteer bill, contained the identical provisions of the War College bill for recruiting the standing army and the militia to full war strength, first by volunteers, and if the volunteer system failed, then by conscription. This bill carried the time-honored American principle of raising the additional army of 1,000,000 men by directing that the President should call for volunteers; if they could not be obtained, he was authorized to conscript an army; but the Dent bill fixed the ages for the select conscription from 21 to 40 years of age, instead of 19 to 25. The Dent bill also provided for territorial enlistment, requiring that all boys enlisting in any community be kept in the same company, so far as practicable. The War College bill contemplated that a military board, composed only of Army officers, should pass on who should go to the trench and who should remain at home, under the select conscription plan, while the Dent bill provided a board, the majority of whom should be civilians, to be the judges as to who should fight, and probably die, for their country, and who should remain at home to pursue their usual avocations and make money. The War College bill provided that the eight Army officers, the chiefs of the eight bureaus of the War Department, who would not go to the front but stay in Washington, who now draw salaries of $6,000 a year, should be raised to $9,300, and no provision was made for increasing the pay of those splendid young men who should give up remunerative employment and serve their country as privates in the trenches of France at $15 per month.

Being at war, it is the duty of Congress to give our country the best army possible, and to raise it in the quickest time, and that, in my judgment, will be done by the volunteer system. But the War College and the advocates of the conscription system say the volunteer soldiers are a failure. I deny this. I believe that the most valiant, bravest, the best soldiers who ever performed in any war during all the annals of time, were those brave, patriotic, self-sacrificing men who followed Gens. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, John B. Gordon, Sheridan, and Grant during the Civil War, and they were volunteers. All of the wars that have been fought by the United States—and all have been successful—were fought by volunteers. It was volunteers who composed the army of Washington, who gave us our independence; it was volunteers who fought the War of 1812 with England; it was volunteers who fought the War with Mexico; it was volunteers who fought the Civil War; and it was volunteers who fought the War with Spain. I am not for any law that insinuates that those splendid heroes, who suffered and died for liberty and what they believed to be right, in all of our wars, were failures.

A reference to history will disclose that in all the battles since the creation it was the volunteer who performed the most conspicuous and rendered the best service. A man forced into war by conscription fights unwillingly, is lacking in courage, and does not make as brave or efficient a soldier as one who, from patriotic motives and love of country, freely offers his life for his cause. Let me cite some instances of history relative to the conscript.

In the War of the Revolution the English Government brought over some Hessian conscripts, and in the Battle of Trenton they surrendered to the colonial forces without firing a gun. Gen. SHERWOOD, an honored Member of this House, who was a gallant general in the Union Army, in a speech a few days ago stated that he had 72 conscripts sent to his regiment during the Civil War, and that all but 2 deserted, and that they were worthless as soldiers. The general further stated that while he was commander of the Union Army in Tennessee that all of the deserters from the Confederate to the Union Army had been conscripted into the Confederate Army. Maj. W. C. Harllee, of the United States Marine Corps, who has served in that branch for 17 years, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, said:

> Unwilling men burden armies, eat its substance, retard its action, and give it panic. I am opposed to universal service or compulsory service, or any other kind of service than that rendered by willing men.

These instances give some idea as to the relative value of the conscript and the volunteer soldier.

But the advocates of conscription state that the volunteer system is inefficient, and that it is necessary to have select conscription before the patriots of America are even allowed an opportunity to volunteer in its defense. It is an interesting fact that the English Army now in Flanders, daily driving back the German troops, are volunteers. England, fighting for her very life, with the German Army a few miles away, did not provide for conscription until she had raised an army of 5,000,000 men by the volunteer system. Those brave Englishmen to-day fighting in Flanders are volunteers. England to-day has an army of about 6,500,000 men, and of this number only about 600,000 have been raised by conscription, and no conscript is yet at the front. England, a monarchy, allows her citizens, even in her present conscript law, before being formally conscripted, 30 days to volunteer, while in America, a Republic, where the people are supposed to be free, our War College would deny American patriots even this small opportunity to demonstrate their courage and patriotism. Up to this good hour England has not passed any conscription law applying to her great Provinces. There is no conscription in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, or Ireland, and yet the American Congress is asked to raise its first army by conscription, a proceeding never before suggested in our beloved country, even when our land was invaded.

The advocates of select conscription state that the volunteer system will cause only the brave and patriotic to suffer, and that the cowards and slackers will not volunteer. I admit that only the brave and patriotic will volunteer to lay down their lives for their country, but under the select conscription system proposed by the War College only the brave and valiant will be drafted, and the slackers and cowards will be granted immunity by law, and those slackers over 25 years of age who urge select conscription—advocating sending boys under 25 to fight the battles—will stay at home, pose as patriots, and continue to loaf or ply their avocation and make money. Why do I say only the brave will go into the army under the select conscription? Because when the name of a brave man is drawn out of the box he will go to the colors, and when the name of a slacker is drawn he will seek to be exempted, and will claim physical defects, business reasons, and every other excuse he can think of, and in my judgment most of the slackers, in one way or another, will escape the call to the colors.

War is horrible; war entails sacrifice; would to God war could be averted, but I know our glorious country would prefer to have an army upholding its honor in a foreign land made up of brave, patriotic men, men who are willing to lay down their lives for their country, rather than to be represented by conscripts. I believe it is un-American, undemocratic, unjustifiable, and destructive of a free government to conscript an army from a limited few without giving the patriots of the land an opportunity to enlist to defend it. Conscription is repugnant to free government and should only be resorted to in the last extremity. Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party and one of the greatest statesmen of our country, expressed himself on conscription in a letter to his friend John Adams, of Massachusetts, as follows:

> In Virginia draft was ever the most unpopular and impracticable thing that could be attempted. Our people even under the monarchial government had learned to consider it as the last of all oppressions.

In the year 1814 the President and Secretary of War were urging the raising of an army by conscription. On December 9, 1814, in the Hall of Congress, Daniel Webster, who compares favorably in intellect and patriotism with the statesmen of today advocating select conscription, said:

> Who shall describe to you the horror which your orders of conscription shall create in the once happy villages of this country? Who shall describe the anguish and distress which they will spread over those hills and valleys where men have heretofore been accustomed to labor and to rest in security and happiness? Anticipate the scene, sir, when the class shall assemble to stand its draft and to throw the dice for blood. What a group of wives and mothers and sisters of helpless age and helpless infancy shall gather around the theater of this horrible lottery as if the strokes of death were to fall from heaven before their eyes on a father, a brother, a son, or a husband! And in the majority of cases, sir, it will be the stroke of death.
> Laws, sir, of this nature can create nothing but opposition. If you scatter them abroad, like the fabled serpent's teeth they will spring up into armed men. A military force can not be raised in this manner but by the means of a military force. If the administration has found that it can not form an army without conscription, it will find, if it venture on these experiments, that it can not enforce conscription without an army. The Government was not constituted for such purposes. Framed in the spirit of liberty and in the love of peace, it has no powers which render it able to enforce such laws. The attempt, if we rashly make it, will fail, and having already thrown away our peace we may thereby throw away our Government.

Never in any war conducted by the United States has conscription been adopted until after the patriots had been given an opportunity to volunteer. The Confederate States in 1862 passed a conscription law. The Confederate Army, all told, mustered a little over 600,000 men, and, according to Gen. Preston, Records War of Rebellion, serial No. 129, page 1099, there were 81,993 conscripts, and they were the ones who furnished the deserters. The Union Army consisted of 2,200,000 men, and of this number 120,054 were raised by conscription, 73,607 sent substitutes, and only 46,347 conscripts ever reached the firing line, and, according to Gen. SHERWOOD, they were generally worthless. Conscription is odious to the American people, and in the Civil War, when the North was conscripting soldiers, there were riots throughout the North, and there were 35,000 Union troops withdrawn from the field to suppress riots in New York City, Buffalo, Indiana, Ohio, and other Northern States caused by the conscription of soldiers. I trust, if this law is put into effect, this country will not again witness such scenes.

We are at war, and I believe if the people of this country are given an opportunity they will volunteer. I have an abiding faith in the courage, virility, and patriotism of the American men of to-day. I believe they are as patriotic, as great lovers of humanity and liberty, and that they are just as willing to make any sacrifice for the honor and glory and perpetuity of our country as were our forbears. It is a matter of common knowledge that ex-President Roosevelt asked permission of the President to organize a division of volunteers to go to France. It has been repeatedly stated on this floor that he had a list of 150,000 volunteers who were anxious to serve under him. If 150,000 men in a few days will volunteer to go with one man, it is apparent that should the President issue a call for volunteers he could raise the needed men in a very short time. But the advocates of the conscription system say the volunteers are not trained. Neither are the conscripts trained; but whether a man goes into the Army by the volunteer or the select conscription system, he is under the same rules, regulations, and control, and I have no doubt that the brave man who volunteers can be trained in less time than one who is dragged in unwillingly to the service.

Our volunteer bill, in my opinion, will give the President an army quicker than the select conscription plan, for, according to the testimony of the Secretary of War, it will be some months before an army could be conscripted, whereas if volunteers should be called for they would be secured almost at once. The Navy is our first line of defense. The Navy Department and President Wilson have not asked for select conscription for the Navy. The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee advised me that the Navy Department was receiving more volunteers for the Navy than they could take into the service. I am confident if the President would call for volunteers for the Army this same state of affairs would exist. We would get the bravest and the most valiant of our country, and America would have an army that would shed luster and renown upon her in the foreign field. But if I am mistaken, and we can not get an army by the volunteer system, the Dent bill authorized conscripting an army, but it provided that the army should be drawn from those eligible for military duty between the ages of 21 and 40. I can never give my consent to vote to conscript an army from the boys of the country between 19 and 25. To me it is unjust, unfair, undemocratic, is despotic, and savors of Prussianism. Boys under 21 have never had any voice in the affairs of government, are not permitted to vote, not authorized to enjoy the privileges of citizenship, and to ruthlessly conscript these boys and send them to the trenches in France is to me most horrible. I will never vote for such a law, let the consequences be to me what they may. These boys are inexperienced, their bodies not fully developed, their characters not yet formed, and to be conscripted and sent to a foreign country where they do not even speak the language is too awful to contemplate, and I do not believe Congress will pass such an unjust law. The Army officers and the War College are extremely anxious to have an army of boys under 20, and Hon. John Temple Graves, in an article published in the New York American over his signature, stated that the chairman of the War College told him, if their bill passed, it was their intention to organize an army of 500,000 men under 20 years of age. Subsequently to reading this article Mr. Graves told me that he was correctly quoted, and that the chairman of the War College made that statement to him. They will never do it with my vote.

I am confident if the President will call for volunteers he will receive more soldiers than he can equip, but if I am mistaken and the volunteers fail to come forward, as a last resort I will vote for conscription, but I want an equitable and fair conscription law. It is repugnant to my idea of a square deal to say that only males under 25 years of age, and a small per cent of them, should bear arms and many of them die, and all other male citizens of the country, slackers and otherwise, remain at home and say they desire to fight, but the country wouldn't permit them to do so; that the law forbade. I am especially opposed to the select conscription, for under the select conscription great injustice, partiality, and favoritism may be shown in selecting the Army. If we must have conscription, I favor making all male citizens between the military ages of 21 and 40 liable for this duty. I am opposed to special exemptions, and believe anyone physically fit, if the lot falls on him, should bear his burden. How would the select conscription of the War College be carried into effect? Their bill provides that boys between 19 and 25 should bear all the burden. The Secretary of War stated that he would require a census to be made of the boys within the military age, and would place their names in a box. That when the United States needed soldiers the number that should be furnished by each State should be apportioned according to population, and then each State should furnish its quota. That a board—and the War College desired a military board, and we all know how tyrannical a military board would be—should draw from the box in the various counties of the various States the number each should furnish. When the names were drawn this board should then say whether a person should go to the front or should be excused. The select-conscription bill exempts from military service United States and State officials, ministers of the Gospel, members of religious sects opposed to war, and those persons morally unfit for service, and it grants to the President the discretionary right to excuse from service those persons employed by the Government of the United States, those engaged in building ships, those engaged in industrial pursuits that are necessary to the successful conduct of the war, and married men with dependent families, the discretion being absolutely in the President's hands whether a person drawn should go to the front or stay at home and continue to pursue his usual avocation. When a boy's name is drawn from the box, then this board would say whether he was physically sound and fit for the service, whether he should serve in the Army or be excused. Anyone reflecting a moment will see what great injustice may be done. There may be in the same town two boys, living across the street from each other; both may be drawn, both pass the physical examination, and the board decide to send one to the trenches and permit the other to stay at home. Is this fair? Is this universal military service? It is just the opposite of universal service.

Let me give an illustration of the injustice of it. Suppose two boys graduated from college at the same time, both 23 years old. One is engaged in teaching school and the other engaged as bookkeeper in some industrial plant, each earning $1,200 a year. Say, the names of both are drawn from the box and both found physically fit; the board, passing on the exemption, might say to the school-teacher, "You are not engaged in any business that is contributing to the success of the war, so you go to the front," and might say to the bookkeeper, "You are working for an industrial plant; you stay at home." Two young men, one practicing law, the other working in one of the departments at Washington; if the names of both were drawn, the board could say to the lawyer, "You go to the front at $15 per month pay," and to the Government clerk, "You remain in Washington and continue to draw an $1,800 salary." If drawn a young physician, dentist, clerk, bank cashier, or college student would doubtless be sent to the front, while the superintendent of some mill, a coal miner, a Government clerk, a mechanic in some ship-building yard or munitions factory, would be permitted to stay at home. Or two young farmers might be drawn, one a wheat, the other a cotton, farmer; one sent to the front, and the other kept at home.

"Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, the other left.

"Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left." Luke 17.

Let me quote from Senator REED:

Is the reason for selective draft to be that some military man shall go around and say to the wealthy son of a wealthy man, "You have a large fortune to manage; you shall not go, even though willing. We will lay our hand on some poor wretch who has had no advantage in life; he will make good cannon fodder"? Or, perhaps, the military gentleman, being actuated by a spirit of democracy and equality and fairness, will say to the machinist who has been drafted, "You had an opportunity to learn the trade, and therefore you shall not go. I will look around and find some one who never had a chance, who can only work with his arms, and say to him, 'You have no trade, and therefore it shall be your business to die in defense of the man who has the trade.'" That, sir, is democratic equality of the selective draft.

I am not in favor of any law that makes possible this great injustice. I believe that if conscription is to be enforced it should be uniform and apply to all alike. I believe that the only fair way of conscription would be that when the names are drawn out of the box, if a man passes the physical examination, no matter what his business or avocation, whether rich or poor, whether occupying a high or low station in his community, he should go to the front. This is universal; this is democratic; this treats all alike; but the War College's select-conscription bill is opposed to this plan. The advocates of select conscription say there should be a discretion left with the board to determine who should go and who should stay, for they might cripple industries by sending some men to the front, and that some other men were rendering better service by remaining at home. If we were drawing all the men in this country, there might be some reason for this argument. According to the military experts, there are between the ages of 21 and 40, 22,000,000 men within the United States, and if you raise an army of 1,000,000 you can only take 1 out of 22, and I am sure no one can intelligently sustain the proposition that taking 1 out of 22 will injure any industry. The vacancy thus made in the industry could be filled by boys under 21 or men over 40.

The advocates of the War College bill realize how repulsive to the American people the word "conscription" is, and they are attempting to sugar-coat it by calling it "select conscription." The press, with wonderful unanimity, is advocating the select-conscription bill, and certain interests in New York have been sending out telegrams throughout the country urging their correspondent to telegraph Members of Congress to support the select-conscription bill and stand by the President, but the public was not informed as to the terms of the bill. The impression has become prevalent throughout the country that the select draft means that they will select people to do the fighting who are loafing and not engaged in any lawful pursuit. When the law is put in operation and all citizens within the military age are required to register under penalty of being sent to the penitentiary, and their names are put in the box, and they are thus made liable for military service, and the sword of Damocles is kept suspended over their heads, many who now think they are for the select-conscription bill will suddenly change their opinion overnight. I can imagine, when the day of drawing comes, fathers and mothers will accompany their dear boys to town and will stand around and watch the "roulette wheel" as it spins to determine whether their dear son shall stay at home or shall be prepared possibly to become a victim to the German cannon. I can imagine the heart-rending agony of this father and mother when the lot falls upon their son. I can imagine how they will feel toward the Government when their beloved son and the boy across the street are drawn and their son is sent to the front and the neighbor's boy is left at home. This is what I fear will happen when this select conscription is put in operation. I am bitterly opposed to it.

I advocated an amendment to strike out the select part of the conscription law, to leave it so that if one is drawn and is physically fit he should go to the front, and no board should be permitted to pass upon whether he should stay at home or whether he was to go, thus giving all citizens of military age—between 21 and 40—an equal opportunity before the law. The advocates of the select draft say that there is a universal liability for military service to your country. I deny that it is carrying out universal military service to say that only a small per cent of men between 19 and 25 should perform military service and all others be exempt. It is also true that it is the duty of all citizens who own property to pay taxes to support the Government. There is not a Member of this House who would have the effrontery to vote for a law providing that only citizens owning property between the ages of 19 and 25 should pay taxes and let other citizens owning property be exempt. To me human life is more precious by far than money or property. I would not vote for a law so unjustly discriminating against the people of this country when it comes to paying taxes, and, as God is my judge, I will not vote for a law which confines the conscript for military service only to boys between 19 and 25.

The idea is common in some sections that all married men and farmers will be exempt from military service. This is not true, and when the law is put in operation many who now think they have immunity from conscription will wake up and find themselves in some training camp. The War College bill asks an appropriation of $140,000,000 for the purpose of caring for the dependent families of men in the Army. If married men and those having dependents are to be excused, why the need of this enormous sum of money to support their dependents? As to whether or not farmers, when drawn, will be required to serve, let me quote from the remarks of Secretary of War Baker before the Military Affairs Committee:

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Secretary, I believe it might be said to be common knowledge in this country now that the laborers engaged in agricultural pursuits have become distressingly limited, and many writers have charged the high cost of living to the fact that people have left the farm, and there is nobody there except a limited few to produce the foodstuffs of the country. Have you taken into consideration in your department the question of excluding or limiting the draft upon those that might be engaged in agricultural pursuits?

Secretary BAKER. So far as the present year is concerned, it seems entirely unlikely that our arrangements could be perfected so as to begin the drafting of men until after the season of planting has passed and the season of cultivating is well advanced. The season of harvest would therefore seem to be this year the one we have most to consider. The Council of National Defense would undoubtedly be constantly in touch with that situation through the Department of Agriculture and subordinate committees, and if it should turn out to be at all a necessary thing to do, some system of furloughing from the Army during the peak load of the harvest season might be adopted to relieve that situation.

Mr. KAHN. But if our troops were sent to the battle fronts of Europe, how would you furlough the men?

Secretary BAKER. Of course, it would be impossible under those circumstances.

The House bill provided for territorial enlistment, contrary to the wishes of the War Department and the War College. I do not believe anyone except the Army officers, upon reflection, will oppose territorial enlistment. Surely Germany is a good authority on military efficiency, and Germany recognizes territorial enlistment. We frequently read in the papers that the Bavarian troops, the Brandenburg Division, or some other Prussian division, or some English regiment like the Scotch Greys, Canadian Regulars, or Princess Pat's Regiment, had distinguished themselves in the horrible carnage now going on in Europe. You will recall in our Civil War how the Twelfth Georgia, or some Illinois, or New York, or Virginia regiment immortalized itself. The War College is opposed to territorial enlistment, and prefer to merge everything into a national army. They desire, if three boys are enlisted in a town in Georgia, to grade them as to ages and sizes and send one possibly to some New York regiment, another to a Mississippi regiment, and another to an Iowa regiment, while territorial enlistment will require that, so far as possible, they be kept together.

I have no doubt but where boys from any locality, fighting for their country, are kept together, in the same company, they will be more contented and will make better soldiers. When they go into battle they will know that some lifelong friend is there who will be glad to minister to them if they are wounded, and if they are dying will be glad to receive their last message to their loved ones far away at home.

A soldier of the Legion lay dying in Algiers;
There was lack of woman's nursing, there was dearth of woman's tears;
But a comrade stood beside him, while his lifeblood ebb'd away,
And bent with pitying glances, to hear what he might say.
The dying soldier falter'd, as he took that comrade's hand,
And he said, "I never more shall see my own, my native land.
Take a message and a token to some distant friends of mine."
* * * * * * *
His voice grew faint and hoarser, his grasp was childish weak,
His eyes put on a dying look, he sighed and ceased to speak;
His comrade bent to lift him, but the spark of life had fled;
The soldier of the Legion in a foreign land was dead.

Conscription to me is contrary to the spirit of a government of the people, for the people, and by the people, and I fought it in every way I could, but the overwhelming majority of the House defeated raising an army by the volunteer system.

We are at war, and when Congress decided that it would not raise an army by the volunteer system but that conscription should be applied, I opposed select conscription and did what I could to make conscription democratic and universal and apply to all, but again Congress decreed otherwise. We are at war, and the honor and glory and preservation of the American Government requires that we have an army at once to protect our rights. I could not get the Army the way I preferred and labored for, but, as an American Congressman, I believe I will be derelict in my duty if I vote against the only remaining method of providing an army for the defense of my country; and for this reason, and for this reason alone, I shall vote for the Dent bill with the volunteer provision eliminated, but materially changed from the War College bill. The Dent bill fixes the ages for conscription from 21 to 40, instead of 19 to 25; requires a civil, instead of a military, board to pass on exemptions; it directs that territorial enlistments shall be recognized; and it raises the salaries of the privates from $15 to $30 per month.

I am conscious of the abuse and criticism that the press heaps upon Members of Congress who have the courage to represent their people and to vote their honest convictions to adhere to the American principle of raising an army by the volunteer system. I regret that I find myself unable to support the select-conscription plan proposed by the War College. To me select conscription of only boys between 19 and 25 is unfair, unjust, and contrary to the principles of free government. After mature reflection, and I am not ashamed to say earnest prayer, I have decided my duty requires me to oppose it. My conscience disapproves it, my judgment condemns it, and my soul's convictions are against it, and I shall be true to my conscience and convictions. I am prepared to take whatever consequences may flow to me from having fearlessly performed my duty as God gave me the light to see it.

Address By E. J. Giddings.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH B. THOMPSON,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 8, 1917.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, under the general leave to extend remarks on the bill providing an army for the war with Germany, I present an address by E. J. Giddings, of the United Spanish War Veterans, Oklahoma City Camp, No. 3, at Oklahoma City, Okla., April 19, 1917.

The address is as follows:

My Countrymen, these are the times when we can lay aside all personal dislikes and other differences for the common good. From these and kindred meetings through patriotic interchange of views may come great benefit to the great Republic.

The peaceite, called the pacifist, theoretically talks peace when war is a grim reality. That will not do. Its absurdity does not appeal to the most comically inclined within the Union; it but encourages our enemies; it can not discourage the Government.

This is an occasion for heart to heart talks, and not for the exhibition of eloquence and of rhetoric for that exhibition's sake. Petty personal ambitions must quit. Individual and collective ambition to serve the country alone shall govern. We are one for one Republic and under One who will guide us well throughout it all; so discussions close and war begins and all conflicts of opinion are merged in efforts for a greater destiny.

And who shall go to this war of wars? Surely first only those who can best afford to go—the young man without an indigent parent to support; youth with golden dreams but not age with silver locks; the man who has no holy family ties; the sons of the rich, the workers, and the toilers whom duty beckons on; all those who are able, that they may do service in the holiest war that ever inspired hymnster and the harp. And, then, trooping in millions, if ever needed, fathers, husbands, and even old, lame, and halt will come if whole men give out through the vastness of the enterprise. What a glorious opportunity for young American manhood!

He who speaks upon these occasions should not ask others to do that which if able he will not do himself. We are here to urge enlistment. We are here—and elsewhere in the Union it is the same—to let all nations know that we are in earnest and able to support that earnestness with as willing and courageous men as ever cheered a flag or heard a cannon roar. Less than our duty we can not do. Should we fail in that duty we might become a vanquished and a pauper nation. Our duty calls for action and calls for service.

And how shall this great army be raised, meeting all conditions? Manifestly it must be raised by whatever means the Government may decide. What it decrees, to it we agree. Through the filling up of militia and Regular Army units, by selective conscription, choosing by wise and patriotic draft, if need be, the best in brain and brawn, with carefully picked proportions of each industry so as not to cripple business, labor, or the farm, and by volunteer organizations, we will let the Kaiser know we are coming 100,000,000 strong.

And what would the record of our country be without the immortal story of the American volunteer? From the time of the "old continentals in their ragged regimentals" he has carried us from victory unto victory, from glory unto glory. He has been our guide, our prop, our stay. He will be coequal with the Regulars of sturdy build and of purpose inflexible. Throughout the War between the States his star ever was effulgent. And in that conflict between the North and South it was American heroism and American genius on whatever side it was displayed. And so it shall be now, whether in the trenches of Europe, in the land of Mexico, in the units getting ready for service, or at home patriotically provident to pull puppets from their tottering thrones.

And what other courses are open than here suggested? Mark our complicated racial conditions. See Russia with her numerous different peoples, different in tongue, religion, and in slumbering ideals, with some meek and others strong, but nearly all of Slavonic origin. But here we have almost all the races, in goodly numbers, that are at each other's throats in Europe—Germans, British, Italians, Austrians, Hungarians, Irish, Poles, Slavs, French, and many others from the other nations of the globe. To undertake to organize all these discordant elements into one army will be hazarded with prudence. What wisdom, what patience, what consecration to service thus are needed! Here are problems vaster than storming enemy positions and sinking submarines. Amid these conditions do you not think your Government should have the best in thought and action of all of you, loyal native and loyal foreign born? Think about it in the day and pray over it in the patient night!

And so we need an army—not an autocratic army. Are we not fighting autocracy in its most hideous forms? If there were one thought above another along these lines, it would be to say to the Government, "Democratize your Army and Navy." On duty there should be, of course, stern discipline, prompt work, and strict attention; off duty the same equality of the civil walks of life. In the past, in fear that this was not so, young America often has hesitated to enlist. He did not want to be a menial, but a soldier; he did not care to be a servant, but a warrior, willing to work and fight, but unwilling to shine an officer's boots or press his pantaloons. The truest service is rendered by those least subject to humiliating exactions. Waiting on the table is one thing, but it is another and a glorious thing to wait in the trenches or as a sentry beneath the stars. And so it has come to pass, under the gallant Hoffman and our other gallant officers, that Oklahoma boys have been and will be soldiers and not servants! Democratize your Army and your Navy as the surest means to unlimited enlistment and the most patriotic service.

We are living in the most stupendous period of history. All know that. Almost the whole map of the world may change ere peace blows his melodious bugle again. War is infectious, contagious, like a plague, taking not only the first born but killing the hopes and joys of those who went through the pangs and possibilities and dread of death to bring them into being.

And they will suffer most, these mothers, these fathers. They have a right to demand, and their demand will be obeyed, that the sons they give to their country shall be equipped and protected by the most perfect weapons of offensive and defensive warfare that genius can create. They have as well the right to require that those put over their boys shall be competent to command and to protect, where ignorance might lead to traps and butchery and death—officers chosen because of character and efficiency rather than on account of ability to control primaries or pack political conventions. And in this State and throughout this Union these wishes will be realities, for Columbia longs to come forth sun-kissed with victory in humanity's cause.

And when this army is raised, and raised it will be by the might of right, what shall it do and where shall it go? Divergent as may be the views of the press, against whom the charge of being subsidized by the money of the allies is so patently absurd as hardly to need denial, and whose very divergent views upon this subject are the best testimonials of not being subsidized, the American people want their Army in those places where it can do the most good in the shortest period, that war soon may end and peace return. Shall our efforts be confined to patrolling the seas, hunting submarines, protecting our passenger and freight-carrying vessels and our extensive coast lines, or shall we as well take common ground with the allies, fighting side by side with them, and stopping only when all unitedly agree to sheathe the swords and furl the flags? Obviously if we are the great people we think we are, and are, we wish to share the burdens (we care not for the mere glories) of those with whom we are now allied. And there is a middle ground that suits the real American. Under our volunteer system let those volunteers go across the seas who wish, as suggested by that great jurist, but greater man, Judge Thomas Doyle. If you will let all of them go who so desire, you will flood the gory fields of Europe with as knightly soldiers as ever went full panoplied in courage into battle. There is your solution—there the jeweled key that unlocks the door of patriotism's palace. And if ever man, despite partisanship, bitter virility of language, and rancorous criticism, on any field deserved to lead an American division, or a multitude of divisions, it is the red-blooded Roosevelt!

Did we do less than all these things we would be the puny and dyspeptic Government of Christendom. Now that the American people have started they will not be satisfied until the Stars and Stripes float over the capitol of Mexico to bring order out of anarchy; until the flag, with the emblems of the entente, triumphantly waves over the citadels of Berlin.

And while all this is being prepared and is going on, as on it must, how shall we live and upon what shall we subsist? Here, then, the man behind the plow as much is needed as the man behind the gun. And whenever you think the American farmer is not as patriotic as you are you have greatly blundered. He does not wear his patriotism on his sleeve nor do you, but has it enshrined in his heart and mind at his fireside and wherever wanted. Did he not shoot defiance while at Lexington, and has he not done it through all our splendid conflicts? With him to-day we face a mighty problem. Besides ourselves, we must feed and clothe, or partly so, many teeming millions across the seas. With crop shortages there and crop shortages here we may confront dangers greater, lest we be careful, than all the fast dissolving guns of Germany.

By sad experience has that farmer learned that often the greater amount of a given product that he raised the less price therefor did he receive. By governmental supervision, by encouraging a diversified and abundant production of life's necessaries, and fixing for him the minimum price he shall get therefor, we protect him from want and wrong and aid to keep down the hunger of mankind.

Is that enough? It is not. For the protection of all of us, at home and abroad, a maximum price for foodstuffs and other necessities must be controlled by legislative enactment or by governmental interference. Under these conditions he who would seek to fix the price of commodities would be as great a traitor as he who would spit upon the flag! Public necessity is the highest law known to patriotic governments.

And public necessity requires that the rich pay for this war, for, largely on account of numbers, the poor will fill the Army's and the Navy's ranks. Through voluntary contributions, by big taxes upon the incomes of the rich, by cost-price bargains from the armor, steel, munitions, and other plants, by these and similar agencies the genius of good government requires that these burdens fall where they belong and where they can best be borne.

For other burdens are there for the others. The watchword for our home people is "Economize! Economize!" To say that to the average man is to give him a riddle he can hardly solve. But a little saving and wisdom here and a little saving and wisdom yonder ultimately will assist to work the wonders that for the public good must come.

Make gardens, gardens, and plant and raise in those gardens in all towns and cities as you require of the farmers in the fields. Flowers for your heroes are beautiful, but eatables for their stomachs are the thing!

Economize! Take notice of England! See her ordinary citizens, when war began, give scant attention to economy, and note now the price they pay. We can do it because we must, and "must" now sounds good to the good American. In doing it we not only help ourselves, but speed the day when peace will come back to us as if the Maytime had returned forever.

And so we have multifarious duties not only at the front but here at home. And those of you at home may be as patriotic as those of us who go. Upon you falls the pleasant task of bringing to justice the few defamers of your President and your Government. Remember for offenses like these, committed in your presence, even as private citizens, you have the power to arrest and to call on any officer or citizen for assistance. Do your duty there. Unfortunately, there are a few, and every country has them, who make necessary the observance of that duty. If such you hear mouth his treason, hit him with anything that is handy. Patriotic officers will not arrest you, and if they do, there is not an American lawyer but will defend you for nothing and acquit you.

Keep alive your patriotism, both externally and in your heads and hearts. Let there be flag emblems on your coats; flags, flags everywhere, and whenever possible "Dixie" and the "Star-Spangled Banner"! It is not that all these things are necessary, but that they may be companions to you should occasion call for action.

And how could it thus call? Nothing is impossible as against a people unprepared in sentiment and in arms. Picture to yourselves, and it could be were we not getting ready, the Mexicans and Germans marching forward through Texas and into Oklahoma on their way to the National Capital, with an immense army and powerful guns we are unable to withstand. They thunder at the gates of Oklahoma City. Their huge missiles crumble into ruins our churches and other magnificent edifices. The conquerors enter the bomb-riddled community to the mingled strains of the "Watch on the Rhine" and "La Paloma." Thus they control the capital and metropolis of the Commonwealth, leaving in command thereof the Mexican general, Chile Hot Tamales! As they depart, and as brutally they have done elsewhere, they take with them the chaste and virginal womanhood of the city as hostages and for other unspeakable purposes. Of course, it will not come to pass. Yet has it not come to others better prepared to withstand assault? May it never be with us! May the eyes of all of us be stricken blind before, in horror, they rest upon such awful sights!

Ah, yes; there is work for the home guard; there is need for the training of all; there is necessity for the protection of home industries and home concerns. With sentimental and substantial encouragement from employers to those who go, with measures of precaution and ample means for their continued existence, there are opportunities at home for as great a patriotism, in its way, as there are opportunities for those upon the firing lines, on the briny waters, or blood-stained fields.

And so they say that this is a rich man's war. They lie. No war for humanity can be a rich man's war. The aggregate of human kind is far from opulence, is of average means or poor. Freedom for all humanity is their freedom and their opportunity to get from under the groaning tyrannies of the Old World and to obtain further great blessings in the new.

Unpreparedness is the poor man's nemesis. With unpreparedness and the cutting off of our trade by the closing of our ports, with wheat going down to 30 cents thereby, and other commodities in like proportion, with factories closed and workshops idle, and thus with no employment standing like a blind Bartimeus at the gates of Jericho, the poor man would suffer while the rich would still have some luxury. How, then, can preparedness and this war be against the poor?

Nor were we plunged therein because only the rich took sea voyages when they were warned to stay at home. It was the poor, in numbers and thus in sorrow, who suffered most from the murderers of the seas—the stokers, firemen, deck hands, seamen, and the like, who had the same right to earn an honest livelihood in their chosen work upon the waters as their brothers had upon the land. For these we fight, and for the future. For the wrong done them and their loved ones and all murdered Americans and all mankind we raise war's standard, to remain until the seas from murder are as safe as the green-skirted paths of the peaceful countrysides.

And why should not this be so? That government, when able, which will not protect its citizens is not fit to live. By its very being it obligates itself to such protection. Directly, and indirectly, it imposes and receives taxes from its people for its support and is supposed to guarantee and give protection in return. And it can not measure whether it will give protection by the number and character of citizens assaulted and killed and property destroyed, for assault upon one citizen and his property is an assault upon all, whether on land or sea. Where is the difference? This is the basic theory of civilized government. Knowing war to be barbarous, and acting for the mass of our countrymen, yet unafraid, this Government humanely hoped to continue peace until hope vanished with the return of treachery and murder.

And they thought, these Teutons—meaning those in authority—on account of the patience hitherto exhibited, they could resume their murderous practices and go on interminably. Warned they were, with ample and emphatic warning. While asserting, in retaliation of our war declaration, they would not make war on us in return, they were making war and feigning noncombatancy in vain effort to stir up anti-war sentiment within the Union.

And have they not done enough to justify any warlike action against them? Aside from the murder of hundreds of American men, women, and children, whose sepulchers they have made the beds of oceans, in time of peace with us they have sought to create treason and sedition among our people; again, in times of peace with us they have planted spies in every nook and corner of our land; they have used the most heinous means to seek to foment rebellion among the negroes of the South with promises of glorious social and economic benefits for the future, but to no avail, for these negroes unitedly are loyal; while enjoying, in both official and individual capacities, the hospitality of our country, they have endeavored to create enmity against us in the breast of our stricken but sister Republic of Mexico; playing upon the supposed racial pride of the Japanese and blunderingly there seeking to manufacture resentment against us because of our alien laws, they have tried to gain a warlike combination with Japan, that war with that great power might follow friendship; ingloriously they have tried to impress our German citizens with only duty to the fatherland and with hate and action against their adopted country when the call should come; by secret agents and devious means they have attempted to get across the border as many Germans, residents and citizens of this country, as they could, that there they might organize combined German and Mexican armies for aggression against this Government. With unsurpassable stupidity upon their part, or believing it unsurpassable stupidity upon the part of Mexicans, and while at peace with this Republic, they have sought an alliance with all Mexican factions upon the promise to add to Mexico the State of Texas and other States of the Union, little dreaming perhaps that all the world together hardly could do that; they have dynamited our factories and blown up our industries; they have violated every principle and practice of national decency, canceled every pledge made unto us, assassinated our hospitality and our citizens, and practiced every foul fraud and shifty subterfuge interdicted by all the codes of international honor. They are the menace of mankind; the peace disturbers of the world; the damned and doomed imperialistic government of this convulsive age. They must go, this Kaiser and his kind!

With the President we say that we are not fighting the German people, but autocracy and all its wrongs. But we add to that immortal declaration when we say that not only are we not fighting the Geman people, but that we are fighting for the German people, that love and peace may follow hate and war and that henceforth all men shall be free and equal in every generation.

Before our entrance into this conflict we were unfortunate as a neutral nation, for, under such circumstances it is so easy for belligerents to misunderstand. While hostilities with the central powers may amount to little, or soon be over, or may be immense by other powers joining in and by the length of war, we now stand immeasurably higher in the estimation of civilization's vast majority. Uncle Sam has awakened with a mighty yawn and gone gloriously to work! We can not fail to benefit by increase in national defense, national spirit, and in national character. And this is worth the sacrifice we make.

Before each warring nation, ever and anon, had some grievance, spasmodically appearing in the public prints or finding utterance through the public tongue. Great Britain thought we should have joined with her because of kinship of language and of blood. Germany thought she, too, could claim unprecedented neutrality by having us cut off war shipments to the allies, forgetting she had done the same thing in making such shipments when other nations were at war and she at peace, and basing her claims of friendliness in these respects through the 8,000,000 of Germans here who were and are among our best, most loyal, most progressive citizens. France also came with hopes of active aid because of her help to us in Revolutionary times, given us to cripple her then ancient enemy. And so we stood not altogether friendly with any nation engaged in the death struggle of all death struggles history records.

How different is it now! We are in a positive position, with every Government knowing exactly where we stand and what we mean.

And have we lost thereby? More closely have we knit ties that bind us to Japan. By our entrance into this war we have assured that gallant little nation that never do we expect war with her, and she has responded in the same splendid and unconquerable spirit. After this war a single-handed contest with Germany is an impossibility. Have not these things their manifest and manifold advantages?

And now we let the whole world know how strong we are, and that pays the cost of war for all contingencies of the future. Concededly we are the richest nation that exists. If need be, we can put 20,000,000 soldiers in the field and arm them for actual service in comparatively an incredible short period of time. That is something no other government can accomplish. You could build an impassible wall around us and easily we could live after an adjustment of conditions. When the War between the States ended, the Union had the greatest Army and greatest Navy, in point of numbers and of strength, in all the world. If, torn with internal strife, Americans could do that then, with the great increase of population and resources, infinitely more by them can now be accomplished.

Let us know our country's abilities as well as limitations. Certainly it does not divulge a secret to assert that your navy is the best in quality, and not very much lacking in quantity, as compared with that of any naval power, while the bravery of its men and the efficiency of its officers are denied by none; while the superiority of their marksmanship over all has been demonstrated by many scores in many contests. Your coast-defense guns are the biggest and most powerful in existence. Thus you now stand ready to command the respect of all mankind.

The percentage of illiteracy among real Americans is less than that of any people. The inventive genius of your country, put to the test, rivals that of all the world combined. In this age of the engines of destruction in war a multitude of men is needed less and a multitude of brains is needed more. And yet you have both!

Your Edison, who said two years ago that the weapons in use in the war were mere toys to what could be invented, and if his country needed it, and for no one else, he could invent something worth while, is now at work, inaccessible to all, possibly, as rumor has it, upon the bomb which, when it explodes, kills everything of animal life within 3 miles of the explosion! These are terrible things but necessary these awful times. Thank God for Edison as well as Wilson!

And watch the young American, Hammond, scarcely out of his teens, patriotic son of a rich but patriotic father. And though some may sneer, there are many rich these days who are richer far in patriotism than they are in material wealth, though that wealth may mount into the millions. And what of young Hammond? See his wireless torpedo, guided from the shore, and so scientifically and accurately that it hits even a reed in the ocean 15 miles away 14 out of 15 times! Is this not genius soaring to the topmost peak?

Your numerous other inventors all are at work. Do your part! The great men of Europe, as well as here, are expecting great things from America's creative sons. And they shall not be disappointed!

And why should they be disappointed? The iron and armor clads, successors to wooden ships, originally were American inventions. Do you not remember the Monitor and the Merrimac? The submarine is an American invention. The airship is an American invention. The heavy artillery and guns of France that play havoc with Teutonic lines are American inventions. Numerous torpedoes, bombs, explosives, guns, and weapons of all kinds now in use upon the battle fields of Europe, are of American make or American invention. But why extend the list? If for others or for invention's rewards alone these things can be done by Americans, what can not be accomplished when the Republic calls her inventive sons to heed their country's needs with all the stimulant to talent and to genius that the patriotic heating of the blood by war creates? Here, then, are the tests of Americanism and of Christianity!

And they say that this war proves the failure of the Christian religion—these atheists, these infidels here and in other lands. Little do they know its greatness when they so declaim! Is it not the supreme test of the ages from which that religion shall emerge the eternal but peaceful victor of all the victors? Time alone can tell, but even now time points the way in that celestial direction. Is it not in accord with divine prophecy? For after this war shall come peace forever among the nations as their sons, true to biblical foretelling, beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks. And was not this awful cataclysm needed to bring about that glorious consummation? Is it not so that everything everlastingly good comes after stupendous sacrifice?

What civilized nation has dared to invoke the wrath of Almighty God as its soldiers went into battle? And shall we not rid ourselves of the "Unspeakable Turk" and his Christian massacres? And, again, what civilized nation has failed to invoke His divine guidance? Men and nations must work out their own salvation until they reach that point where God is love and love is God.

See Russia emerge! See religious freedom ensue! Mark the liberation of the Jews in the interests of humanity and as a heavenly reward for their genius at every weighty council table and for their heroism on every bloody battle field. Mark it, too, as the beginning of civil and religious freedom forever and everywhere. And be just, and record it as not the failure but as the triumph of Christianity for all the coming, God-like ages!

I pull back the magic curtain that hides the future from the wistful view of expectant Love. I see all the nations of the world at peace. I see all armaments reduced to nothingness. The light and beautiful crown of human happiness has replaced the heavy iron one of hideous war. I hear the men and women singing in the fields where once there roared the guns and ran the blood of earth's best and bravest—the common people. Joy follows misery. The faces of women illumined are with ardent affection and with holy hope and crooning lullabies again become earth's litanies. God reigns! The reeling heads and forms of drunkenness are gone forever. Enlightenment fills all continents and everywhere all men and women read and write and talk in common language good and in thought of cleanest origin. Crime, as ever, still remains, but with his cohorts fast decreasing. Inventions multiply for the common weal. Luxuries have become the ordinary comforts of mankind. No longer tread vast armies while poverty pitifully pleads against the brutal burdens they impose. Arbitration has securely and everlastingly locked and barred the doors of war. Each man is a freeman; each family home owners—the surest guarantee of liberty and right of which human statesmanship can conceive. There are no subjects and no serfs, but citizens—citizens all in every land where Christian edifices almost kiss the fleecy clouds.

No longer do men rule by descent but by ascent; no longer are scepters handed down from sire to son, but men, and women, too, arise to grasp them through effort, worth, ability, courage, character, through all good things human, and by all things divine.

The dream's Utopian, you say? Ah, no; for thus is it written in all the tumultous tomes of Fate. The world's workers, comprising its vast majority, have their brotherhoods that will never brook aught but right and peace, and thus they work in perfect harmony with those of every other enterprise. Wages are gone and in their place a just proportion of that which toil and talent may produce. By the necromancy of universal edict all navies transformed have been into white vessels of 40 knots the hour, carrying human freight and the products of mankind to welcome ports throughout the world. Upon the land and in the air the ships of commerce hither and thither move with lightning speed and thus quickly and indissolubly band together all peoples of every land. Love rules the earth and seas!

War did it all—war brought to a close by the awakened and unconquerable giant of the West! One league of peace forever suppresses war and holds the world in perfect poise.

Thank God for America!

Then come on, you loyal sons of Oklahoma! Contribute your part to the welfare of the world. Remember those urging you are going with you to the front. Your country calls. You are not deaf. Oklahoma Cityans do your share! You can ill afford to be behind the other gallant towns and cities of the State for the capital and metropolis should blaze the way for Oklahoma's glory. Oklahomans, remember that we have been the favored child of our great Government!

There is no middle ground, for a citizen these times is either an American or a traitor. By the solemn and satisfactory words of those who know you will never have occasion for regret. There is no tonic for physical betterment equal to American military training in time of war, for vigor there is needed and obtained. If in any degree you are physically weak, you will come out strong. Such is the record of our Army and our Navy. If you are strong, you will come out stronger—stronger in mind, in morals, and physique. So far as the dramas of our physical lives are concerned, the caprices of fate play leading parts therein, so that should you die remember that in a hundred years or so it would not make any difference anyway, and this is said in all seriousness and affection.

Proudly you will be one who took part in the war of wars! Fill up your National Guard! When the war is ended, and if you wish, immediately you can come home to the open arms of a most gracious and most grateful citizenship. Honor your State militia as your State protects and honors you. Partly pay the debt of gratitude you owe your country for the blessings and the liberty you enjoy. And when it is over—and by all signs of the martial zodiac it can not last so long—in years to come your fondest and tenderest memories, memories that will ever keep you up to manhood's sturdiest stature, your surest passports to private and to public favor, your safest pathways to respect and to success, will be your service in the Army or Navy of your country—your country that needs you now and loves you always.

An Answer to the Secretary of the Cleveland Real Estate Board.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM GORDON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 7, 1917.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, embodying an answer to the secretary of the Cleveland Real Estate Board, in which he criticized my action upon the conscription bill:

MAY 3, 1917.

STANLEY M. MCMICHAEL,
Secretary the Cleveland Real Estate Board, Cleveland, Ohio.

SIR: I have your telegram of the 2d instant, advising me of the resolution of disapproval of my action adopted by your board, which I assume relates to my attitude on the conscription bill.

I do not know that I have any personal acquaintance with any of your members, but I understand you are all above 25 years of age, and that you strongly favor that figure as the maximum age limit for military service, and that your board members are especially enthusiastic for restricting the draft for the first million men to boys of 19 and 20 years of age, to the end that all of the rest of the man power of the Nation be exhausted before you are reached.

This inhuman zeal to rush the boys of 19 and 20 into the trenches indicates a national decadence and civic rottenness which is to-day the greatest menace that threatens the life of this Nation.

This letter is to advise you of the receipt of your telegram, and further, that I have derived more sincere satisfaction from the assistance I was able to render in defeating the un-American provision of the bill which provided for conscripting minors into the military service and the adoption of other wholesome amendments than from any other official act since I have been a Member of the American Congress.

Yours, truly,

WILLIAM GORDON.

A Common Language.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks I desire to print in the RECORD a letter from George B. Wrenn, 363 Union Street, Ashland, Ohio, favoring the adoption of a common language. This may be headed toward the millenium but is worthy of thought and consideration.

The letter is as follows:

APRIL 27, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM ASHBROOK, of Ohio,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: It seems to me that Congress has a great opportunity just now, along with preparation for war, to also make preparation for peace, and that by making a suggestion to the world of a universal language. To do it Congress should pass a resolution calling on the President of the United States to request all the parliaments of the world to adopt Esperanto or some other language as an international language, and that the parliaments require the language to be taught in public schools and universities, and that orders also be issued by the various parliaments requesting or commanding the newspapers of each country to print the vocabulary, rules, and instructions in the language at least once this year, that all people the world over may be in a position to take up the study.

Thoughtful people believe that after this great war is ended we will enter a new age—an age of democracy—when people will live at peace with one another. Then the barriers that separate nations will be largely broken down, and there will be as free intercourse between the peoples of the various nations as now between peoples of the various States in the United States. Then a common language will be absolutely necessary. The time that the world should begin to study it is now, in order that the language may be generally known by the time the new age really begins.

Naturally not just anyone could take the initiative in introducing such a novel suggestion. It will require a parliament that is daring enough to put the proposition up to the world, and that has influence enough that the world will take it up. Our Congress ought to be daring enough to start it, and just now, when nearly the whole world has suddenly looked with favor upon the United States, Congress would have influence enough to be able to receive favorable consideration for such a proposition. As you will understand, should Congress make the suggestion it would be talked about in every legislative hall on earth, now that the eyes of the world are on America, and should two or three big nations adopt it the rest of the world would immediately take it up and adopt it too. The proposition should meet with the favor of people of every nation, because thinking people would understand that hereafter it would be only necessary to learn two languages, the native tongue and Esperanto, or whatever language should be suggested.

Of course, no national language could be suggested as a universal language, because national pride would prevent people of one nation from taking up the language of another as the international language, and an artificial language would be absolutely necessary. Then, national languages are full of mistakes and irregularities, requiring several years of study, which is more time than can be expected of people to give to the cause.

I suggest Esperanto because it is the most practical of artificial languages. It is made up of root words such as are common to most European languages. To these are added endings to indicate the parts of speech. Then, some 8 prefixes and 24 suffixes are used, any one or more of which may be added to the roots, thus forming other words easily understood. The various combinations replace several thousand words that in any other language would need to be memorized word by word. Phonetic spelling is used and irregularities of all kinds are cut out. The consequence is that Esperanto is so simple that anyone of ordinary intelligence can learn the language within a few months and linguists in a few weeks.

Esperanto is already pretty well established throughout the world. Ten years ago the American consul at Breslau, Germany, warned American manufacturers and commercial men that they must learn Esperanto or lose their world trade to French and Germans, who are utilizing the language. Nearly all international congresses held this century have recommended Esperanto as the international language for their various societies. There is more literature published in Esperanto than in all other artificial languages combined, so I understand, and instructions in the language are not hard to obtain. Instruction books are to be found in most newspaper offices, or can be quickly obtained, from which to publish instructions for their subscribers, in case the nations adopt the language. Some 15,000,000 or more people in the world speak the language.

By recommending Esperanto, Congress would save much time that otherwise would be spent in selecting a language, so that people could begin studying it soon. Teachers could learn it in time to begin teaching it at the fall term of school, and every one, other than children, could be able to speak the language before the year is closed.

A world language is bound to be adopted eventually, and I am writing this to you, honorable sir, trusting you may be interested by the suggestion and find opportunity to introduce the resolution in the House during this session and make it possible for Congress to bring this great blessing to the world now. I do not believe you could do the world a greater service than to give its people a universal language that all men may be able to understand each other.

Should you be interested, you may feel at liberty to use this letter in any way you choose, should it be of any use to you.

Respectfully,

GEORGE B. WRENN.

Emergency Bond Issue.

SPEECH

OF

HON. HORACE M. TOWNER,

OF IOWA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 14, 1917.

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2762) to authorize an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is not to prevent the United States rendering financial aid to the nations now engaged as we are in fighting Germany. It may be very important that we should do so. We certainly should do everything we can to win a complete and speedy victory. If we can by direct grant, by establishing credits, or by guaranties of bond issues aid those nations which with like purpose are now waging war against Germany, we should do so.

My objection is not to the fact that loans are to be made, but to the manner in which this bill provides they shall be made. An enormous sum—$3,000,000,000—a sum beyond comprehension, almost beyond computation, is placed in the hands of one man to dispose of practically without limitation or restriction—a thing never done before in the history of this or any other nation. The Secretary of the Treasury is given this immense, this transcendent power not because it is necessary, wise, or even expedient to do so. but because apparently Congress does not want to take the trouble to consider the matter itself. A more complete surrender of constitutional power, a more willing and even joyous abandonment of an imposed duty was never chronicled in the annals of Congress.

I have seen, as we all have seen, days spent in this Chamber on items of only a few hundred dollars. In this case we hand over billions to an official and say, "Spend this as you like; we do not want to be bothered further about it."

I have heard, as we all have heard, Members asseverate with passionate fervor the duty of Congress to carefully guard the interests of the people who must earn and pay every dollar we here spend; yet in this one item, with only casual consideration and almost without protest, we dispose of a sum equal to three times the total ordinary annual expenses of the Government and more than three times the amount of our entire national debt.

We have been told time and again how dangerous and unwise it was to make "lump-sum" appropriations by which heads of departments were tempted to spend a few thousands extravagantly or unnecessarily, yet here we place in one man's hands the largest sum ever committed to an individual in all the annals of time, and tell him to do with it as he pleases.

It is assumed in argument that this three billions of money is to be loaned to those nations now at war against Germany, but no such limitation is placed in the bill. The Secretary may loan to any "foreign government" whether against or with Germany in the war, whether belligereent or neutral. The only purpose stated, and the only limitation made in the bill is that the money is to be loaned "for the purpose of establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments." If any nation, anywhere, in Europe, Asia, Africa, or South America, would like to establish a credit in the United States for any purpose, and the Secretary thinks it would be a good thing, he can loan them any amount he chooses under the terms of this bill. No security is required, no date of payment specified, and we agree not to charge these foreign governments over 3½ per cent interest, no matter what their outstanding obligations now carry. In fact, as is well known, most of the nations now at war are paying 5 and 6 per cent, and some of their bonds are not worth now 50 cents on the dollar.

It is assumed that the money is to be used to carry on the war against Germany. But it is not so stated in the bill. The money may be used for any purpose. It may be used to fund outstanding obligations. It may be used to induce nations to either go out or stay in if belligerent, or to enter or remain out if neutral. It may be used to rehabilitate the war-stricken nations, to build up the waste places in Belgium and Serbia, or for any purpose that may appeal to the Secretary.

To place all foreign loans on the same basis is most unwise. Conditions are vastly different in different countries. For instance, we could wisely, as I think, place money without restrictions in the hands of France. We would be reasonably sure it would be wisely expended in the prosecution of the war. With some other countries it would be only ordinary prudence to give only credit in our country for war material and supplies. These matters should be separately considered and passed upon by Congress. There is no one man—and he presumably viewing all such transactions from a financial standpoint—sufficiently informed and wise to safely pass upon such important matters. The interests involved are not merely commercial transactions. Statesmanship, world politics of the most intricate and important character are involved. Military and naval questions of the most technical and vital character are involved. Is it to be supposed that our Secretary of the Treasury is qualified to pass upon and determine wisely all these questions?

It is not realized, I fear, into what intimate relations we enter when this Nation becomes the creditor of the foreign nations to which this money will be loaned. Of all "entangling alliances" the money alliance is the most close and embarrassing. It would be better in many respects to give rather than to loan.

In my opinion half the amount authorized in this bill would do more good to the nations receiving the aid if given as a bounty than the whole given as a loan; and I am quite sure it would be vastly safer for us. Still more of benefit would go with it if given in the form of arms, ammunition, and supplies for the prosecution of the war. In any event, all these transactions should be considered; and not alone as they affect the present, their ultimate influence should be considered as well. Loans to one nation may be justifiable, bounty to another expedient; but let us have an opportunity to consider and if possible determine wisely and prudently what shall be done.

It seems to me conclusive that Congress should retain its power to pass upon these propositions separately. The selection of the nation to which this help shall be given; the amount to be loaned or the credit to be extended or the arms, ammunition and food products to be furnished; the terms and conditions—all these should be individually considered and passed upon.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman realizes, of course, that the suggestion involves that Congress should stay in session continuously from now until the end of the war.

Mr. TOWNER. Not necessarily. It is likely that loans now contemplated will be made within 60 days. They could be at least considered and authorized within that time. And I have no doubt, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, that Congress will be in session as much time during the continuance of the war as may be necessary to consider and pass upon any number of loans.

Congress ought to reserve to itself the right to determine each individual case on its merits. And so I believe in this emergency we can best serve our interests if we do not abdicate our rights or shirk our duty, so that we can secure to our people the immense benefits that ought to be derived from this service. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE M. YOUNG,

OF NORTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917,

On the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, under leave to print granted to me I desire to call attention to an article which appeared in the February 1 issue of the Dakota Farmer, prepared by Mrs. Mary Herring Hudson. The article is as follows:

RAISING BOYS FOR EVERY DUTY OF LIFE, TO BE SOLDIERS IF NEED BE.

Some time ago some one sent me a copy of a song entitled "I did not raise my boy to be a soldier." It was easy and had a catchy air, so the children began to play it on the piano. I had been too busy to even read it through and paid no attention to it until they began to sing the words. They fairly made me sick at heart, they were so selfishly sentimental and lacking in all principle.

You see, I have lived in North Dakota nearly 34 years, neighbored with the Indians, and roughed it from one end of the State to another, nearly, and I never found any good use for the tenderfoot spirit—the self-pitying, self-justifying selfishness of inefficiency. Sleeping on these trackless plains with your face to the stars or fairly wrapped in thunder and lightning or facing our fierce blizzards for miles and miles bring one in touch with primitive forces that tend to dispel all false ideas about living.

MOTHER'S PRIDE AND JOY.

The mother in the song says, "I brought him up to be my pride and joy." I've met several like that.

In those days it was earn your right to live—or die or get out (many "got"). There were no powder puffs or frills thrown into the bargain, either. There was not much to be proud of but conquest of these great forces all about and the joy of success in living and taming nature to our ways, and one had to be worthy of success to win it then. You must be able to play the game right to win from nature her secrets and her reward. You must be able to "think God's thought after Him," as my old teacher used to say.

SUCCESS THE HARDEST TRIAL OF ALL.

But now, success is the hardest trial of all. The stress removed, we are training our child in the easiest way we can (with money) to be our pride and our joy—regardless of what is best for him, right or wrong, or best for the other fellow, the community.

With all my roughing it and hardships of the early days it seems a snap compared with raising my own children as I would like them to be. I love them too intensely, too selfishly. It is so hard to make them suffer for their errors, or let them make errors that will cause them suffering. But that seems about the only way they care to learn to live—by living.

We talked the matter over, the children and I, and when they realized that some other mother's "pride and joy" was being raised to protect "my pride and joy" they decided they had rather be able to take care of themselves and others less fortunate, and so the song remains unsung in one home.

It has always been my greatest fear that I might not be able to rise to the occasion and be large enough mentally, morally, or spiritually to grasp the great laws of life and present them to my boy in such a way that he would live more than anything else to be a true-blue, manly man, with courage to face life's battles squarely on the level and not shirk or dodge them.

"JUST LIVING" IS A BIG PROPOSITION.

It would be much easier, it seems to me, for a man to wear a uniform and buttons and face a cannon under the excitement of war than it is for them to carry honor and justice about with them through all the day's work and play, and buckle into the everyday tasks and social problems involved in being a man—and vote. Just living is a big proposition. There is no need to look abroad for circumstances that require the soldier spirit to face—opportunities fall all over a man right here and now. He can prove his strength of character any old time. So I'm going to raise my boy to be a soldier, if I am equal to the task, it doesn't matter whether he ever wears a uniform or not, on the principle of "resist the devil and he will flee from thee" and the old Arabic motto that the knights of old had engraved in their shields, "The strength of the vanquished goes to the victor."

We can easily see how the effort to overcome an error in arithmetic or any other proposition strengthens us. To get the children to see it and enjoy the encounter is our task and a mighty hard one. It is so much easier to let things slide and just drift with the tide in the way of least resistance.

NOT ENOUGH BACKBONE.

We do hate to do anything that is hard, and we make everything so easy for our children that unconsciously we are training them to be selfish weaklings (all those who can). They simply wilt when they run up against any of the hard knocks in real life, or turn bitter against God, the Government, and the other fellow, or whatever else is at hand to hang the blame onto, not seeing it is their own lack of understanding and adjustment to the eternal laws that is losing the battle for them. Or else they adjust themselves to dodging issues, covering over disagreeable things instead of facing conditions and making them right.

They leave them like an old sore that is healed over on the outside and all drainage stopped; it simply keeps on festering until it breaks out with a terrible discharge in an effort to cleanse itself, as in the present war. God will not be mocked; we simply have got to be right to stand long.

The principle is the same in national as in personal affairs; as long as there are errors to be corrected in governments, so long must there be corrections made in some way, and the soldier spirit must fare forth to meet the demand whether through spiritual, mental, or physical means.

Through my years of teaching I found that there was a self-satisfied nature that required suffering before they would open up to the sunlight of love and truth and grow, and like the surgeon I must cut deep if I would do them good. It was love that gave me the courage to do the "cutting," and the sacrifice of my own pleasure in the matter was always justified by their increased respect and their own advancement. They always enjoyed the progress made later. And it is the same in larger affairs of the world, there must be suffering before the need for reform is seen very often, because we will be wise enough to see and seek our own good in good for others.

THE SWISS SYSTEM.

So it was with intense interest that I noticed recently an article in one of our leading magazines entitled, "Why I raise my boy to be a soldier." It was written by a Swiss mother to the mothers of America, and how I wish I might put it into the hands of every mother whether she has a son or daughter.

You all know how bravely Switzerland fought for her liberty and how for 600 years she has been a Republic. She calls us "sister Republic," but she comes nearer to being our mother, for many of our laws and institutions were copied from hers. We know how she has stood for peace and maintained it through all this last terrible conflict; or, perhaps, you do not know how she maintained it; I did not until I read this mother's story. You see, they were a poor country, unable to keep a standing army to back them in their stand and their efforts to keep the banner of freedom flying for humanity, so they worked out a plan that carries out their motto, "Each for all and all for each."

I believe it is this spiritual truth struggling to be expressed nationally that is at the bottom of this great unheaval—it is monarchs against the rule of the people.

The Swiss plan has stood the test so long, and through all this last terrible war they have been able to maintain their peace, that it seems to me it is worthy of our consideration. It must be right in motive and action or it would not have endured.

They assume that for the privileges of freedom, peace, and prosperity every man would be willing to give a certain per cent of his time to his country. So soon as a boy enters school he has, in connection with his other work, drills, hikes, and practice in teamwork. When he reaches a given age—I can not state exactly, as I have loaned the paper—he is given a uniform and light equipment, and the training takes on a more military aspect. This gives him the practice in teamwork, the erect carriage, and splendid physical development for which the Swiss are noted. After school is finished there is a year given to purely military training, and after this they are at liberty to go their individual ways, excepting a period of two weeks each year, when they meet for drills up to a certain age. It takes on the nature of an annual vacation when they get out their uniforms and equipment and report for duty. It was during one of these drills that the Kaiser of Germany and two of his staff visited Switzerland to watch them. When it was over the Kaiser said to one of the soldiers: "You are fine, husky fellows. Five hundred thousand, you say? What would you do if I brought an army of a million in here?" The soldier replied, "Why, Sire, that is easy; we would shoot ($2 \times 500{,}000 = 1{,}000{,}000$) twice."

A GREAT PEACE ARGUMENT.

And this is the sequel to the story: Two years later, when the Germans were considering which route to take to France, Belgium was chosen by 2 more votes than Switzerland, those two being given by the members of the staff who had watched the Swiss soldiers drill. And so this Swiss mother proves her argument that they were able to maintain peace by being able and prepared to stand by their principle and take care of themselves. She says that they are an intensely peace-loving nation; that the very fact that everyone, every home, is touched the moment war is declared acts as a restraint in every way.

A paid standing army, when idle long, gets restless and eager for something to do. Their army is never idle, as they have their individual work at every moment they are off duty. They love their country devotedly, as their immediate response to the call to their colors showed at the beginning of this war. They came at once from all parts of the world. Their army was mobilized the quickest of any army in Europe, and their soldiers are noted for their health, strength, and manliness as well as their love of their country.

It seems to me that is the best peace argument I've heard.

LET'S PREPARE.

Our recruiting stations tell a sorry tale of the physical condition of most of our young men who are willing to enlist which spoils our comparison with the Swiss men.

The military records (not our school histories) show that in nearly every battle we ever fought we have sacrificed from two to three times the number of men we should by not being prepared to take care of ourselves. We are on advance ground trying to hold the light of freedom for all the rest of the world. As long as monarchs have the power to oppose our principles or are in need of our territory there is bound to be friction. We have to meet them in terms they will respect, like the schoolboy. We can not cast pearls before swine and get results. A government that still thinks physical force is highest must be met on that plane to reach them at our present state of development. They have no respect for our pearls—the principles upon which our Government is founded. They are bitterly opposed to them. If we are morally and physically able to support our ideals and keep the light of freedom burning, we may be able to win recognition for the pearls and unite the world on systems of free government.

We have a big job before us to knit into one all these different nationalities and their different ideas of government into "one country, one language, and one flag" ourselves.

It seems to me the only just and feasible way at the present time is for all of us to share equally in the moral and physical preparation for the protection of our principles as the Swiss have—rich and poor alike. Uniting in a common cause on common ground would perfect a feeling of brotherhood. Where it might be easier to see that when we are untrue to the best there is in us we are untrue to our country, and when untrue to our country we are untrue to our own best interests and the interests of posterity. It is not "our country" we stand for alone, but the advance in civilization it stands for that we must prove and maintain.

Wise men claim that "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." Mothers, let us rock it so that it will bring forth the strong, wise, true men unafraid to loose themselves in a righteous cause.

Think of the price our fathers paid. Can we do less? Let us be as true and unselfish and think for posterity as they thought for us and help to usher in that time when—

"The might, with the right,
And the truth shall be,
And come what may
To stand in the way,
That day the world shall see."

And "peace on earth, good will toward men" as well.

Arms and Ammunition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN Q. TILSON,
OF CONNECTICUT,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Wednesday, May 9, 1917.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last in the course of my remarks on arms and ammunition I was asked, very properly, whether the fact that our capacity for making the Springfield rifle was so sadly limited should be made public. I answered accurately that it was already well known. As a matter of fact, it has been discussed by military men, engineers, and manufacturers for the last year to my own knowledge. On February 29, 1916, I discussed the subject on the floor of this House and subsequently here and elsewhere I called attention to our distressing lack of preparedness in this direction.

Under leave granted by the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD I here insert a letter received to-day from the associate editor of the Journal of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, together with the inclosure referred to in the letter, showing that at their meeting last year members of that learned society discussed the subject of the difficulties involved in increasing our rifle output. The letter and inclosure are as follows:

THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERS,
New York, May 8, 1917.

Hon. JOHN Q. TILSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I find from a report in the New York Times of this date that the matter of lack of gauges and fixtures as affecting the possible production of rifles for the American Army has formed one of the subjects discussed by you on the floor of the House, and the question as to the advisability of publishing such information broadcast has been touched upon among other matters.

In this connection I venture to bring to your attention the discussion of this very matter at the annual spring meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers a year ago in New Orleans.

From the brief passages inclosed with this letter, and especially from the complete report of the discussion which you will find in our journal (mailed under separate cover) you will see that the American engineers have long ago realized the difficulties which are facing the country to-day and have done their best to bring the matter to public attention while there was yet time to provide for the coming emergency.

Trusting that you may be interested in the above, I am,

Respectfully,

L. CAMMEN, Associate Editor.

[Inclosure.]

SURVEY NEWS ITEM, JUNE.

"MAY 8, 1917.

"At the meeting of the House of Representatives on May 7 (all quotations are taken from the New York Times of May 8), Representative JOHN Q. TILSON, of Connecticut, a Republican member of the Military Affairs Committee, discussed the manufacture of United States rifles, and, among other things, disclosed the fact that only a very limited amount of such rifles can be manufactured for the United States Government, because of the difficulty of procuring gauges.

"'Do you think that is good information to make public?' asked Representative ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania.

"'Everybody knows it except ourselves,' replied TILSON. 'All our enemies know it.'

"It may be useful to recall in this connection that the facts stated by Representative TILSON on May 7 had been forcibly brought forward more than a year ago by members of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers at the spring meeting of 1916 in New Orleans in the discussion of Mr. Spencer Miller's paper on Organizing for Industrial Preparedness.

"Among others, F. O. Hoagland, member American Society of Mechanical Engineers, in a written discussion, stated that, while the Government has at times placed small contracts for rifle ammunition manufacture, no private manufacturer has ever made the .30 Springfield rifle, nor has he any special tools, fixtures, or gauges necessary for making them.

"Judging from past experience and by the length of time it is now taking manufacturing establishments to get ready to fill orders for a product slightly different from their regular lines, quick service is not to be expected unless several of these concerns are placed in condition to meet the demand.

"In another part of the same communication Mr. Hoagland stated that it takes about 12 months to prepare the special equipment of fixtures, tools, and gauges necessary for the production of, say, 100 military rifles per working-day and about half that time to prepare for 100,000 cartridges per day, even when a factory has at the start a fair organization for similar work. The Government arsenals could be of great assistance in preparing the special equipment of fixtures, tools, and gauges, but a few leaders and workmen in each plant who are thoroughly familiar with the requirements are absolutely necessary in order to get quick and sure response.

"Two other members of the society, Frank O. Wells and Charles E. Smart, in a joint discussion of the same paper, forcibly brought forward the necessity to have our machine shops equipped to manufacture munitions of war at a moment's notice.

"That it can not be done in a hurry they showed by calling attention to the fact that, while for over two years all the machine shops in the United States have been working for the allies, yet even after that length of time new designs for jigs and fixtures were still upon the drawing boards, and new gauges and tools were being made in hundreds of shops all over the country.

"In fact, they pointed out, as a conservative estimate, it would require 50 engineers, designers, and draftsmen at least 50 weeks to prepare the drawings for the 17 sizes of shells now used by the United States Army, together with drawings for gauges, fixtures, and tools. To produce the latter would require probably 800 men well trained and in well-organized factories at least five years, calculating 300 working-days per year. And this does not cover the question of aeroplanes, rifles, battleships, or a large number of other important parts of equipment which also must be provided for.

"In particular, the manufacture of rifles discussed by Representative TILSON formed the subject of a communication by Fred E. Rogers (member Am. Soc. M. E.) luminously covering those very points which Representative ROBBINS was making public at the present time. 'The manufacture of rifles,' wrote Mr. Rogers, 'is a complete process, requiring special skill and experience, and with the exception of our Government arsenals, there was at the outbreak of the present war perhaps not one plant in the United States properly equipped and manned for manufacturing military arms. There are about 800 principal machine operations involved in making the parts of the simplest military arm, including the wood stock and hand guard. Many of these operations require special machinery, and practically all the parts must be in jigs or fixtures while machining. When we consider the fact that to provide equipment for any army of 1,000,000 from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 rifles are required, the size of the task of equipping an army of 1,000,000 with shoulder guns alone becomes apparent. What the condition of this country would be in a sudden emergency we can only guess. Judging from the experience of some of our ill-advised manufacturers, who undertook to make shells, it would be of great confusion and enormous waste.'

"K. A. Juthe (member Am. Soc. M. E.), in discussing the experience of American manufacturers in the production of rifles for foreign Governments, stated that the gauge problem was one of the greatest magnitude, as it was found that it would take at least 300 first-class gauge makers to furnish the first working set, inspector's set, and the master set necessary for guns in quantities. And when 1,000 complete rifles per day is figured on, it means that the working sets would be increased from 1 to 10, and the inspectors' sets from 1 to 5, keeping the master set simply for reference. It was shown conclusively that among the total of practically 2,500 to 3,000 first-class gauge makers in the country there was no adequate means of tackling several different propositions at the same time.

"In regard to tool making, it was found that the jigs, fixtures, and small tools required would take a small army of toolmakers. It would take at least 1,000 toolmakers one year to furnish tools of this kind for the output of 1,000 rifles per day. Therefore, should our Government require, say, 500,000 or 1,000,000 rifles per year, our tool plants would be taxed to the utmost.

"It appears therefore that what Representative TILSON stated in Congress did not disclose any military secrets, but as J. H. Brophy said at the same meeting, 'I am under the impression that it will take years of pounding away at the facts to enlighten the people on this great undertaking of industrial preparedness.'"

Unfortunately, at the time I first called attention to our distressing lack of capacity for producing arms and ammunition and made the first appeal to Congress to supply the remedy, nearly a year and a half ago, the ears of the country were not open to hear my message. When the American Society of Mechanical Engineers were discussing this matter in their meeting a year ago, the country was too busy with other matters to give attention. Our entrance into a world war makes it a vital, burning question now. The people are awake to the situation, but too late to escape some of the unfortunate consequences against which some of us, at least, warned the country more than a year ago. It is too late to keep it secret now. Nor does it avail anything to indulge in harsh criticism of anyone in Congress, in the War Department, or elsewhere. The thing to do is to meet the situation squarely, and, without crimination or recrimination, set ourselves to the task of solving the problems arising. If we set about it in this spirit, we can not fail.

Volunteer System versus Conscription.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES H. BRAND,

OF GEORGIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

On the bill (H. R. 3545) to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, on April 8, six days after President Wilson delivered his memorable address to the American Congress, which he called into extraordinary session for the purpose of having it declare war against the Imperial Government of Germany, in an interview which I had at the request of Mr. John Corrigan, jr., Washington correspondent of the Atlanta Constitution and other Georgia dailies, I expressed the opinion I then entertained upon the subject of conscription, which he sent to his papers in the following language:

Judge BRAND is outspoken against conscription at present. He says he has an abiding faith in President Wilson, but until it is shown to his satisfaction by indisputable evidence that it is absolutely necessary for the defense of the country and its national honor and existence, he is opposed to sending any of his people to the trenches in Europe against their will. He insists that the Government should first call for volunteers, and that ample time should be given for the country to respond to this call and thus demonstrate this necessity before compulsory service is invoked.

This interview was published throughout my district. My purpose was, however, to keep an open mind upon this question, subject to change after reflection and study and after hearing the debate pro and con by the Members of the House, and after reading as many speeches of the Senators which I would have an opportunity of reading.

I have been much concerned in deciding rightly and wisely how I should cast my vote upon this paramount question. Whether right or wrong, I finally arrived at the conclusion that the position entertained by me, as set forth in this interview, is sound, and I feel it my duty to vote accordingly.

A Congressman under his oath of office should fearlessly do that which he considers to be his sworn duty, whatever may be the consequences of his vote. Whatever may be his attitude to the Chief Executive of his country, and however great may be his confidence in his patriotism and integrity, he should act in such a way as to meet the approval of his own conscience. If he does not he is unfit to occupy the position to which the people have elected him. I came to Congress to attend the special session with my mind made up to follow the President, and to vote in accordance with the suggestions which he might bring to the attention of Congress for its consideration. I decided to do this because of my confidence in Woodrow Wilson, whom I regard as one of the greatest Presidents who ever presided over the destinies of the people of this great Republic, and in many respects one of the greatest of living men.

At his request, and especially for the reasons outlined in his address, I voted for the resolution declaring war between the United States and the German Government, feeling it to be my sworn duty on this issue to follow my leader, though I did so reluctantly and with a sad and heavy heart.

I did this because all thinking men here believe that if England should be starved by reason of the submarine warfare, which is not wholly improbable, she would surrender, and the British Fleet would pass to the control of Germany, from which moment the United States would be at Germany's mercy.

I did this because Germany assumes the right to exclude the United States from the sea, and if she can successfully assert her predominance over this Nation on the ocean she can and will assert it over the United States.

I did this because President Wilson had done everything on the face of the earth he could to avoid war. He was, against his will, forced to recognize that a nation thought to be civilized had thrown off its disguise and with naked savagery, bomb in hand, was attacking his own Nation. He recognized that the war was between despotism and liberty, and enduring no longer, he drew the sword in behalf of liberty.

I did this because we are dealing with the arch enemy of the human race. The military rulers of the German Government have no pity or compassion for any human being. They have filled the ocean not only with ships of commerce of all neutral governments and hospital ships laden with the sick, wounded, and dying, but also with innocent and helpless men, women, and children of our own country, whose people longed to remain at peace with the German people, and whose President for two years tolerated with peaceful patience Germany's butchery upon the high seas.

At his request I voted for the $7,000,000,000 bond issue carrying with it provisions for the greatest amount of money ever voted by any legislative body of any nation in the history of the world. So far as I now know I shall continue to vote as he suggests and shall support him in every war measure which he submits for our favorable consideration.

My vote upon the conscription measure differs with him in only one particular. The Army bill submitted by the War College to him for his approval, and which he submitted to Congress for its approval, demands that this Government enter upon the raising of an army at once by conscription. The bill reported by the Military Committee, after hearing evidence upon the subject for nearly two weeks, provided that the volunteer system of raising an army be first given a trial, and if it failed, then to resort to conscription. While supporting the Military Committee's proposition, it is my purpose if the volunteer system shall be rejected by the House, on the final vote on the bill submitted by the President, to vote for it, as the country must have an army to meet the violent aggressions of the most merciless and powerful military machine ever organized by any province, state, country, or kingdom in the annals of time.

I do not want to argue the question at length, but I do want to take the liberty of briefly stating my reasons, or some of them at least, for the vote which I shall cast upon this important issue.

The difference between the War Department plan for raising an army and the committee plan, succinctly stated, is this: The War Department plan is to enlist a volunteer army of Regulars, a volunteer army of National Guards, and a conscript army of 500,000 men at the same time, provided that whenever the President should determine that the men were not enlisting in the two volunteer systems as rapidly as the safety of the Nation requires, that all units should be filled by conscription. The Military Committee bill provided that all of the units of the National Guard, the Regular Army, and the 500,000 additional troops should be filled by volunteers, and whenever the President determined that the call for volunteers was not filling up the ranks of the 500,000 additional troops as rapidly as should be, then all should be filled by conscription. The committee plan placed all of the armies exactly upon the same footing. It recognized the right to volunteer, not only to bring up the National Guard and the Regular Army to war strength, but also to volunteer in the first 500,000 additional troops supposed to be required.

Under legislative enactment previous to this Congress, the American Government and this administration are committed to the volunteer system, otherwise provision would not have been made in the Army bill to bring up the National Guard and the Regular Army to full war strength by volunteer enlistment.

The full war strength of the National Guard is about 287,000 soldiers. The full war strength of the Regular Army is about 625,000 soldiers. Here is a provision of law already in existence, approved by the Army and the President, for raising an army of nearly 1,000,000, all that the President is now calling for, and it is my honest judgment that this million men should be raised in this way before resorting to conscription. The volunteer system has been approved by the President in the past. The truth is no English-speaking country on the face of the earth has ever drafted its citizens at the beginning of a war. No country on earth which ever went to war has failed first to call for volunteer enlistments. No country in Europe has any conscript law whereby soldiers may be sent across the seas to engage in a war except by special authority first being granted by its legislative body.

Besides, all the wars that this country has ever engaged in or ever won were won by volunteer soldiers. No European country, so far as I know, ever resorted at the beginning of a war to conscription to raise an army. It is currently reported in Washington that some of the Army officers were themselves opposed to conscription and were in favor of giving the volunteer system a trial before resorting to conscription.

Maj. W. C. Harllee, of the United States Marine Corps, who has served in that branch for 17 years, in testifying before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, said:

> Unwilling men burden armies, eat its substance, retard its action, and give it panic. I am opposed to universal service or compulsory service, or any other kind of service than that rendered by willing men.

Some well-informed people in Congress charge that the conscription scheme is a pet of the General Staff of the Army, and that the War College finally persuaded the President to give it his approval.

The President and Secretary of War Garrison differed upon this very subject, which difference resulted in the latter's resigning from the Cabinet. On February 10, 1916, the President wrote Secretary Garrison, in part, as follows:

> As I have had occasion to say to you, I am not yet convinced that the measure of preparation for national defense which we deem necessary can be obtained through the instrumentality of the National Guard under Federal control and training. As you know, I do not at all agree with you in favoring compulsory enlistment for training, and I fear the advocacy of compulsion before the committee of the House, on the part of the representatives of the Department of War, has greatly prejudiced the House against the proposal for a continental army, little necessary connection as there is between the plan and the opinion of the Chief of Staff on compulsory enlistment.

On Memorial Day the President made a speech at Arlington, in which he made this statement:

> I have heard a great many people talk about universal training. Universal voluntary training with all my heart if you wish it, but America does not wish anything but compulsion of the spirit of America.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to his friend John Adams, expressed himself on conscription as follows:

> In Virginia draft was ever the most unpopular and impracticable thing that could be attempted, our people even under the monarchial government had learned to consider it as the last of all oppressions.

Daniel Webster, one of the ablest constitutional lawyers who ever sat in Congress, made a speech against conscription, contending that it was unconstitutional. During his time and during the War of 1812, the President and Secretary of War strongly urged drastic draft laws, and it was defeated on the ground that it was unconstitutional, and largely upon the speech of Mr. Webster. The House had under consideration a bill proposing to draft men for service in the War of 1812. In his speech he used this remarkable language:

> Where is it written in the Constitution that you may take children from their parents and compel them to fight the battles of any country which the folly or the wickedness of Government may engage in?
> Who shall describe to you the horror which your orders of conscription shall create in the once happy villages of this country? Who shall describe the anguish and distress which they will spread over those hills and valleys where men have heretofore been accustomed to labor and to rest in security and happiness? Anticiptate the scene, sir, when the class shall assemble to stand its draft and to throw the dice for blood. What a group of wives and mothers and sisters of helpless age and helpless infancy shall gather around the theater of this horrible lottery as if the strokes of death were to fall from heaven before their eyes on a father, a brother, a son, or a husband! And in the majority of cases, sir, it will be the stroke of death.
> Laws sir, of this nature can create nothing but opposition. If you scatter them abroad, like the fabled serpent's teeth they will spring up into armed men. A military force can not be raised in this manner but by the means of a military force. If the administration has found that it can not form an army without conscription, it will find, if it venture on these experiments, that it can not enforce conscription without any army. The Government was not constituted for such purposes. Framed in the spirit of liberty and in the love of peace, it has no powers which render it able to enforce such laws. The attempt, if we rashly make it, will fail, and having already thrown away our peace we may thereby throw away our Government.

Hon. Howell Cobb, of Georgia, one time Speaker of this House and afterwards Secretary of the Treasury, then a citizen of my district and of the city of Athens, the city of my residence, on August 5, 1862, wrote a letter to the Secretary of War at Richmond, in which he used this language:

> I venture to intrude some suggestions which my observations in Georgia have brought to mind.
> This war must close in a few months, perhaps weeks, or else will be fought with an increased energy and malignancy on the part of our enemies. I look for the latter result, and at all events think it is the contingency for which we should prepare. That preparation requires a large increase of our Army. How is it to be effected? The conscript law has performed its work. It retained the 12 months' men in the service. Besides that, it compelled large numbers to volunteer and thus fill up the ranks of the regiments already in the field. These two results have been accomplished, and beyond that it will be unwise to calculate upon the conscript law as the means of furnishing troops for the Army. The number of conscripts will be very small—not worth considering in calculating the strength of our Army. Such, I am sure, is the case in Georgia.

Further along in this letter, in discussing the great unpopularity of the conscript law, he used this language:

> Why it is so is useless to inquire, though I may say, in passing, that the law is unpopular—almost odious. * * * I would, then, repeal the conscript law, so far as the future is concerned, retaining all that you have made by it, and then call upon the governors to furnish quotas or authorize the formation of companies, regiments, and even brigades and divisions, to be accepted by the President and to be officered by him. * * * It will relieve the new recruits from the odium of being conscripts.

Some of the Members of this House, after an investigation, stated that there were 2,000,000 volunteer Federal soldiers and over 1,000,000 volunteer Confederate soldiers in the Civil War. At that time we had only 30,000,000 people; now we have over 100,000,000. If we could raise a volunteer army of 3,000,000 men when we had a population of only 30,000,000 in the sixties, why can we not raise an army now of 1,000,000 men with a population of over 100,000,000? To my mind, it is a reflection upon the bravery and patriotism of the people of this country to answer this proposition in the negative.

During the Civil War most all of the battles during its long existence were fought on both sides almost exclusively by volunteers. On the Union side, from 1861 to 1865, there were 2,212,742 soldiers. Of this number, notwithstanding the drafts covering a period of two years, less than 62,000 drafted ever engaged in battles.

In the address of Hon. CHAMP CLARK against conscription, the present Speaker of the House of Representatives, who is one of the ablest men in the House, and also one of the most distinguished citizens of this Republic, stated that in the Civil War the volunteer did nine-tenths of the fighting on both sides, and that there was no drafting by the North and South to raise about 2,000,000 men "the best soldiers that the sun had looked upon in 6,000 years of slaughter."

"That the American volunteer is one of the glories of the Republic. Under young George Washington he saved the remnants of Braddock's army from destruction. In the French and Indian War he fought side by side with the British regulars. From April 19, 1775, when on the village green of Lexington and at the Concord Bridge the embattled farmers and the Minute Men of Massachusetts fired the shot heard around the world down to the last shot in the Spanish-American War, the American volunteer has been a very present help in every time of trouble. He made Bunker Hill a name to conjure with forever. He captured Burgoyne at Saratoga. He upheld Washington amid the horrors of Valley Forge; he destroyed the Hessians at Trenton; he achieved the astounding victory at Kings Mountain against Ferguson's British regulars, thereby turning the tide of the Revolutionary War. On a hundred fields, sometimes victorious, sometimes defeated, hungry, naked, footsore, and weary, he fought on with dogged pertinacity until he stood with the glorious and victorious Washington on the bloodstained heights of Yorktown, where Jefferson's declaration was made good and America was free indeed."

In my judgment if President Wilson on the morning after he delivered his address to the American Congress at 8 o'clock p. m., April 2, 1917, or on the day after the Lusitania was sunk, had issued a call for volunteers, an army of a million men would have volunteered within 48 hours in answer to his call.

No English speaking country has at the outset of any war ever drafted or conscripted men. This country never has at the outset of any war adopted the conscript system. Every war in which this Republic has ever engaged has been won by the volunteer system. No occasion has ever arisen in the history of this Republic in any of its wars to call for conscription at the beginning of a war. Every battle that American soldiers or sailors ever fought was fought by volunteers. Every victory ever won by the American Army or Navy was fought and won by volunteers. The volunteer principle of raising armies has never been surrendered by any English speaking nation in the history of the world.

While England has resorted to conscription, as a matter of fact there is not now a single conscript from England or any of her possessions fighting on any battle field in Europe. England's army at present consists of about 6,500,000 men. Over 5,000,000 of these are volunteers. They are the product of and raised by the system espoused by that matchless soldier of the English Army, Lord Kitchener, who lost his life on the high seas. While conscription has been put into operation, they have not as yet gone to the fighting line. Australia, New Zealand, and India has sent thousands upon thousands of soldiers to the battle fields of Europe, and not one of them is a conscript; all are volunteers.

New Zealand, with a population of 105,000 has sent 5,000 volunteers; Canada, with only 8,000,000 population, has sent across the seas 400,000 volunteers; Australia, with a population of 5,000,000 and 12,000 miles from the seat of war, has furnished without compulsion an army of over 260,000 men.

Not one British conscript from England or any of her possessions is fighting on the Continent now.

In the Speaker's address he quoted Col. Henderson, who wrote a book entitled "Stonewall Jackson in the American Civil War," wherein the author made the statement that the Confederates were, with few exceptions, volunteers who had become soldiers of their own choice, who had assumed arms deliberately and without compulsion, adding that this prompted the belief that this sense of moral obligation was one reason why the spirit of the southerners rose superior to human weakness and proved the old adage "that one volunteer is better than three pressed men."

The Athenians inscribed upon ten pillars, erected over their ashes, the names of those who fell at Marathon. Their valor were thus transmitted to posterity.

This honor was no greater than the tribute which immortalized the Confederate volunteer soldier found in the lines following, cut in stone on a shaft erected to their valor and patriotism in front of the old capitol building in Montgomery, Ala.:

Fame's temple boasts no higher name,
No king is grander on his throne;
No glory shines with brighter gleam,
The name of patriots stand alone.

When this historic shaft shall crumbling lie,
In ages hence, in woman's heart will be
A folded flag, a thrilling page unrolled,
A deathless song of southern chivalry.

The seamen of Confederate fame
Startled the wondering world,
For braver fight was never fought,
And fairer flag was never furled.

The knightliest of the knightly race,
Who since the days of old,
Have kept the lamp of chivalry
Alight in hearts of gold.

Conscription has never yet made a good soldier of a man who was opposed to war.

Legislative authority to conscript men does not supply patriotism and bravery when it is lacking.

You can not make a fighter of anyone by legislation.

The truth is that the volunteer system has become, by reason of use and age and the long recognition of the wisdom of its adoption by the people of our country, the law of the land. The volunteer system is the rule of raising an army by all the nations of the earth. Conscription is the exception, and when the exception is invoked a case of stern necessity and grave national peril should exist.

For the life of me I can not see at present any necessity, excuse or reason for sending an army of our boys against their will to Europe, as is contemplated to be done in the Army bill.

And yet the Army officers and the War College are bent on having an army of boys under 20 years of age. Hon. John Temple Graves, in an article in the New York American over his own signature, stated that the chairman of the War College told him if the bill passed it was their intention to organize an army of 500,000 men under 20 years of age. Bear in mind that they propose to conscript them to make up this great army. Unless a greater menace and necessity, and a more portentous peril than now appears should require it, I will never by my vote indorse such a monstrous proposition.

My view is that if the administration thinks it necessary to send an army to Europe at this time that it should be composed of those, and only those, who are willing to go.

In my judgment it is unwise to send any army to Europe at this time, whether composed of volunteers or conscripts; but to me this is immaterial if those only are sent who are willing to go.

These are some of the reasons which compel me to vote to give the volunteer system a trial.

In addition to these, the Army bill, which we are peremptorily demanded to vote for, is objectionable to me for several reasons, though by adopting amendment after amendment in the committee room and which we hope will be done on the floor of the House much of its sting and fangs will be removed.

It is said that the Army bill is a child of the War College and that it was prepared by the General Staff, and in doing so it is to be assumed that they were not unmindful of their own welfare and interest. Sooner or later the National Guard will be drafted into the Regular Army, and with a conscripted army of 500,000 additional men it will become necessary to have more officers. It is stated that 44,000 officers in the Regular Army will be advanced and promoted to higher and more lucrative positions and that subordinate officers in the Regular Army will take their places and in this way be advanced. Unless the Army bill is amended not a single officer of the National Guard will be the beneficiary of any of these promotions. They will be gobbled up by the officers of the Regular Army.

I am not only opposed to the Army bill for the reasons above stated, but I am likewise opposed to it because it is not what it purports to be. The bill proposed by the War Department is the opposite from universal military service, since it exempts 15,000,000 of the 20,000,000 men of military age in the United States from any liability for compulsory military service. The bill reported by the Military Committee recognizes the principle of universal liability for military service, since it makes every man of legal military age subject to compulsory service. The military age in the National Guard is from 18 to 45, and in the Regular Army from 18 to 35. The age fixed by the Army bill was between 19 and 25, and they positively refuse to accept any changes in these age limitations. The bill supported by the Military Committee makes the age limit from 21 to 40.

Boys too young to have a voice in the affairs of the Government, boys who are incapacitated to make a contract, and boys too young to vote should not be required to go to war against their will. Laboring under these restrictions, it is unfair, unjust, and undemocratic to draft them into service and force them to cross the ocean against their will to enter the trenches and fight the battles of Europe. It is not fair to require minors against their will or against the will of their parents or guardians to go to the bloody battle fields and trenches of Europe and leave every able-bodied man in the United States above the age of 25 absolutely relieved from liability to military service, as the Army bill does. I can not conscientiously support any measure which exempts all liability for service above 25 and compels only the boys of the country to do all the fighting for the Republic, when it is proposed to send them 3,000 miles from their homes, when there will be little probability that any of them will ever return alive, and I shall not do so at the suggestion or bidding of any man. No heartbroken mother whose boy was sent to Europe against his will shall have me or my vote in mind when she gets the sad news of his death and burial "somewhere in Europe." Not for me to remind her in her sorrow and mourning of a grave—

Unmarked by a name, unmarked by a stone,
Where only the voice of the wind maketh moan
O'er the mound where never a flower is strewn.

It seems to me that this war should, for the present, be confined to and fought out on the high seas. The submarine must be conquered, or else the war will not end. If we were to raise and send a million men to the firing line in Europe, it would not add a factor toward crushing the submarine. If the submarine warfare can be ended, all admit that the war will soon end; and with the destruction of the submarine, no man contends that there would then be any necessity to send an army to Europe.

I am opposed to the Army bill because there is not a single line in it which exempts the farmer, whether landlord or tenant, though the Army bill supporters claim that this will be done. I shall vote for the committee bill because a distinct provision is made for the exemption of all people on the farm and in other avocations who can better serve the country at home than in Europe. Provision was made in the committee bill not to draft for service in the present Army any of those who are needed in any industry or business, including the agricultural interests. Provision was likewise made in the committee bill for releasing those already in the service and refusing those who should offer to volunteer who are needed on the farm, which was not in the Army bill. In this way the farming element of the country would be taken care of to the complete satisfaction of every farmer, whether landlord or tenant, and, besides that, in this way the negro situation is taken care of. The negro laborer or farmer could be kept on the farm when it was desirable and necessary for him to be kept there.

It is said that the Army bill will get the "slacker," the coward, the loafers, and the vagrant whites and negroes of the country. Nothing of the sort will happen. But few of this class will be accepted. All of us would favor such a proposition right at the beginning of the war, but it can not be done under the Army bill. The scheme is, as I understand it, to first have the registration of all persons between the ages of 19 and 25. On a certain day all between these ages will be required to appear at a voting precinct and register. Those who fail to do so will be arrested and on conviction sent to the chain gang from three to twelve months. Suppose these slackers, cowards, and vagrants above referred to do not go and register. What then? All you can do is to prosecute and convict them, and 90 out of every 100 will prefer to go to the chain gang for the maximum limit than to fight either on American soil or in the European trenches. The names of all those who register will be put in a box and their names will be drawn by officers to be appointed by the appointing officers of the State for service. It is utterly impossible to tell who will be drawn. It is a mere chance, a lottery. It is like drawing a jury to serve in the courts of the country. One does not know who is going to be drawn. The cowards and vagrants may not be drawn.

The War College or Army bill contemplated that a military board composed only of Army officers should pass on who should go to the trenches and who should remain at home under the select-conscription plan, while the committee bill provided that a majority of this board should be composed of civilians, and home people at that.

Under the Army bill the exempting officer representing the Government, whoever he may be, will decide who will go to war and who shall stay at home. This officer has the life, liberty, and freedom of every man drawn under his direction and control. He and those under him will decide who shall go to war and who shall remain at home. He can take a white man after being drawn from the box and leave a negro, and vice versa. In effect, one's liberty and freedom is in the hands of this officer the minute his name is drawn from the box.

The Army bill does not provide, as many believe, for the exemption of married men. It does not necessarily follow that because a man is married that he will not be sent to the war. Unless his family is absolutely dependent upon him—and the exempting officer is to be the judge of this—he will be given his marching orders.

I am opposed to the Army bill for another reason. It makes no provision for the boys drawn for service from the same county or community to go into the same companies. There is no provision for what is known as territorial recruitment. In the Army bill as submitted it makes it possible for one from any county in the district to be drafted and sent away from his neighbors and friends and go to the war beside a stranger from a different and distant State, and with no certainty from whom he will take orders. It is denied that this will happen, but there is nothing in the Army bill submitted for our vote to prevent this happening unless it is corrected by amendment. Under the provisions of the Army bill, boys grown up together as neighbors, friends, and kinfolks would be broken up into small squads and placed among strangers from different States of the Union.

In my judgment this Army bill, if enacted as proposed, means the beginning in this country in times of peace of a regular standing army. It means universal compulsory military service, and nothing short of it. A regular standing army in times of peace is contrary to all the cherished ideals of this great Republic, and repugnant to American institutions and democratic traditions. We should be careful lest in attempting to destroy militarism and autocracy abroad we will do those things which will have a tendency to destroy democracy at home. A great standing army in America involves the establishment of a military caste which is socially superior to any other caste and which is not amenable to the rules of conduct laid down for the civilian members of society. It discriminates between the walks of life, between the Army officer and soldier and the plain citizen in civil life.

The advocates of the Army bill say that if we adopt the volunteer system and fail to raise a sufficient army of a million men as is desired that it will have a bad effect upon the German people. My reply is that it will have a worse effect upon the German people to conscript at the beginning, because Germany could well say that our people are against war, and that it was precipitated by those who fatten and become rich by war; that we did not have patriotism enough to volunteer; and for this reason the American Government was afraid to try the volunteer system.

I believe it was Victor Emmanuel, whose last words to his son were "Live for Italy." As an humble American citizen, my last words, so far as this vote is concerned, would be "Live for America," and if need be, to live and die for American liberty.

Whatever may be the outcome of this measure, I trust that every man in this House and every human being in these United States may get behind the President and as one man back him up in his righteous efforts to bring this unholy war to a successful termination; that the entrance of America into this world-wide conflict, unparalleled in the history of the ages, may meet with the approval of the God of the Universe, and that it may be His will that this Christian Nation may be the ultimate means of destroying German militarism and autocracy forever and ever, and that peace, freedom, and liberty may be established eternally and everlastingly to all the peoples of the earth.

Letter Adopted By Friends of Irish Freedom at Los Angeles.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY Z. OSBORNE,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 10, 1917.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter adopted at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Friends of Irish Freedom, of Los Angeles.

The letter is as follows:

THE O'RAHILLY BRANCH,
FRIENDS OF IRISH FREEDOM,
Los Angeles, Cal., May 4, 1917.

Hon. H. Z. OSBORNE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith to you the inclosed letter, which explains itself, adopted at a mass meeting held under the auspices of the Friends of Irish Freedom, of this city, in Clunes Auditorium, this city, Sunday afternoon, April 29, and attended by fully 2,500 people. Hon. Joseph Scott was chairman of the meeting.

With best wishes for a successful session, I have the honor to remain,

Sincerely, yours, P. C. MULQUEENEY,
Secretary.

THE O'RAHILLY BRANCH,
FRIENDS OF IRISH FREEDOM,
Los Angeles, Cal., May 4, 1917.

Hon. H. Z. OSBORNE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: We, American citizens of Los Angeles County of Irish blood, greet you with respect and gratitude, and unreservedly pledge to the House of Representatives, through you, our support in whatever measures the House may take in the present crisis.

Ireland is the motherland of a large portion of our citizenship. Men of Irish blood hold positions of responsibility and trust in the industrial and social life, in the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary of every State in the Union. A glance at American history will show that ever since the days of Commodore Jack Barry, the father of the American Navy, they have held with honor and discharged with efficiency the duties of some of the highest positions in the Army and Navy of our Republic. They have been conspicuous by their numbers and their gallant achievements in the Wars of the Revolution, of 1812, and in the Civil War, the war for the freedom of Cuba, and a young Boston boy of our race was the first who fell in the recent expedition to Vera Cruz.

To-day we are as ready as ever to do deeds of daring and sacrifice for the life and honor of this Republic, for America is our home and the home of our children, and if the integrity of her boundaries or the sovereignty of her people were attacked or threatened by any power in the world we would fight for both, even to the last drop of our blood. This we consider nothing more than our duty as citizens.

Our beloved country has declared war in support of a group of European powers with the avowed purpose of upholding the ideals of democracy in the world and of giving to small nations the right to choose their own form of government. This program has our unqualified sympathy and support. But, while human nature remains human, those who unselfishly love Ireland as their ancestral home can not but have serious doubts as to the sincerity of a proposal which would place them in the ludicrously incongruous position of knights errant, fighting for the freedom of small nations, while little Ireland is held in bondage by a power now loudest in her profession of concern (and in her demand for our support) for oppressed peoples.

In view of the numbers and position of men of our race in this Republic, and of their indisputably large share in the establishment and maintenance of our democratic institutions, we think that we are justified in making appeal to the Congress and people of the United States in behalf of Ireland's freedom. We, therefore, appeal to you and to the Congress of the United States to take such action as will secure the independence of Ireland not at the end of the war, when "scraps of paper" may safely be torn up, but now, when America's intervention will count for more than at any time in the future, when her demands must receive consideration.

We cordially thank you personally for the splendid action already taken in espousing Ireland's just claim to freedom, and most respectfully request that this letter be read to the House of Representatives and placed in the records.

Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH SCOTT, Chairman.
P. C. MULQUEENEY, Secretary.

War With Germany.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. C. BASCOM SLEMP,
OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, April 28, 1917.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, the most momentous event in a nation's history is its entrance into war. The responsibility for a declaration of war is placed by the Constitution on Congress. This is upon the theory that so important a step in a nation's life should be taken only with the consent of the people as expressed through their chosen representatives.

As a matter of practice and fact this view is superficial. The President in administering our foreign relations determines the question of peace or war. Congress has never declared war except upon the request of the President and has never refused to declare war when the President demanded it. This is the system under which Congress has always operated.

It is fortunate, so far as consistency is concerned, if the views of a particular Member of Congress as to a declaration of war happen to be the views also expressed by the President and coincide with the assurances given by that Member to his constituency. It is unfortunate if a Member of Congress has to repudiate his preelection statements so as to be with the President. It might be recalled, as illustrating our American system, that not six months ago many Members of Congress were on the stump arguing that Mr. Wilson should be reelected President and themselves elected to Congress not because we were going to war with Germany but because Mr. Wilson had "kept us out of war" with Germany.

My own opponent for Congress, for example, a most worthy and able man, did little else in the campaign than declaim upon the horrors of war, painting word pictures of weeping mothers and sorrowing fathers, attempting to establish the inference that a Democratic administration would not involve this country in war, but that a Republican administration would so involve it. How practically the entire Democratic membership of Congress could so soon vote for war illustrates how people, even Members of Congress, adjust themselves to new conditions in this most rapidly moving age. The calm assurances that such a change in position needs only a cursory apology and explanation, or none at all, is beyond both belief and precedent. This is a matter, however, of individual conscience.

So far as I am individually concerned, I voted for the declaration of war against Germany and am in favor of prosecuting the war with every resource we have available. Whether a different course on the part of our Government in its relation with Germany during the European war could have prevented war is of course open to serious question. Probably our entrance into war could have been longer averted, but soon or late the fight between what Germany demanded of the world and what the world would yield to her had to be made, and the United States had to become a party whether she would or no.

No one can project himself into the future and in retrospect see the currents or the forces operating in his own day. As best we can observe them, we see one nation with marvelous skill and energy build up a military system to which every individual in that nation is a contributing unit, announcing the doctrine that its own people should dominate the universe and that any war is to them justifiable which has their world domination as an inspiring cause. Against this policy the United States has entered the war, throwing into it the weight of its great resources. With my country's position, I most earnestly sympathize.

The war in which we are engaged is therefore now our war, and if truth be told has been our war from the beginning. We have technical grounds of warfare with Germany in her ruthless submarine policy and in her destruction of American lives and property in acknowledged defiance of international law; but in its larger aspect the question we are fighting about is, in its final analysis, whether this world shall be a fit place in which to live and whether a people in getting "their place in the sun" shall destroy any nation that crosses its path. If we yield to Germany in the present situation we should doubtless see either a victorious Germany or the flower of the human race destroy itself on the battlefield. If the improbable happens and Germany defeats the allies, it would be our turn next, for in the view of Germany we were not neutral during the European war, and believing thus Germany would make us pay her cost of the war if she could, and probably she could.

We have been living in fancied security because we are 3,000 miles from the scene of battle. But we are now within range of the submarine, and once we are without the protection of the British fleet, then even Germany's battleships could defeat our own fleet, then bombard our cities, and land armed forces on our coast, so that it was also to our self-interest to enter the struggle. It is a dreadful thing to engage in war; it is a more dreadful thing to see the men of this whole planet engaged in killing each other. The pain and suffering of the living and the burdens posterity will have to bear, are parts of the consequences of the world war. We ought to bear our sacrifices cheerfully, however, because we are fighting for the larger things, the larger ideals of life, expressed in the triumph of democracy. We are fighting, indeed, for the right of the people of any and every nation, so long as they keep within the bounds of justice and honor, to have the blessings of peace undisturbed by the ambitions or unholy desires of another nation.

Peace and tranquillity can not exist in the world so long as we have a marauder nation in the world, neither can we have such a condition so long as a nation exists in the world with a spy system that entirely encircles the earth, with which to further its ambitions and nefarious purposes, nor can we have such a happy state so long as we have a nation that believes it has the right to destroy all the nations of the earth so that it might establish its own system of culture.

When, therefore, the responsibility, in part, became mine to determine whether or not the United States should become a militant factor in this world struggle for the preservation of a cherished principle—that of human liberty—and for our own preservation as well, I cast my vote not aggressively for war but defensively against a state of war that already existed. In so doing I felt that I was discharging my duty to civilization, to the whole world, and to ourselves.

Behold The Flag.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. DANIEL R. ANTHONY, JR.,
OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 10, 1917.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to print I desire to insert in the RECORD a patriotic composition of a citizen of Kansas.

The composition is as follows:

BEHOLD THE FLAG.

[By Ignatius I. Murphy, of Topeka, Kans.]

Behold the flag, purest emblem of order, law, Christian civilization that ever saluted the dawn.

Behold the flag, immortalized by Washington, her beauteous folds spread from Gulf to coast by Jefferson, redeemed by blessed Lincoln in strife, momentous, victorious, that struck the shackle from the slave, and made our country one, preserving every star in the national banner, Old Glory shines in radiance o'er the finest expanse of God's earth.

Behold the flag, floating in the zephyrs of high heaven over the eternal Capital of the eternal Republic, symbolizing humanity's fondest, dearest hope, forever proclaiming justice, human brotherhood throughout the land.

Behold the flag, unstained, untarnished, bejeweled, gleaming in darkest night, her triumphant progress across the centuries a path of light. Who dare touch with profaning hand this sleepless, majestic guardian of an ardent people, brave, strong, free?

Behold the flag, inspiration of a mighty race, mingling in sentiment of her native-born children and liberty lovers from every clime, seeking naught but the common good, thirsting to serve all mankind 'neath the sheltering ægis of the Red, White, and Blue.

Behold the flag, ne'er drooped in dust of defeat, sired by revered fathers of the Revolution, their names imperishably written in letters of gold on the pages of Columbia's history, defying the ages.

Behold the flag, precious, sublime inheritance, benison of America's faith, power, unity; we consecrate anew our hearts, our souls, our eager, willing service of hand and brain to thy defense and greater glory. In the sunshine of thy glowing colors, in the proud record of thy past, in the bright promise of the future, may thou, by the Father's care, lead the nations to farther heights, more generous aims, nobler deeds, till the "sword is beaten into the plowshare" and peace, benign, hallowed peace, reigns among all the sons of men in a world republican.

Suggested Basis for a Just War-Tax Levy.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. LANGLEY,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 11, 1917.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the authority granted to me by the House I submit the following suggestions for a war-tax levy, adopted by the Kentucky Manufacturers and Shippers' Association. I regard these suggestions as logical and just and well worthy of the careful consideration of this body:

SUGGESTED BASIS FOR A JUST WAR-TAX LEVY.

In view of the fact that a vast increase in our national revenues is immediately demanded for the prosecution of the present war, it is recognized by the Kentucky Manufacturers and Shippers' Association that it is the duty of American business to make necessary sacrifices of income in order to execute the national purpose. It is, however, urged by this association that such taxes as are essential should be wisely levied so that the Government may secure a maximum of revenue with a minimum of injury to business.

The following principles are respectfully suggested as a sound basis of a just levy:

"Resolved, That we respectfully submit that these principles should be recognized as a sound basis of a just levy:

"First. That no tax should be retroactive for the year 1916. The income tax for that period has been in great part received and distributed, and therefore can not be recalled.

"Second. The exemption from personal income tax should be lowered to at least $1,500 annual net income as the basis of taxation for single persons and to $2,000 annual net income as the basis of taxation for heads of families, in order that the obligation to contribute to the support of the Government may be recognized as a general duty.

"Third. That no tax should be laid upon corporate forms of doing business that does not equally apply to other forms of business or wealth-producing agencies.

"Fourth. That corporations, both large and small, can be more successfully and equitably taxed by raising the normal tax to the necessary amount, rather than preserving the present normal rate and securing added revenue by progressively increasing the excess-profits tax which gives no due consideration to the differing risks of particular forms of business.

"Fifth. That no form of individual or business income should be taxed twice unless all forms of individual and business income are submitted to a like tax."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. S. D. FESS,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to allow Col. Roosevelt to organize a division for European service. I have listened to all the objections as detailed in the opposition. The chief objection is that it will interfere with the plans of the administration. Many Members declare it will interrupt the Government's policy.

Mr. Speaker, what every Member of this House, on either side of the Chamber, wants is a successful campaign against our enemy. It is not plan or policy that is demanded, but it is results in the field. Victories are not won by Members of Congress discussing policies. Defeats are not averted by political byplays here in Washington. What we must have is a fighting force at the front backed by a united people at home.

If we succeed in this war, it will be done by our soldiers in cooperation with those of our allies stirred by the spirit of patriotism.

Marshal Joffre declares our flag must appear in France for the moral effect it will have.

If that be true, it is also necessary that our own people must be linked up in sympathy with the purpose of the Army and Navy. If we proceed upon the basis that the people of the country should not be heard because they might interrupt the policy of the military organizations of the Nation, we will make an egregious mistake. The people must bear the burdens of war, and they will demand to know why this Congress denies to them the right to permit a great leader to organize a fighting force for the front.

The apathy of our people is in direct proportion to their lack of participation in the councils pertaining to the crisis at hand.

Mr. Roosevelt at the head of a fighting force will do more to arouse an Americanism than any other one thing. In the interest of success, rather than adherence to any particular policy, I shall vote to allow this leader to go to France.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM S. VARE,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Speaker, I strongly favor the incorporation in this bill of a provision authorizing Col. Roosevelt to raise a division and take it to France. I favor it because I am convinced that we would be recreant in our duty to the Nation if we discarded any asset placed at our disposal for the strengthening of America in war.

Col. Roosevelt is asking permission to fight for America. Shall that permission be denied him, when it was accorded by France to Lafayette, who wanted to fight for the United States?

There was no one who felt more strongly than I that selective service should be adopted as the military policy of the Nation. That policy was desirable because it eliminated discrimination, because it treated all alike, because it insured the fact that everyone must do his duty, regardless of financial or any other kind of standing a man might have. But it was not meant to exclude from serving those who, although above the conscription age, wanted to serve their country.

There is nothing inconsistent in authorizing this volunteer force to go to France. The men in the proposed Roosevelt division will be above conscription age. They are the men who, without Roosevelt's leadership, would be left out of the military plan. Mr. Roosevelt has stated clearly that every man in his division will be above conscription age. The fact that 200,000 Americans have applied for a place in the Roosevelt division shows what an appeal it has made to the patriotism of the American people.

Winning of the war may actually depend upon our answer to-day to the question whether we will grant or refuse Roosevelt's patriotic appeal to serve the country. The French commission, recently in Washington, has said that the moral effect of having American troops in France immediately would be tremendous; that it would hearten all the men in the trenches; that it would crush the spirit of the German soldiers who would realize that the advance guard would be followed by millions of other American soldiers.

The French commission has been frank in saying that American troops are desired immediately, that even 20,000 now would be of greater influence than 100,000 later on. This is the crucial period of the war. The French and British commission both want Col. Roosevelt. They have not made formal representations for the sending of Roosevelt, but those who have talked with the French and British commissions are well aware that they would welcome the arrival of Roosevelt in France as the best evidence of America's whole-souled participation in the war on the side of civilization.

As one of the two living ex-Presidents, as a former Commander in Chief of the American Army, as a colonel of Volunteers in the Spanish-American War, with actual military experience, it is doubtful whether there is any man in the country better fitted to head the first expeditionary force to France. Col. Roosevelt himself has specified that the force should be commanded by one of the Regular Army officers, to whom he would be subordinate. He is not seeking to exploit himself. He is seeking an opportunity to serve his country and the cause of humanity.

His personality is one around which the best fighting spirit of America will rally. If he is permitted to organize his division or divisions, it will be an impetus to patriotism. Instead of interfering with conscription, it will help conscription, because it will put the fire of patriotism into every young man's heart to see this former President of the United States leading the first expeditionary force to France.

The Roosevelt expedition can go to France within two months. It can be organized more quickly than the conscription forces. It can be in France fighting and quickening the patriotic pulse of America as well as heartening the allies, while we are preparing the larger forces at home. It will make the United States immediately effective in the war.

There is no reasonable excuse or justification for denying Col. Roosevelt the right to serve the Nation at the battle front. The public, which has demonstrated its approval of the project, will interpret congressional objection of it in only one way. They will say the party in power was influenced by political consideration; by the fear that Roosevelt would come home a hero. In answer to that, I say that he will come home a hero, but that it will reflect credit upon the red blood of America.

The Federal Farm-Loan Act Unjust to the Borrower.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES H. DILLON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 14, 1917.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, on May 11, 1917, I introduced House bill 4375, to amend section 22 of the Federal farm-loan act. The necessity for this amendment is forcefully presented by Hon. H. L. Loucks, of Watertown, S. Dak., in his valuable work, "The Great Conspiracy of the House of Morgan, and How to Defeat It," on page 175.

Section 12 of the Federal farm-loan act provides—

Funds transmitted to farm-loan associations by Federal land banks to be loaned to its members shall be in current funds, or farm-loan bonds, at the option of the borrower.

Section 22 provides:

Whenever any farm-loan bonds, or coupons or interest payments of such bonds, are due under their terms they shall be payable at the land bank by which they were issued in gold or lawful money.

Under the Federal reserve act the current funds in the future will be largely Federal reserve bank notes. Any money that will pass current in business transactions may be called current funds, yet the current funds may not be gold or lawful money. I can not see any just reason why the borrower on his loan should receive current funds and be compelled to repay in gold or lawful money. He ought to be permitted to repay with the same kind of money he receives.

It is unnecessary to discuss what is included in the term "lawful money," because the mortgage will be drawn with a provision for repayment in gold. When the law provides for repayment "in gold or lawful money," the parties to the contract will evidently provide that repayment shall be made in gold.

When an insurance company issues a policy it always provides favorable terms for the company and unfavorable terms for the insured. Likewise the lender takes no chances, and the mortgage usually provides for repayment in gold. The lender always has shifted the chances and burdens upon the borrowing debtor; and whenever the law provides for a payment in gold or lawful money the court will allow the parties to the contract to specify that the payment shall be in gold.

The practical workings of this act will require the payment of every mortgage to be made in gold coin, so the borrower will not be permitted to pay in current funds or in lawful money. It will not do to say that the borrower might insist on a provision in the contract to pay in current funds or lawful money, because he will be required to stipulate for a gold payment before he can secure any money.

It may be said that the Government will maintain the parity on all of its moneys, and hence the debtor will assume no risk in contracting to repay in gold. Yet no good reason exists for placing these chances and burdens on the borrower. We remember that in the Civil War gold went up to $2.85, and those who had the gold made tremendous profits during that period of our history. In 1907 there was not enough currency in circulation to transact current business. It was hoarded; and the Wall Street brokers refused to give up gold or currency without a premium. Again, in 1914 the rates for drafts and cables rose to prices which were equivalent to a substantial premium on gold.

It is common knowledge that practically all our farm mortgages are now payable in gold coin. Our loans to the allies will provide for repayment in gold. It is estimated that the debt now payable in gold will amount to billions of dollars. Gold coin has ceased to circulate in European countries and but little of it is now circulating in the United States. On account of the war the European countries can not maintain a parity on their moneys. No one can tell at what time it will be impossible for us to maintain a parity on our moneys.

The present tendency is to mobilize all the gold in the Federal reserve banks. Under the laws these central banks can reach out over the country and pull into their vaults the gold formerly distributed among the smaller banks and thus place in the hands of a few bankers a dangerous power. The Federal Reserve Board has been insistent that House bill 3673, to amend the Federal reserve act, should be passed. This bill has passed both Houses and is now in conference. The practical purpose of this amendment will be to put into control of the Federal Reserve System practically all the gold of the country.

The bill that I am proposing would do no one any injustice. It would allow repayment of loans made under the Federal farm-loan act to be made in the same funds as were received by the borrower. Certainly during this period the farmer ought not to be required to carry the burdens and chances of having to pay loans at a premium. If there should be a general demand for payment of loans in gold, there would be but one result; the borrower would have to pay a premium to obtain money to repay his loan.

Our Flag.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 14, 1917.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article on "Our flag," its history and its anniversaries, together with a list of patriotic days and holidays, a calendar of American history, and the laws and etiquette of the flag.

The article is as follows:

OUR FLAG, ITS HISTORY AND ITS ANNIVERSARIES, TOGETHER WITH A LIST OF PATRIOTIC DAYS AND HOLIDAYS—A CALENDAR OF AMERICAN HISTORY AND THE LAWS AND ETIQUETTE OF THE FLAG—THE FLAG, THE COAT OF ARMS, AND THE GREAT SEAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

OUR FLAG.

In June, 1776, a committee of Congress, accompanied by Gen. Washington, called upon Betsy Ross, of Philadelphia, and engaged her to make a model flag from a rough drawing, which was modified by Gen. Washington in pencil, and who at Betsy Ross's suggestion substituted a five-pointed star for the star of six points which was in the original draft. The model made by Mrs. Ross was adopted as the official flag of the United States by act of Congress passed on June 14, 1777. It consisted of 13 stripes, alternate red and white, with 13 white stars in a blue field. The 13 stripes denote the 13 original Colonies; its red denotes courage; its white, purity; its blue, loyalty and devotion; and its stars, high aspirations and Federal union. It embodies the purpose and history of the Government itself. It records the achievements of its defenders upon land and sea. It heralds the heroism and sacrifices of our Revolutionary fathers, who planted free government on this continent and dedicated it to liberty forever. It attests the struggles of our Army and the valor of our citizens in all the wars of the Republic. It has been sanctified by the blood of our best and bravest. It records the glorious work of Washington and the martyrdom of Lincoln. It has been bathed in the tears of a sorrowing people. It has been glorified in the hearts of a freedom-loving people, not only at home but in every part of the world. Our flag expresses the will of a free people and proclaims that they are supreme and acknowledge no earthly sovereign other than themselves. Veterans, no wonder you love that flag! God give it to all of us in our hearts that we may share with you that love, that reverence, and that same spirit of willingness to die for the Star-Spangled Banner! (From an address by Channing H. Cox, speaker Massachusetts House of Representatives, delivered on Flag Day, 1916, at Haverhill, Mass.)

FLAG ANNIVERSARIES.

January 1–2, 1776: Grand Union Flag (British union and 13 stripes) hoisted over Washington's headquarters at Cambridge, Mass. This was the first real flag of the Colonies.

February 8, 1776: Colonial Congressional Committee accepted naval flag, consisting of 13 stripes, alternate red and white, with a rattlesnake diagonally across it.

March 17, 1776: The first display of the Grand Union Flag in Boston was on the day that town was evacuated by the British.

November 16, 1776: First foreign salute to an American flag. This was to the Grand Union Flag, and was given by the Dutch governor, De Graaff, at the island of St. Eustatius to the brig Andrea Doria, commanded by Capt. Robinson.

June 14, 1777: First strictly American flag decreed by Congress. This flag displaced the British union by 13 stars, and the first flag of this design was made by Betsy Ross, at her home in Philadelphia. It contained 13 stripes, alternate red and white, and 13 white stars upon a blue field.

June 14, 1777: Capt. John Paul Jones appointed to the command of the Ranger. It was Jones who first displayed the Stars and Stripes on a naval vessel. It was also he who had previously first hoisted "the flag of America" on board the naval vessel Alfred in 1775.

August 3, 1777: First display of the Stars and Stripes was over Fort Stanwix, N. Y.

September 11, 1777: The American flag first carried in battle at the Brandywine. This was the first great battle fought after its adoption by the Continental Congress.

January 28, 1778: First appearance on a foreign stronghold at Nassau, Bahama Islands. The Americans captured Fort Nassau from the British, and promptly raised the Stars and Stripes.

February 14, 1778: First foreign salute to the Stars and Stripes. John Paul Jones entered Quiberon Bay, near Brest, France, and received a salute of nine guns from the French fleet, under Admiral La Motte Piquet. Jones had previously saluted the French fleet with 21 guns.

April 24, 1778: John Paul Jones achieved the honor of being the first officer of the American Navy to compel a regular British man-of-war to strike her colors to the new flag.

February 3, 1783: First appearance of the American flag in a British port by the ship Bedford, of Massachusetts, which arrived in the River Thames on this date.

September 13, 1784: First displayed in China by Capt. John Green, of the Empress, in Canton River. The natives said it was as beautiful as a flower, and the Chinese continued to call it the "flower flag" for many years.

September 30, 1787–August 10, 1790: The American flag completed its first trip around the world, borne by the ship Columbia, sailing from Boston.

January 13, 1794: American flag changed by act of Congress, owing to two new States (Kentucky and Vermont) being admitted to the Union. The flag now had two stars and two stripes added to it, making 15 stripes and stars. This was the Star-Spangled Banner, and under this flag our country fought and won three wars to maintain her existence—the so-called naval war with France in 1798; that with the Barbary States in 1801–1805; and that with England in 1812–1815.

January 26, 1813: U. S. frigate Essex, first warship to fly the American flag in the Pacific, after rounding Cape Horn. The Essex destroyed British commerce in the Pacific to the amount of $6,000,000. Built at Salem, Mass., and launched September 30, 1799.

April 4, 1818: Congress by act decreed a return to the original 13 stripes and a star for every State in the Union, to be added to the flag on the July 4 following a State's admission to the Union. This is the present law in relation to the flag.

August 24, 1824: The Stars and Stripes were raised for the first time over the cupola of the Massachusetts Statehouse, on Beacon Hill, on the occasion of the visit of Lafayette to Boston.

August 10, 1831: The name "Old Glory" given to our national flag by Capt. William Driver, of the brig Charles Doggert. The flag was presented to the captain and contained 110 yards of bunting. It is now said to be in the Essex Institute, at Salem.

October 18, 1867: First official display of the American flag in Alaska. On this day, at Sitka, the capital, the Russian flag was hauled down and the American flag run up before the barracks and in the presence of both Russian and American troops.

FLAG HISTORY.

The Constitution is the basis of all law and the flag is its symbol.

The American flag, the emblem of our country, is the third oldest national flag in the world. It represents liberty, and liberty means obedience to law.

The flag contains 13 stripes, alternate red and white, representing the 13 original States; and a star for each State in the Union.

The field of the flag is the stripes, the Union is the blue and the stars. The colors of the flag are red, representing valor; white, representing hope, purity, and truth; blue, representing loyalty, sincerity, and justice; and its stars, high aspirations and Federal Union. The flag is known as Old Glory, Stars and Stripes, Star-Spangled Banner, and the Red, White, and Blue.

The arrangement of the stars on the flag is regulated by law and Executive order. An Executive order, issued October 26, 1912, provided for 48 stars to be arranged in six horizontal rows of eight stars each.

Starting in the upper left-hand corner and reading each row from left to right, gives the star of each State in the order of the State's ratification of the Constitution and admission to the Union, as follows:

First row: 1, Delaware; 2, Pennsylvania; 3, New Jersey; 4, Georgia; 5, Connecticut; 6, Massachusetts; 7, Maryland; 8, South Carolina.

Second row: 9, New Hampshire; 10, Virginia; 11, New York; 12, North Carolina; 13, Rhode Island; 14, Vermont; 15, Kentucky; 16, Tennessee.

Third row: 17, Ohio; 18, Louisiana; 19, Indiana; 20, Mississippi; 21, Illinois; 22, Alabama; 23, Maine; 24, Missouri.

The dimensions of the flag are fixed by an Executive order issued May 26, 1916. Its length should be just 1.9 times its height.

The union, or part of the flag on which the stars appear, should be seven stripes high and its length 0.76 of the height of the flag. The stars are five-pointed, with one point directly upward.

When a new State is admitted the star is not added to the flag until the Fourth of July next succeeding the date of admission.

FLAG ETIQUETTE.

The flag should be raised at sunrise and lowered at sunset. It may be raised at other times, but should never be left out at night, except when it is under the fire of an enemy.

On Memorial Day the flag should be displayed at half-staff from sunrise until noon, and at the peak from noon until sunset.

In raising the flag to half-staff or half-mast, it should always be run to the peak and then lowered one breadth of the flag. In retiring it, it should first be run back to the peak and then retired. It should never be allowed to touch the ground.

When the Star-Spangled Banner is played or sung stand and remain standing, in silence, until it is finished.

When the flag is passing on parade, or in review, if you are walking, halt; if sitting, rise, stand at attention, and uncover.

The flag should never be worn as the whole or part of a costume. As a badge it should be worn over the left breast.

In decorating, the flag should never be festooned or draped; always hung flat.

If hung so stripes are horizontal, union should be in left upper corner.

If hung perpendicularly, union should be in right upper corner.

When the national flag and another flag fly from same pole there should be double halyards, one for each flag.

The flag should never be placed below a person sitting.

When carried in parade, or when crossed with other flags, the Stars and Stripes should always be at right.

When the flag is used in unveiling a statue or monument it should not be allowed to fall to the ground, but should be carried aloft to wave out, forming a distinctive feature during the remainder of the ceremony.

When the flag is placed over a bier or casket the blue field should be at the head.

As an altar covering, the union should be at the right as you face the altar, and nothing should be placed upon the flag except the Holy Bible.

The flag should never be reversed except in case of distress at sea.

FLAG LAWS.

THE FLAG OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

The flag of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts shall bear on one side a representation of the coat of arms of the Commonwealth, as prescribed by section 1 of chapter 2 of the Revised Laws, upon a white field, and on the other side a blue shield bearing a representation of a green pine tree upon a white field. (Ch. 229, Acts of 1908, as amended by ch. 37, Acts of 1915.)

THE OBSERVANCE OF FLAG DAY.

Resolved, That the governor shall annually set apart the 14th day of June as flag day, that date being the anniversary of the adoption of the national flag by the Continental Congress in the year 1777, and shall issue his proclamation recommending that the day be observed by the people of the Commonwealth in the display of the flag and in such other ways as will be in harmony with the general character of the day. (Ch. 5, Resolves of 1911.)

THE DISPLAY OF THE NATIONAL AND STATE FLAGS ON STATE BUILDINGS.

The flag of the United States and the flag of the Commonwealth shall be displayed on the main or administration building of each of the public institutions of the Commonwealth. The flags shall be of suitable dimensions and shall be flown every day when the weather permits. The cost of such flags and of the necessary means for their display shall be paid from the appropriations for the several institutions. Ch. 60, Acts of 1909.)

THE DISPLAY OF THE UNITED STATES FLAG ON SCHOOLHOUSES.

The school committee of every city and town shall provide for each schoolhouse in which a public school is maintained and which is not otherwise supplied a United States flag of silk or bunting not less than 4 feet in length, and suitable apparatus whereby the flag shall be displayed on the schoolhouse building or grounds every school day when the weather permits, and on the inside of the schoolhouse on other school days. Failure to observe this law for a period of five consecutive days upon the part of the master or principal in charge of the school at the time shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5 for each period of five days of such negligence, unless such failure is caused by the school committee in not providing the said master or principal with a flag, in which case the said penalty shall be imposed on those directly responsible for the failure so to supply the said master or principal. Said penalty shall be imposed by any court of competent jurisdiction within the Commonwealth. (Ch. 232, Acts of 1911.)

MISUSE OF NATIONAL OR STATE FLAGS.

Whoever publicly mutilates, tramples upon, defaces, or treats contemptuously the flag of the United States or of Massachusetts, whether such flag is public or private property, or whoever displays such flag or any representation thereof upon which are words, figures, advertisements, or designs, or who shall in this commonwealth expose to public view, manufacture, sell, expose for sale, give away or have in possession for sale or to give away or for use for any purpose, any article or substance, being an article of merchandise or a receptacle of merchandise or articles upon which shall be attached through a wrapping or otherwise, engraved or printed in any manner, a representation of the United States flag, shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars; but a flag which belongs to a Grand Army post, to a camp of the Legion of Spanish War Veterans, or which is the property of or is used in the service of the United States or of this commonwealth may have the names of battles and the name and number of the organization to which such flag belongs inscribed thereon. Words, figures, advertisements, or designs attached to, or directly or indirectly connected with, the flag or any representation thereof in such manner that the flag or its representation is used to attract attention to or advertise such words, figures, advertisements, or designs, shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be upon the flag. (Chap. 570, acts of 1914.) Not to apply to publications issued solely for the purpose of giving information in relation to the flag or to publications issued solely for the purpose of promoting patriotism or encouraging the study of American history; but no words, figures, designs or other marks of any kind shall be placed upon the flag or any representation thereof. (Chap. 36, general acts of 1916.)

MISUSE OF FOREIGN FLAGS.

Whoever publicly mutilates, tramples upon, defaces, or treats contemptuously the flag or emblem of a foreign country at peace with the United States, whether such flag or emblem is public or private property, or whoever displays such flag or emblem or any representation thereof upon which are words, figures, advertisements, or designs, shall be punished by a fine of not less than five nor more than fifty dollars. (Chap. 197, acts of 1912.)

DISPLAY OF FOREIGN FLAGS OR EMBLEMS ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Whoever displays the flag or emblem of a foreign country upon the outside of a State, county, city, or town building or public schoolhouse shall be punished by a fine of not more than $20; but the provisions of this section shall not apply when a citizen of such foreign country becomes the guest of the United States or of this commonwealth, if the governor by proclamation authorizes the flag of the country of which such guest is a citizen to be displayed upon public buildings other than schoolhouses. (Sec. 6, chap. 206, revised laws.)

SEAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

COUNCIL RECORDS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1780.

* * * * * * *

Ordered, That Nathan Cushing, Esq., be a committee to prepare a seal for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, who reported a device for a seal for said Commonwealth as follows, viz: Sapphire, an Indian, dressed in his shirt, moccasins, belted proper, in his right hand a bow, topaz, in his left an arrow, its point toward the base; of the second, on the dexter side of the Indian's head, a star, pearl, for one of the United States of America.

Crest. On a wreath a dexter arm clothed and ruffled proper, grasping a broadsword, the pummel and hilt topaz, with this motto: Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem. And around the seal: Sigillum Reipublicæ Massachusettensis.

Advised that the said report be accepted as the arms of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

THE ARMS AND GREAT SEAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH.

The arms of the Commonwealth shall consist of a shield having a blue field or surface with an Indian thereon, dressed in a shirt and moccasins, holding in his right hand a bow, and in his left hand an arrow, point downward, all of gold; and in the upper corner of the field, above his right arm, a silver star with five points. The crest shall be a wreath of blue and gold, whereon, in gold, shall be a right arm, bent at the elbow, clothed and ruffled, with the hand grasping a broadsword. The motto shall be "Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem."

(The motto is the second of two lines written about A. D. 1659 by Algernon Sydney, the famous English patriot, in the Book of Mottoes in the King's library at Copenhagen, Denmark. The complete phrase is: "Manus haec inimica tyrannis. Ense petit placidam sub libertate quietem." It was adopted in 1775 by the Provincial Congress, when we were at war with England, and was intended as a message to England. It is a peaceful motto and means, "By the sword we seek peace, but peace only under liberty.")

The coat of arms as drawn and emblazoned under the direction of the secretary of the Commonwealth in the year 1898 and deposited in his office shall be the official representation of the coat of arms of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and all designs of said coat of arms for official use shall conform strictly to said representation.

The great seal of the Commonwealth shall be circular in form, bearing upon its face a representation of the arms of the Commonwealth encircled with the inscription "Sigillum Reipublicæ Massachusettensis." The colors of the arms shall not be an essential part of said seal, but an impression from a seal engraved according to said design on any commission, paper, or document shall be valid without the use of such colors or the representation thereof by the customary heraldic lines or marks.

The seal of the Commonwealth in use in the office of the secretary of the Commonwealth when this act takes effect shall be the authorized seal so long as its use may be continued. (Ch. 2, Rev. Laws.)

No person or private corporation shall use the arms or the great seal of the Commonwealth, nor any representation thereof, for any advertising or commercial purpose whatever. (Ch. 195, Acts of 1903.)

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
ALBERT P. LANGTRY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

THE FLAG GOES BY.

[By permission of The Youth's Companion.]

Hats off!
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums,
A flash of color beneath the sky;
Hats off!
The flag is passing by.

Blue and crimson and white it shines,
Over the steel-tipped, ordered lines.
Hats off!
The colors before us fly;
But more than the flag is passing by.

Sea-fights and land-fights, grim and great,
Fought to make and to save the state;
Weary marches and sinking ships,
Cheers of victory on dying lips;

Days of plenty and days of peace,
March of a strong land's swift increase;
Equal justice, right, and law,
Stately honor and reverend awe.

Sign of a nation, great and strong,
To ward her people from foreign wrong;
Pride and glory and honor, all
Live in colors to stand or fall.

Hats off!
Along the street there comes
A blare of bugles, a ruffle of drums,
And loyal hearts are beating high.
Hats off!
The flag is passing by.

Petition of the Eastern Soda Bottlers' Association of Massachusetts.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 14, 1917.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a petition of the Eastern Soda Bottlers' Association of Massachusetts.

The petition is as follows:

PETITION OF THE EASTERN SODA BOTTLERS' ASSOCIATION OF MASSACHUSETTS, ADDRESSED TO HON. HENRY CABOT LODGE AND THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

GENTLEMEN: The following resolutions were adopted and signed by the Eastern Soda Bottlers' Association, which comprises all of the soda bottlers in the State of Massachusetts:

"Resolved, That the soft-drink bottlers of the State of Massachusetts, who have hard struggling to make both ends meet owing to the enormous increase in the price of sugar, which is the principal ingredient used in the soft-drink business, protest against the proposed tax of 1 cent per pound on sugar; and be it further

"Resolved, That the soft-drink bottlers of the State of Massachusetts further protest against the unjust proposed tax of 2 cents per gallon for carbonated, which for the last 40 years has always been sold by the average store at 5 cents retail. This would aggregate to the manufacturers and bottlers a fraction over 2 cents per bottle, and, in view of the fact that practically 100 per cent of the bottlers' products are sold by dealers, there is no possibility of raising the price to dealers, as the dealers must have a fair profit for their trouble in the resale of the same, otherwise no sane business man will handle soft drinks, which in turn means that a large majority of the public are to be deprived of obtaining a bottle of soft drink at 5 cents per bottle. In order to resell any under this proposed tax it will mean that the average store will be forced to retail the same at 10 cents for a half-pint bottle, which will mean that the sale of all soft drinks will be curtailed, and means that only the few bottlers who are financially able will not be obliged to close up their bottling shops; and be it further

"Resolved, That according to section 308 of the Ways and Means Committee's report, that the tax of 1 cent per gallon on mineral and table waters is an uncalled-for tax, and, in view of the fact that in the cities and towns which have the largest sale of mineral and table waters, they are used to great extent, because the local city or town water supply is of a poor quality and very often the local physicians or hospitals absolutely refuse to allow their patients to use the same, prescribing in place thereof the bottled spring waters, and Massachusetts, with a larger proportion of springs than any other State of the Union, will be affected more by this than a great majority of the States put together; and be it further

"Resolved, That the proposed tax of 8 cents per pound on gas put up in drums is considered by all soft-drink bottlers to be a further infliction and unjust to impose on the bottler when obliged to purchase this at the average price of 5 cents per pound, with the proposed tax would mean that the bottler would be forced to pay 13 cents per pound. If this is passed it will mean that the bottler who is financially able will be forced to go back to the method of making his own gas, but which would mean a heavy investment for generators, etc., which a great many could not afford, and those fortunate enough to be able to buy the same would not have to pay a tax thereon."

Increase of the Military Establishment by Allowing Col. Roosevelt to Raise Four Divisions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN S. SNOOK,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. SNOOK. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the motion to recommit the conference report with instructions to the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment which permits Col. Theodore Roosevelt to raise four divisions of volunteers for service in France.

Talk as we may, the people of the country do not yet seem to fully realize the fact that we have declared war against the greatest military power in all the world, and that we should now remember that our first duty and greatest necessity are thorough preparation to carry that war to a successful issue.

We must not hesitate; we must not delay; we must take advantage of every means at hand immediately. More than 120,000 men who want to go to the front have voluntarily offered their services to Col. Roosevelt; they are now asking for that opportunity; they are seasoned men; nearly all have had experience; they are courageous, daring spirits like their leader.

The country needs an awakening for the task before it. Our people are patriotic, but they need something to awaken that patriotism; to stir up the spirit that animated the Nation of '76 and '61. There is nothing that we can do that will so awaken and stir the country as the assembling and sending this force of men with Col. Roosevelt to the battle line in France.

He was once the President of this Nation. He has a loyal, enthusiastic, personal following, such as no other man in the country, aside from our President, can command. These followers are found in every city, town, and township in the country. At the very launching of this movement they will start a wave of enthusiasm for the war that will stir our people in every corner of the land.

I can not believe that there is any force to the argument that such a movement will destroy the system of conscription that we are about to establish for the raising of our Army. All of these men are to be more than 25 years of age, and so few of them are within the ages liable to conscription that the plan will not be affected. But, be that as it may, the benefit to be attained will far outweigh any imagined loss that we may sustain.

We will have a magnificent army of courageous and adventurous men, with not an unwilling soul in the whole organization. They will be mature men who will understand the cause for which they are fighting, who will know the reason which brought on the war, and who will realize that the issue is liberty and democracy not alone for ourselves but for the peoples of the world.

They will be inspired by the leader who has been preaching the course they are about to take when most men were timid and afraid to speak. Such an army is sure to arouse the slumbering patriotism of our people and to carry a message of hope and cheer to the soldiers in France.

I repeat what I have said at another time—the one thing that distinguishes man from the beast and from the machine is the power of will. Here you have a force of men exercising that power to the highest degree. They will all be men, from their leader down, who wish, above all things on earth, to be granted the privilege of having a part in this war.

They are men whose will is driving them to the course they are taking. I repeat, such a band of men must necessarily be an inspiration to our people at home and to the soldiers of England and France with whom they go to fight.

There is another thing which I believe is important, although all may not be of the same opinion. The first steps taken in this war need the greatest publicity possible. The newspapers have been doing their part and will continue to do good work. But, as I have said, Col. Roosevelt has been President of our country and except President Wilson is the most talked-of man in America.

His very temperament, his unique style, will add interest and publicity to the raising of our Army and the conduct of the war.

Then also there is an opportunity to meet the request of the English and French envoys to this country for American troops in France as soon as possible.

They tell us that it will be of the highest benefit to the cause of the allies, and that it will have a splendid effect on the morale of their armies.

Let us meet their appeal with a band of soldiers who are seeking with all the purpose of determined souls to carry on this struggle with the same spirit that has always animated the American soldier.

There is no force to the objection which has been made so many times in this debate that Col. Roosevelt has had no military training and is not therefore prepared to command so large a force of men. He does not ask to be the first in command. He wishes this place to be given to a Regular Army officer and asks only that he may be given the command of a brigade.

Then, too, it is provided by the terms of the Senate amendment itself that the officers for these soldiers shall be selected in the same manner as those of the soldiers selected under the draft.

It must be remembered, too, that Col. Roosevelt is a man who has acquired great information on every subject and who has made a close study of war and the manner in which it has been carried on in the past. His general information, his personal character, his courage, and his enthusiasm will compensate for his lack of military training.

There has been some suggestion that there is politics in the amendment. I am sure that no one who knows me well would ever suspect or accuse me of doing anything to boost the political fortunes of Col. Roosevelt. I do not believe there is any politics connected with this movement. It occurs to me, however, that one of the strongest reasons for adopting this motion is that there may not be a suspicion left in the minds of the people that political prejudice may have prevented Col. Roosevelt and his followers from taking part in the war.

I have heard it said so many times during the debates at this session of Congress that sentiment should have no part in this war that I have been moved to ask myself the question, Is this statement correct? Is sentiment dead? Does it no longer play a part in the affairs of men? Every man who has studied history at all knows what an important part sentiment played in bringing on the Revolutionary, Civil, and Spanish-American Wars, and how much more important an effect it had in raising the armies for these wars and in crowning such armies with victory.

I wonder if my colleagues of the South, many of them descendants of brave men who served in the Confederate Army as officers or as private soldiers, men whose hearts have so often been touched, and who to this very day tremble with emotion at the stories which recount the deeds of heroism of their ancestors, can say that sentiment had nothing to do with animating these heroes to display such bravery and undergo such hardship and sacrifice as the world has seldom seen. The pages of all history are illumed with the heroic deeds of men and women which utterly refute the statement that sentiment will have no part to play in this war.

Men may talk to me of the perfect work of the machine and extol the power of efficiency. I do not underrate the worth of either; but when the battle is on and the supreme test is at hand, justice and right, inspired by patriotism, have more than once wrested victory from efficiency commanded by tyranny.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. BENJAMIN F. WELTY.

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, popular opinion again seems to demand that the country should follow persons whose names have more or less magic, no matter what their ability to lead.

There are certain gentlemen, for whom I hold the highest respect, who have seemingly forgotten that the stability of their country depends upon our devotion to the principles which alone can sustain it, after we have passed from the stage of active life. I am sorry that these gentlemen think that we must follow men regardless of the principle involved. They seem to become impatient because we do not cheer when they cheer and refuse to rush headlong into this war, pell-mell, regardless of preparations.

I admire the enthusiasm of these gentlemen, but their judgment does not appeal to me, especially when I remember that we have spent millions to educate men for the present emergency.

There are three classes of persons who want to send Mr. Roosevelt to France—those who admire him, those who want to get rid of him, and some who are glad he is willing to volunteer and save them from going.

Col. Roosevelt has many admirable qualifications, but he should be strong enough to subject himself and his ambitions in times like these and be able to stand aside and let men accept the center of the stage whom we have trained for war at the public expense—at least, to give these men a chance.

If we were in need of a surgical operation, we would not invite the butcher to the hospital, but we would trust only the most skilled surgeon. Why not apply a little common sense in conducting a war? Has Mr. Roosevelt any military experience save that which he received during the Spanish-American War?

Could he form a regiment and lead it into battle without months of training? Remember, there are those who will trust their lives in his keeping if we pass this resolution, because they have faith in us and believe we know. Would you trust your lives in the keeping of an inexperienced officer? Why not protect the man whose enthusiasm will tend to dethrone his judgment? We may need his help and should be careful not to sacrifice his life needlessly now.

The affairs of this world are headed and carried on largely by experts. We have them in every profession and look to them for authority. We expect to find nurses and surgeons in our hospitals, the man who knows all about flying in our Aviation Corps, expert engineers to build our bridges and ships and plant our mines—and why?—Mr. Roosevelt knows a little about everything and not much of anything, you say? But, laying all jokes aside, would it not be too bad to send him to France in order to get rid of him? The country needs and is entitled to his services, as well as to those of the men who would volunteer and expect to go to the trenches before they were prepared to go.

Think for a minute and apply the rule of common sense and you will never vote even to permit a single man to lose his life needlessly. We are going against the highest military trained forces in the world, and would you expect raw recruits to be a match for them? If not, then it must necessarily follow that they would disgrace the Stars and Stripes in their first engagement—and it might take millions to regain our prestige.

How long would you expect an untrained man to stand up against a skillful pugilist in a boxing match? Oh, you say, that is not a parallel. Why not, I pray you? A soldier's efficiency consists only in two things—knowledge of military affairs and a physical body able to fight and endure.

Do we want to go on record as granting a special privilege to any person? Can we afford to depart from the time-honored tradition of "equal rights to all, special privileges to none?" Mr. Speaker, we forget that this country does not consist of acres of land, plains, hills, and mountains, nor even of men and women and children, but of principles—principles which are eternal and live in the hearts and lives of the men and women and children—principles which hold us and enable us to forget and escape ourselves and make it a joy to live and die that they might be maintained.

The abiding question will remain with each who supports this resolution, not "Am I true to these principles?" but "Can I afford to abandon them by granting special privilege to one man after I have denied that privilege to other men?" We are told that France is calling for fighters; granted. But are we justified in throwing them into the trenches without any previous training? Can we afford to have them butchered because of their unpreparedness? We forget that a little more than a month ago we were at peace with all the world. We have had little time to beat our plowshares into swords and our pruning hooks into spears. Do we want to send an ex-President into the trenches to fight with his fists? Ah, I repeat, your enthusiasm I admire but your judgment does not appeal to me.

Again, we are told that we should send these raw recruits to cheer the French and British. You forget that enthusiasm must constantly be fed. The entente allies would cheer, because they would expect the Americans to rush into battle, carry all before them, cross the Rhine, continue their march to Berlin, and not stop fighting until they had scalped the Kaiser before his blood was cold. Do you think that the cheering of the French and British would continue from day to day at the mere sight of American troops? No, gentlemen, the scenes must be shifted from day to day in order to keep up the enthusiasm.

We are told that France and England are calling for our troops just as they called for the Russians. Will you consent to have them butchered as the Russians were butchered when they engaged the trained troops of the German Army while themselves unprepared? Gentlemen, let us go about this business in a sane manner, like men, and not like schoolboys carried away by enthusiasm. The country needs not only our best thoughts but our most earnest prayers in times when the old ship of state has left her moorings and we are drifting with the war tide. Have we lost our bearings, or is the needle of our compass deflected by personal magnetism? I hope not. I was not only surprised, but amazed, when a few days ago about one-third of this House voted to destroy the independence of our Government by submitting one of the coordinate branches of the Government to the absolute dictation of a second.

Let us be sober in our deliberations, and not vote to sustain our enthusiasm, but, I pray you, let that vote of yours be in harmony with your judgment and blend with the light that is within you.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD,
OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 16, 1917.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, this bill should have had months instead of weeks for consideration in committee. In view of its tremendous importance to the manufacturing and commercial interests of the country, there should have been in the work of framing the tentative draft several subcommittees instead of one, and every member of every subcommittee should have had every possible assistance from experts and other men whose judgment, patriotism, and experience are unquestioned. It is not the size of the bill that staggers—it is its unfairness. However, the main criticism should fall upon the Treasury Department, where it properly belongs. The Ways and Means Committee was simply a medium through which the Secretary of the Treasury acted. What the Treasury Department said was law, and the bill under consideration is a McAdoo proposition from start to finish.

The Republicans made no minority report, and therefore I shall, to quote the language of our lord high executioner, Mr. KITCHIN, "close my eyes and vote for the bill." But I want the House and the public to know that I am doing so against my better judgment, and that this apology would not be necessary, in my opinion, had sufficient time been given our committee to consider carefully through subcommittee and individual investigation the direct application of every paragraph of the bill to the industry or interest or individual affected by it. Personally, I took the deepest interest in the deliberations of the Ways and Means Committee. As a manufacturer of broad experience, I felt that the knowledge I had gained in the development of a large manufacturing corporation, which has carried its business to every corner of the civilized globe, and has helped to show other countries what American inventive genius and American business methods can do, would be of some assistance to the committee. In the light of what followed I now conclude that I overestimated my usefulness. I am aware that protests and hypercriticism will avail nothing. Therefore I desire to impress upon the House these facts: That this bill came to us practically ready-made; that the work of the Ways and Means Committee was largely perfunctory; that there was no real emergency that required such disastrous haste; that months instead of weeks should have been used in preparing the bill; and that the Secretary of the Treasury, rather than the Ways and Means Committee, should be criticized by those who feel they have been unjustly hit. I realize that Congress is facing a most serious and difficult problem—the task of raising by taxation for an indefinite length of time, during the continuation of the war, a large proportion of the enormous amounts of money necessary to defray the extraordinary expenses of the Government, without in any way dislocating the wheels of commerce and industry. It is the general feeling that many of the proposals for raising the revenue needed by the Government are ill advised and radical in the extreme. Nothing excessive or confiscatory in nature or scope should be undertaken. Furthermore, all forms of taxation should be avoided which do not affect all alike or which can in any way be called unfair.

Taxes, however justifiable, are never popular—direct taxes still less than indirect taxes. For that reason care must be taken that the general dislike to them and the task of collecting them are not increased by any taint of unfairness or inequality. Taxes on the same source of income should bear equally and justly on all alike.

Of all the methods of raising war revenue, the most unfair and inequitable is the so-called excess profits tax law, which has already been enacted and which it is now desired to change to such an extent that it will be nothing else but an outright legalized premium on watered stock and inefficiency. The idea of this legislation has been taken from Europe, but the law as adopted here and the proposed confiscatory amplifications of it betray an absolute misunderstanding and misapplication of European tax laws on excess war profits. Excess profits, in the European meaning, are the profits which a company may have earned since and by reason of the war in excess of the average profits which the same company earned for a number of years before the war. In applying the term abroad, regard is had solely to the comparative profits of one and the same company for the period before and since the war; in the United States the term "excess profits" is arbitrarily applied to the profits of corporations in general, regardless of whether the larger profits are due to favorable war-time conditions, without any special merit of the company or to the fact that the company showing the large earnings is capitalized conservatively, efficiently and modernly equipped, and capably managed. In Europe, for instance, a company whose average profits before the war were 6 per cent and since then 20 per cent would pay a larger excess profits tax than a company with the same capital which had for years before the war earned 25 per cent on its capital and since the war 30 per cent, although the latter's profits, from an absolute point of view, are higher. The so-called excess profits tax law, therefore, as now existing in the United States and still more so in the extreme forms proposed, has nothing in common with the European tax laws but its name, and is an arbitrarily fixed tax on efficiency, good management, and honest capitalization.

Excess profits taxes, in the sense understood in the present law and in the more extreme legislation proposed, are unsound in principle and would be absolutely arbitrary and unfair in practice. Corporations honestly capitalized, with at least one dollar or even more of assets for every dollar of capital stock, would be at a great disadvantage with those companies which are heavily overcapitalized. The latter could pay out dividends on all excessive capitalization before being liable to the excess profits tax, thus practically escaping that tax altogether.

Corporations differ widely in their nature. Some have a comparatively large capital stock and little indebtedness; others have a small capital stock and large indebtedness. In some the capital stock is small compared with the total assets; in others the capital stock has been inflated and watered out of all proportion to real values. Some corporations are managed with exceptional skill, others indifferently, others very poorly. Some corporations have a quick turnover, frequently repeated during the war; others have a slower, much less frequent turnover. It is absolutely impossible to arbitrarily fix uniform standards of profits for all.

Many shares of corporations have a market value far above their par value, due to the conservative policy, good management, and excellent earning capacity of the enterprise. In reliance on all these investors have bought such shares at the market value, and although the earnings and dividends of the corporation, as compared with the par value of its stock, are large, the actual yield to the investor is often no more than a fair return on his investment. Now, investors who have bought these shares at their enhanced value in good faith should not suddenly find their income abnormally and unjustly reduced by an excess tax on earnings, which while nominally large when only the par value of the capital stock is considered, are in reality but a fair return on the capital really invested.

Any internal taxation system adopted should obtain the desired revenue at the least injury to the industry or business of the country. The success of any scheme of taxation requires that industry be maintained at as high degree of production and commerce at as large a volume as possible; the chances of such success will be far greater if the tax is levied upon the entire profits of an undertaking rather than upon the profits in excess of any arbitrarily fixed percentage on capital. Everything possible should be done to stimulate and encourage business, not to discourage it. Efficiency and success and honest capitalization should not be penalized by a surtax on profits which exceed an arbitrarily fixed percentage. In many cases such extra profits represent years of careful and conservative policy and tireless energy, during which time earlier profits have been repeatedly put back into the business instead of being taken out and spent.

Of course, as much should be raised by immediate taxation as can be raised without hindering industry and commerce. Extremes should be avoided, however, which not only savor of confiscation of the property of corporations and individuals but also destroy the taxable basis itself and endanger the successful carrying out of the whole taxation program, especially by weakening the power and capacity of the Nation at large to absorb the huge bond issues planned.

While it may at first sight seem in accord with popular notions to squeeze everything possible out of corporations, yet the public will in the long run feel the full effects of any excess profits tax and sooner or later realize its unsoundness. Excess public will in the long run feel the full effects of any excess inequitable and uneconomic and are without parallel in the legislative experience of European belligerent countries.

Our excess profits tax directly discourages soundly capitalized and well-managed enterprises, reduces the market value of their stocks, places a heavy premium on watering of stock and overcapitalization, acts as a deterrent on commerce and industry, and weakens and lessens the powers of the people to invest in the bonds of their own Government. For these reasons there should not only be no attempt at further legislation of this kind but the present excess profits tax law should be immediately repealed.

Instead of an excess tax on all corporate profits over an arbitrary fixed percentage, the injustice and unfairness of which have been shown in the foregoing, there should be levied—

A flat and equitable war tax of from 3 per cent upon the net profits of all corporations and partnerships, in addition to the normal tax, whatever that may be. This tax should be high enough to raise the revenue expected from this source, but the tax rate should not be graded; that is, the rate should not increase as the profits in relation to the capital invested grow larger. In this way a corporation or partnership which has large earnings will pay a proportionately larger sum than a concern with the same capital but smaller earnings, but the former will only pay in direct proportion to its earnings and not in ascending arithmetical progression. There would be no surtax with a penalization of efficiency and honest capitalization. On the other hand, the normal tax itself, applicable to business and to individuals, may be increased as far as advisable, and so may the surtax on the higher incomes of individuals.

The following is an illustration showing how honest capitalization suffers from an excess profits tax, while watered-stock corporations escape:

Actual cash investment	$1,000,000	$1,000,000
Water or "good will"	None.	2,000,000
Capitalization	1,000,000	3,000,000
Net profit:
20 per cent	200,000
6⅔ per cent		200,000
Taxed 8 per cent on	120,000	Nothing.
Yield to Government	9,600	Nothing.
Yield to Government of 3 per cent tax on all profits	6,000	6,000
Total yield of method unfair to enterprise		9,600
Total yield of method fair to enterprise		12,000

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MILTON A. ROMJUE,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, in the solution of any question it is always advisable to at least get some survey of the fundamental question, the basic proposition before us.

What is before us now?

A motion! What motion? A motion to recommit the conference report. If I recall my dates correctly, it is now just exactly two weeks since the House passed the bill providing for an army. At the same time, or a day before, the Senate passed a similar bill. There being some variance between these bills—among other matters the age limit of soldiers—the two bills went before the conference committee, composed of Members of both the House and Senate, with the customary directions to smooth out the points of difference, and report back for final adoption of a bill uniform in the House and Senate.

That conference committee, after a lapse of two weeks, reports back the bill with an agreement to recommend its passage. This bill is an important one; many of its features are of great magnitude. Our Nation is in a crisis. We should move as rapidly as possible with legislation, being cautious to be right and accurate.

The items in the bill have been thrashed out in Congress and approved in conference, with minor alterations, except the Roosevelt feature. If this motion to recommit carries, it means that the whole bill is held up. The wheels of war will be stopped, perhaps for several days. If the motion to recommit is defeated, it means the war policy, or Army program, is fixed and certain. Now, shall we block the whole bill to confer over the Roosevelt feature? I think we should not.

Let us vote down the motion to recommit the whole bill, thus letting it become an operative law, and then the War Department can go to work in the organization and mobilization of Uncle Sam's forces. Several days ago, when the matter of whether Roosevelt should go to France with troops was considered, I voted to let him go. We were defeated on that. He is a man of full age and supposed to be mature. I am still in favor of him being permitted to go with his troops, and will so vote if the matter is brought up before the House as a separate matter, without tying up this Army bill now before us; and it can be done to-morrow, if you desire, but I do believe we should not let that feature tie this whole bill up, perhaps for another week or 10 days.

I do not like dilatory tactics in legislation; I do not like back tracking on any legislative program. We can not always do just what we want to do. Let us do the best we can for our country and move the program along, and whatever we are to do, let us do it.

As I said before, to vote to recommit this bill means delay in our Government's progress. I shall vote against recommittal of the bill. This will mean, of course, to accept the report of the conferees and prevent the tying up of the legislative program.

Then independent of and without interfering with this bill, the question of Mr. Roosevelt or anyone else who wants to go to France may be taken up to-morrow or any other date, and when it does come up I will vote for it.

The Revenue Bill—Who Will Pay the Bills and Who Will Get the Money—Pay Day Is Coming and Tax Dodgers Are Beginning to Squeal—Shall the Little Fellow Pay the Bills and Fight the Battles?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 15, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago Congress, amidst the cheers and plaudits of floor and gallery, passed a $7,000,000,000 bond-issue bill. In big headlines the newspapers celebrated the merry performance, fought the war to a finish, and gloried in the optimistic view that we were going to keep all the money in this country. The stockjobbers, munition mongers, food speculators, and all the rest of the precious gang that thrive on trouble and get rich on misery fell over each other in a wild scramble to get first whack at the pot, and a general belief seemed to prevail amongst a lot of people that this country could perform an old and impossible stunt, and that is to "eat your cake and have it."

Now, we are up against the revenue bill—a gentle reminder that there is a pay day coming, and that even if you dance the dance of death there is always a fiddler to pay. And, oh, what a change has come over the spirit of the dream! Every Representative, every Senator is receiving letters and telegrams by the score, all singing the same sad song, all ending with the same plaintive refrain, "Don't tax me."

The newspapers and periodicals, who have clamored the loudest, are tearfully protesting against a raise in postage. The manufacturers of every sort and kind, who all had their eyes on at least a part of that seven billion, are vociferating against a tax on excess profits. The hotels of Washington, the lobbies of the Capitol, the corridors of the House and Senate Office Buildings are crowded with the attorneys of the big interests, each with a voluminous brief explaining why the interest he represents should be allowed to dodge his share of the burden.

In the meantime the little fellow, the mechanic, the small dealer, the farmer, the tradesman is not saying very much. He can not afford to hire a lawyer to lobby for him. The price of a telegram is the price of a few handfuls of potatoes, and his kiddies are hungry, and he is too busy just now to write letters. He is too busy trying to figure out how he is going to live during the next few years. He knows too well that everything he and his family needs from the shoes on his baby's feet to the cheap overcoat he wears himself is to be taxed. He knows that every morsel he eats, every drop he drinks, the fuel he burns, the life insurance his family gets when he is lying dead, all must pay a goodly share. And there is no way that the little fellow has of practicing the gentle art of "passing the buck."

When the tax collector goes after the Standard Oil crowd all they have to do is raise the price of oil. When the stock jobbers are hit they entice a few more lambs into the stock exchange and get enough fleece from their innocent backs to foot the bill. If the steel magnates can not get theirs any other way they get an extra appropriation through Congress for something that has an extra profit in it, and when it comes to the final analysis of this or any other revenue bill, it will always be found that the little fellow pays his full share and a little more, and the big fellow pays a small part of his share and a lot less.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to show concisely how the little fellow has to pay and what he gets to pay it with, I will insert here some figures on the increased cost of living:

War conditions and war prices have already placed the average American in a financial position where he can not decently be asked to pay for the war.

The "New York Times Annalist," of April 23, 1917, publishes a table showing "index numbers" of the increase in the cost of living in the last two years. It explains the table as follows: "'The Annalist' index number shows the fluctuations in the average wholesale price of 25 food commodities selected and arranged to represent a theoretical family's food budget." Here are the figures:

For April 24, 1915, index number is 154.
For April 22, 1916, index number is 166.
For April 21, 1917, index number is 270.

In other words, the 25 most common and necessary articles of family use have almost doubled in price in the last two years.

Dun's index figures show similar price increases, as follows:

Between April 1, 1914, and April 1, 1917, dairy and garden products increased 84 per cent, meat 46 per cent, clothing 49 per cent, metals 69 per cent, and foodstuffs 105 per cent.

A few days ago the Old Dutch Market (Inc.), of Washington, D. C., which operates a large string of stores, selling meats, canned goods, eggs, vegetables, etc., published a comparison of prices in April, 1914, and April, 1917. It deals in all with 60 table necessaries. The average increase on all items listed is 85.32 per cent during that period.

As a corollary to this we have the report issued on April 26 of the food committee, appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. "Interesting figures were obtained," says the committee, "from the proprietors of some of the smaller stores, whose business is with the poorer people. They show clearly that the poor have been compelled to resort to the strictest economy in order to provide food on account of high prices. Their purchases are of the cheapest possible articles and in smaller quantities than heretofore. The sale of ordinary cuts of meat in this class of stores seems to have been discontinued and the meat now purchased consists of hog livers, hog kidneys, neck bones, hog faces, etc."

Following the food riots in New York Miss Helen M. Todd was appointed to make an investigation of the effect on school children of the high cost of food. She reported last week that in the poorer districts diet has been so cut down that the children's scholarship has suffered materially through malnutrition, and that public-school teachers complain that the children are unable to maintain their grades.

The Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics for April, 1917, tells the same story. In the four years from February 15, 1913, to February 15, 1917, flour increased in price 69 per cent, eggs 61 per cent, potatoes 224 per cent. A 16-ounce loaf of bread cost on February 15, 1914, $0.055; on February 15, 1915, $0.063; on February 15, 1916, $0.062; and on February 15, 1917, $0.071. Bread to-day is 10 cents a loaf. As this goes to press wheat is $3 a bushel in the western markets.

As to coal the Black Diamond Magazine and the Coal Trade Journal show that the average retail price of anthracite range coal in New York was $5 a ton in January, 1915, and $8.75 a ton in January, 1917. Soft coal at the mines was from 80 cents to $1.65 a ton in December, 1914, and from $4.75 to $6.50 a ton in January, 1917; this in the face of yearly increasing output.

Now, let us see what the wage earner gets to pay this staggering burden. I quote herewith an analysis published by the American Committee on War Finance of New York City:

WAGES.

The increase in wages and incomes has been insignificant in comparison to the enormous rise in prices. Undoubtedly wages have advanced sharply since the war began. In some industries they have risen in a spectacular manner, yet the average wage increase since 1912 has been small, even in union labor, when compared with the rise in the prices in necessaries of life. The index figures published in the April Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics show that in the large field of union labor there has been a rise of only 9 points from 1912 to 1916, inclusive. Index figures for 1917 are not yet available; but even if we were to assume that wages have risen as much in the first four months of 1917 as they rose in the whole period from 1912 to 1916, which would be a quite extravagant estimate, we should only have a rise of 18 per cent from 1912 to 1917, while according to Dun certain particularly important food products and necessaries have risen from 46 per cent to 105 per cent in the last three years, and according to the Times Annalist the cost of the food budget of the average American family has gone up 74 per cent in the last two years.

Keeping in mind these figures, we can not but accept the unwelcome fact that the average American has not in reality shared in the prosperity of the country during the war period. On the contrary, he has lost ground in the economic struggle, in spite of the Nation's advancing aggregate wealth. Wages and incomes have no doubt increased, but there has been at the same time such an inflation in the price of things people must buy in order to live that the average citizen's purchasing power has been steadily diminished. He has been handed more in his pay envelope; he has received a larger salary check, and made better earnings from his farm or his business, but in turning the money he has made into food, fuel, rent, household furnishings, etc., he has found that it does not go so far as in times when wages and earnings were much smaller.

You must always remember, too, that this very class is the one that will bear the brunt of the actual fighting that is to be done. A handful of sporty millionaires may possibly join some well-advertised expeditionary force that will take along a good staff of reporters and a motion-picture outfit, but the real, grim, and bitter fighting will be done by the sons of farmers and mechanics, as it always has been done, and it is they and their families who will have to make the supreme sacrifices that war entails, and I submit that they should not have to pay the bills as well. I will insert here an excerpt from a speech of mine on April 5, 1917, and also a resolution I introduced as soon as this session convened:

The poor man's wife will bear men children, work in a factory to support them, and then give them to the money junkers to send to slaughter while she keeps on working in the factory to pay the bills.

In the name of the common people of America, I enter my solemn protest. In the name of the mothers of fighting men, I insist that the men who call the tune shall pay for the music. I have introduced a resolution which I shall append to my remarks, and if we are to assume the debts of bankrupt nations let those who profit by the malodorous transaction foot the bill. If you are going to conscript the young manhood of America to fight in the trenches beside the minions of foreign kings, then let us conscript the ill-gotten wealth of the war-breeding gunmen of finance and save at least our children and children's children from a burden they do not deserve to bear.

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 37) to prevent the possibility of private profit being made out of war.

Resolved, etc., That the following measures be taken to prevent the possibility of private profit being made out of war:

First. A graduated income tax levied by Congress upon all annual incomes above $5,000, which shall amount to conscription of all incomes in excess of $100,000 a year.

Second. Immediate conscription by the Government of all railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and their operation by the Government for public service without private profit.

Third. Immediate conscription by the Government of all natural resources, including mines and oil wells, and their operation under the Bureau of Mines without profit.

Fourth. The Government shall deal with the workers in any conscripted industry through the organizations formed by the workers, with due safeguards for the rights of unorganized workers. This will protect both the Government and the workers.

Fifth. Immediate conscription and operation by the Government of all food-storage warehouses for the service of the American people, and the passing of a law making speculation in food supplies an act of treason under the Articles of War.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in making class distinctions nor in appealing to what is called class prejudice, but facts are stubborn things and mathematics is an exact science, and while I have always believed and hoped that in this great country of ours there were neither classes nor masses, but just one people, you can not go on making one set of human beings carry heavy burdens while others ride at ease without eventually creating that most deplorable state of mind known as "class consciousness," the rock on which every republic known to history has gone to wreck.

Now, I have stated briefly above how the little fellow has had to carry, and will continue to carry, the heaviest burdens of this unfortunate war, and I will now show how the class my resolution proposed to tax are faring in the great ledger of human life in America as it is written to-day. To show where a good slice of that seven billion we voted for will go I will insert the following estimate:

APRIL 4, 1917.

The following estimate was arrived at from figures given in the Financial Chronicle and from statements recently made by Mr. L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware & Hudson Co., and by the National City Bank of New York.

Debts which must have been contracted by Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates in order to finance the purchases of their European customers since the beginning of the war:

Visible merchandise balance in favor of the United States from July 1, 1914, until Feb. 28, 1917		$5,700,000,000
Paid for by—
Net gold imports	$950,000,000
Repurchase of American securities held abroad	1,550,000,000
Buying of foreign issues	2,400,000,000
Leaving still to be settled		800,000,000

three-fourths of which about represent the unpaid-for balance of the war business handled through Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates, necessitating private debts of $600,000,000, which the American people are now being asked to assume. In addition, there may be in the hands of Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates considerable amounts of unplaced foreign loans—possibly more than $400,000,000—forcing on them the contraction of still further debts, which it is also now proposed to liquidate with the money of the people.

Should not those who contracted these huge debts—$1,000,000,000 or more—carry their burden rather than the small taxpayer?

To show further where most of the lopsided prosperity of the last few years has drifted, let me quote some interesting figures which indicate the truth and explain the conditions which account for the fact reported by Prof. King, of the University of Wisconsin—that 2 per cent of the people of the United States own 65 per cent of the entire wealth of the Nation:

[1] Deficit. [2] 19 months. [3] 15 months.

Taking 24 of the principal companies listed above and comparing their earnings in 1914 and 1916, we find in these two years an increase of 500 per cent; and these increases may be expected to continue. For instance, the Steel Corporation's last quarter's earnings, just published, would indicate that; for, if the percentage is maintained for the whole year, the net sum applicable to dividends for 1917 should be about $450,000,000

Comparing the increased earnings and the increased stock values of two of these corporations, we get a still more concrete idea of the increased wealth which offers the country a ready source of war taxation:

UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

Net earnings, 1914	$23,495,768
Net earnings, 1916	271,531,730
Increase	248,034,962
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1914	682,648,282
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1916	961,181,378
Increase	278,533,096

BETHLEHEM STEEL CORPORATION.

Net earnings, 1914	5,590,020
Net earnings, 1916	43,593,968
Increase	38,003,948
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1914	17,536,690
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1916	106,112,130
Increase	88,575,440

RAILROADS.

Shareholders of railroads have also improved their position as investors since the war began.

In 1913 the net operating revenue ran approximately from $275 a mile in January to $300 a mile in December. In 1916 the net operating revenue ran, approximately, from $337 a mile in January to $550 in October.

The net revenue for railroads earning over a million dollars annually for the six months ending January 1, 1917, was practically $700,000,000, which is the largest profit in the history of American railroading.

We must, furthermore, remember that millions upon millions of the wealth quoted above was earned and the foundations of too many of these fortunes laid on transactions with the United States Government that were often malodorous and in nearly every case so close to out-and-out graft that it required all the powerful political whitewash and deodorizer that privileged wealth can buy to cover the deals up and a conscription of much of this wealth would only really mean the recovery of goods illegally obtained from Uncle Sam. How much money we might have saved in the past, how much better we might be off to-day, no one can figure, but I will quote here from a speech I delivered on December 16, 1915:

Every patriotic American believes to a certain extent in "preparedness." The people will undoubtedly be willing to spend a great deal of money to provide adequate defense, but, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am entirely safe in asserting that they will rise in righteous wrath if the hard-earned money of the toilers of this country which they will be asked to place at the disposal of the National Government shall continue to be used to fatten the swollen fortunes of the Steel Trust, the Armor-plate Trust, or the Powder Trust, while the Army and Navy are neglected, mismanaged, or, what is worse, still controlled and ruled by bureaucrats who are either hidebound to old and obsolete methods or wedded to a very suspicious alliance with the moneyed corporations that control the supplies which the defensive forces of the country most need.

That this is neither idle rumor or sensational accusation has been abundantly proved by the actions of the departments of our Government in charge of defense.

That inventors have been rebuffed, discouraged, and disheartened by the bureaucrats is so well known that it is almost unnecessary to mention the specific cases, and that some of the most obnoxious trusts in this country have profited hugely by the complaisance of naval and military boards is beyond question.

During the Sixty-third Congress I introduced a bill and two resolutions, which I will insert here, and I can assure you that if the witnesses who would have testified could have been properly protected and given some reward as an incentive to testify there would be enough cash on hand to-day in the Treasury to make the imposition of this tax entirely unnecessary.

A bill (H. R. 7601) authorizing the Navy Department to offer and pay rewards for the detection of violations of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to offer and pay rewards to the person or persons who shall first furnish to the Government of the United States information which shall lead to the detection of violations of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, in cases where such violations shall injuriously affect the Navy Department or any business connected with the national defense, or in cases where the Government has been defrauded in the character, quality, or price of the material furnished, and where, as a result of information or evidence so furnished, the Government succeeds in recovering money or property as fines, forfeitures, or otherwise, the reward shall be 20 per cent of the amount so recovered.

House resolution 506.

Whereas certain chiefs of the Bureau of Ordnance have made misleading reports to their superiors and to Congress; and

Whereas Chiefs of Ordnance have attempted to deceive Congress on the effect of high explosives; and

Whereas our Navy and coast defenses are being constructed as recommended by officers who are disloyal to their official oath; and

Whereas the Armor Trust is being favored by some misleading reports: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a committee of nine Members of the House, of which number five shall be of the majority and four of the minority. Said committee is hereby directed to make an investigation of the subject matter embraced, misleading Congress by false reports. Said committee is also directed to investigate if there has been a conspiracy between the United States officers and the armor manufacturers or other persons in defrauding the country or the Government.

Said committee is authorized to sit during sessions of Congress and recess of Congress, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to employ such clerical and other assistance as may be necessary, and to administer oaths to witnesses. The cost and expenses of said committee shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Said expenses shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said committee.

House resolution 544.

Whereas the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, has stated in testimony before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and in an official letter to the Senate that there exists a combination and conspiracy of armor manufacturers who are "holding up" the Government of the United States and forcing the Navy Department, by a monopoly combination, to pay extortionate prices which amount to a robbery of the Government of several million dollars each year: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby requested to inform this House what steps, if any, he has taken to have his colleague, the Attorney General, take action for the prosecution of this monopoly combine of armor manufacturers; and

Resolved further, That the Attorney General is hereby requested to inform this House what steps he has taken to prosecute civilly and criminally this Armor Trust above mentioned.

Why does the Secretary of the Navy submit to having the United States Government held up and robbed of millions of dollars by the Armor Trust every year when he has it in his power to take steps to put a stop to it at once? Everyone knows—and no one knows better than the Secretary of the Navy himself—that if he were to write one short letter to Congress asking for the passage of the bill to protect witnesses and pay rewards for convicting evidence of the frauds and robberies perpetrated on the Government by the Armor Trust which I introduced on August 22, 1913, that Congress would pass the bill at once, and the evidence would be produced and the robbery of the Government by the Armor Trust would be stopped for all future time, and millions of dollars of the money already stolen would be recovered from Carnegie and his Armor Trust crew and put back into the Public Treasury.

Neither the Secretary of the Navy nor the Attorney General of the United States have vouchsafed a reply to my House resolution No. 544. Why not? I will be able to answer the question if they give me the power asked for in my other resolution, No. 506, and if they pass my House bill 7601—all of which I have herein quoted—I will show by sworn testimony that a bureaucratic oligarchy corruptly controls these matters, and that if the Government collected the fines, penalties, and forfeitures from the armor plate and other criminal trusts they would not face the necessity of this tax, but would have millions to spare after paying the expenses of the Government.

Of course, nothing was ever done and I do not suppose anything ever will be done. We pass absurdly large appropriation bills, we then pass absurd and iniquitous revenue bills and apparently neither care where the money comes from or where it goes. A large part of the money we expect to raise by this bill will go for naval appropriations, and if it is to be spent the way it always has been spent it will take an enormous amount to put through any kind of an adequate naval program. Let me quote here from a speech of mine on the naval appropriation bill on June 2, 1916:

If we had received anything like an adequate return for money expended in naval construction during the last decade our Navy would be twice the size it is. Just let us examine the figures of the four great nations of the earth for a period of the last 12 years for naval construction:

Great Britain	$1,999,209,088
United States	1,331,721,206
Germany	354,053,078

We have spent in that time over $200,000,000 more than France and Germany combined. Does anybody in this House believe that our Navy is stronger than the navies of France and Germany combined or even as strong? Once more that old, old, sickening question arises, that never will down, "Where did the money go?"

If we could not guard expenditure better in times of peace, is it probable that a close watch will be kept in these days of critical emergency? I doubt it very much.

I think it very apparent therefore that a good share of these war expenditures should be paid by those who can best afford it, and it is gratifying indeed to see that a number of rich men have declared in favor of this proposition.

Along this line Mr. E. W. Scripps, the millionaire newspaper owner, of California, said in a memorandum which he sent to the Ways and Means Committee:

From the source which none of us have yet even dreamed—that of the infliction of a great war—we may draw the greatest reform and the greatest blessings to our people. * * *

Some of us have very large incomes, and we are prompted, and even by the opinions of society compelled, to indulge in great extravagances. We employ servants who produce nothing for the common good and only minister to our vices. We purchase costly and showy clothing, houses, food, furniture, automobiles, jewelry, etc., the production of which has taken the labor of many hundreds of thousands of men and women, who, if they were not so employed would be producing other commodities in such quantity as to cheapen them and make them more accessible to the poor.

An enormously high rate of income tax would have the effect of diverting all this labor that is given to practically useless things into other channels, where production would be useful to the whole people. * * *

In the case of the Government of the United States the income is so enormous that out of it could be paid double the amount that the war is costing England annually; and, except for the disturbances and readjustment, the people of the country would suffer not at all, while they would be greatly benefited by the discipline and the necessity of thinking hard and perhaps working harder.

Those who will have to pay this proposed supertax will not have to suffer much. A man with an income of $100,000 can still worry along quite comfortably, and what they may have to abstain from will in all probability be good for their health in this world and improve their chances of salvation in the world to come.

Let us therefore adopt some such plan as this and make equality real and enduring in this country. Let each do his bit cheerfully and patriotically and let us prove that we are in very truth fighting for equal rights and equal privileges to all men. I append herewith an estimate of the revenue that could be secured by this measure:

Estimated yield of the income tax rates suggested by the American Committee on War Finance, on basis of incomes reported in 1915.

Classifications of incomes.	Number of returns.	Mean gross aggregate taxable incomes.	Rate on whole income above $3,000.	Revenue.
			Per cent.
$3,000 to $5,000	127,994	$505,928,100	2	$4,458,920
$5,000 to $10,000	120,402	903,015,000	4½	24,382,400
$10,000 to $15,000	34,102	426,275,000	7	22,677,830
$15,000 to $20,000	16,475	288,312,500	10	23,888,750
$20,000 to $25,000	9,707	218,407,500	15	28,392,975
$25,000 to $30,000	6,193	193,193,000	20	34,320,400
$30,000 to $40,000	7,005	245,175,000	25	56,040,000
$40,000 to $50,000	4,100	184,500,000	30	51,660,000
$50,000 to $75,000	4,791	299,337,500	40	113,985,800
$75,000 to $100,000	2,053	179,900,000	50	86,866,000
	332,823			446,673,075
Total over $100,000	3,824 net taxable income, all over $100,000, $1,193,650,000			721,250,000
Grand total revenue				1,167,923,075

The number of persons receiving a net taxable income of $2,000 to $3,000 can only be estimated, but it is safe to put it at 200,000. Assuming an average income of $2,500, the income taxable at 2 per cent is $100,000,000, but the total yield would be only $2,000,000.

If the number of persons receiving incomes of $100,000 and over increased from 1915 to 1916 as much as from 1914 to 1915, the taking of all incomes over $100,000 would yield three or four hundred millions more than the above-estimated yield.

From 1914 to 1915 the number of persons who reported receiving a net taxable income of over $1,000,000 increased from 60 to 120, those reporting from $500,000 to $1,000,000 from 114 to 209, while the number reporting net taxable incomes over $100,000 increased from 2,348 to 3,824.

It is safe to estimate that the rates advocated will yield at least $1,500,000,000 next year, possibly $1,600,000,000.

Communication in Regard to Farm Labor and Fertilizers, Also Resolutions Relating to Food Prices.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ALBERT F. POLK,
OF DELAWARE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 16, 1917.

Mr. POLK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by having printed therein a communication received from a committee appointed by a meeting of the citizens of Sussex County, Del., relative to farm labor and supply of fertilizers; also communication relating to farm labor; also resolutions of Peach Blossom Grange, of Middletown, Del., relating to control of food prices.

The communications are as follows:

SEAFORD, DEL., May 12, 1917.

Hon. ALBERT F. POLK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a citizens' meeting held here on Friday, May 11, 1917, to consider food conservation and methods of increasing the food supply, it was brought out that one of the embarrassments to be encountered by the farmers is the difficulty in procuring fertilizer. It was further stated that the fertilizer men are complaining that so many boats have been taken over for war purposes, it is very difficult to secure boats for the transportation of raw material. A committee was appointed with instructions to lay these matters before you, as our Representative in Congress, with the request that you take the matter up with the proper department and, if possible, secure such concessions as will enable the farmers to obtain fertilizer at a reasonable cost, as our success in crop production depends very largely upon our securing fertilizer at a moderate cost.

The committee was also requested to call your attention to the urgent need of labor by the farmers and to ask if it is not possible to have such steps taken as will procure the postponement of extensive improvements of any nature not likely to be completed at an early day until after the close of the war or at least to provide for the suspension of such operations during the period when labor is most needed on the farms, in order that laborers may not be attracted from the farms by the flattering offer of possibly greater compensation to be paid by the corporations making the improvements.

If, by working in conjunction with the other Members of Congress from Delaware, you shall be able to provide for such action on the part of the proper authorities as will enable the farmers of our little State to successfully meet the difficulties herein referred to, we feel that you will thereby confer a great favor and a lasting benefit not only upon the farmers in question but also upon the thousands that will thereby be the better provided with life's necessities.

Very respectfully submitted.

THOS. M. RAWLINS,
B. L. ROSS,
EDWARD B. BROWN,
Committee.

At a recent meeting of farmers held in Sussex County to consider the question of growing more food in the present crisis, it developed that the large manufacturers from the northern part of the State and possibly from other States had their agents working among the farm labor of Sussex County trying to induce the labor to leave the farm, where they are so badly needed at this time, and accept work in the factories. After due consideration the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this gathering that it is working a great hardship on the farmers in their efforts to grow more food during the existing food shortage to have agents from the manufacturing plants using every means to induce their labor to leave the farm, and that it should be regarded as a misdemeanor, punishable by law, to have such agents disturbing the labor on the farm, which is very short at this time.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our two Senators and Representative with the request that they use their influence to enact a law that will prevent the manufacturers from taking farm labor during the continuance of the war."

HENRY A. HOUSTON,
Ex-Member House of Representatives.
I. L. LONG,
State Senator.
H. HAYWARD,
Dean of Department of Agriculture, Delaware College.

Whereas there is a bill before Congress in reference to fixing the price of food products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Peach Blossom Grange, No. 3, Patrons of Husbandry, of Middletown, Del., goes on record as disapproving this bill unless there be inserted in this bill a similar provision for fixing the prices on manufactured products; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to our two United States Senators and Representative in Congress.

H. B. MCDOWELL, Master.
J. FLETCHER DEAKYNE,
Secretary.

"The Call to Arms."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. M. M. NEELY,
OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 16, 1917.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

[Dedicated to President Woodrow Wilson.]

THE CALL TO ARMS.

(The Marseillaise of America.)

[Words by Emma Hamilton Bulloch.]

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
With thy starry flag unfurled
And thy shield of honor stainless,
Give this message to the world.
Lofty principles of justice,
Peace and freedom for mankind,
Do not mean a craven spirit,
As all traitors soon will find.

CHORUS.

Here we pledge to thee, our President,
Our unswerving loyalty;
We will give allegiance only
To our God, our flag, and thee.

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
For the cause of liberty;
Hold the torch of justice heav'nward
Till it flashes o'er the sea
And proclaims to all the nations
That on this they can depend.
We love peace, but not dishonor,
And the right we will defend.

To arms, to arms, beloved country,
With thy armor shining bright
And thy sword unsheathed and ready
To strike boldly for the right.
We love all mankind as brothers,
But 'tis best they understand
On the shores of this fair country
Hostile fleet must never land.

To arms, to arms, beloved country;
Duty calls, we must obey;
Freedom of the world imperiled
By a despot's iron sway
We must help to crush forever
Greed and tyranny and hate;
Love and liberty must triumph.
Strike, it is the hour of fate!

Increase of the Military Establishment—"Do Something, and Do It Now."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
OF NEW JERSEY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917,

On the conference report on H. R. 3545, to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States, and upon a motion to recommit said bill with instructions to agree to the Senate amendment authorizing the President to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment and to organize and equip not to exceed four Infantry divisions.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey, under leave of the House, submits the following extension of remarks:

Mr. Speaker, I oppose any delay in the confirmation of this conference report and the passage of this bill. I protest against this delay.

It is time that we were filling up the ranks of the Regular Army and National Guard, in which recruits can be promptly trained under officers and with the aid of comrades who have had experience and who can give them speedy schooling as soldiers, so that they can be sent promptly to the battle lines of Europe which are the present lines of our national defense and the only final school of modern warfare. I hope that hundreds of thousands of men will be sent as soon as possible from these our organized forces, and that their recruiting will be aided by the appointment of our gallant ex-President to high command.

This recruiting and expedition of organized forces should not be hindered or delayed pending the organization of new divisions of raw volunteers who will have to perfect an organization that the Army and the guard already possess, and will draw away the patriotic men who ought to fill up our Army and National Guard.

The United States declared war early in April, over a month ago, and we still delay the passage of a bill to increase our Military Establishment and enable us to send men to France in the defense of our people against a power that is seeking to subjugate the world.

A correspondent writes me:

Keep up the fight to send men to France at once. If we are in this thing in earnest, we must admit that men must be sent. A division of 30,000 men requires shipping tonnage of 240,000 tons, and such a fleet has to be escorted, goes slowly, and will take a month for a round trip; thus it will take us 10 months to get 300,000 men to the other side.

While a force is being concentrated over there, those that go first will have an opportunity for training under the best conditions.

Shall we not face facts? This is as plain as the nose on your face. While we are sending forces over, a disaster or a tremendous loss of men to the allies may make the men that we shall have sent, even though it be only five months from now, a priceless stop-gap. Are we to wait until the allies are "licked" before we send men to France? The French and English say they are losing at the rate of 10 per cent a month. That looks almost like a 50 per cent reduction in 10 months. The French have used up their last reserves. It is not only cold-blooded folly but cold-blooded cruelty we are indulging in.

The allies have the artillery and we have the men. It is easy to combine the two.

War does not wait. Victory does not smile on laggards. Success is not achieved by councils of war that never fight.

Men must be got and trained and sent. This bill provides for doing so. It may not be perfect in detail; details can be perfected hereafter. We should have started the new and greater army over a month ago.

An old farmer, when asked to address a school, said only, "Children, do something. Do good if you can, but do something, and do it now."

Resolutions Adopted by the Slavic-American Patriotic League of the Mahoning Valley, of Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN G. COOPER,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 16, 1917.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks I desire to include a resolution adopted at a patriotic mass meeting of the Slavic-American Patriotic League of the Mahoning Valley, of Ohio. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas we Slavs of the Mahoning Valley fully appreciate the liberties and the privileges enjoyed by us in these United States of America; and

Whereas we Slaves of the Mahoning Valley fully approve and indorse the decision of these United States of America to war not only for humanity and civilization but also for the liberation of the smaller European States from tyranny, despotism, and oppression, which instills our hearts with the new hope that at last our long-cherished dreams and aspirations, the national independence of the subjugated and downtrodden Slavic nations will again become a reality; and

Whereas in this hour of great national crisis we Slavs of the Mahoning Valley believe it the duty of each any every one of us to bear his full burden in upholding and supporting the President of the United States and the National Government in the step they have taken: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Slavs of the Mahoning Valley, numbering over 25,000 souls, That we pledge our continued and unconditional support of the President and the Congress of this Nation in their determination to protect its honor and its ideals of right and humanity; and to this great and holy cause we dedicate our lives and our fortunes; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and to the House of Representatives and to the Senate of the United States of America.

JNO. A. WILLO, Chairman.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 16, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include amendments to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes.

The amendments are as follows:

Page 3, line 13: Fifty per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $200,000.

Page 3, line 16: Sixty per cent per annum upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $300,000.

Page 3, line 19: Seventy-five per cent upon the amount by which the total net income exceeds $300,000.

Page 6, line 16: Strike out "8 per cent" and insert "24 per cent."

This increases the excess profits tax.

Page 25, line 25: Strike out the word "five" and insert the word "one."

This reduces the sales tax from 5 to 1 per cent.

This takes off the excess charge upon first-class mail matter.

Joseph Hodges Choate, Lawyer, Diplomat, Patriot, and Statesman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ISAAC SIEGEL,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 15, 1917.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, within 72 hours after Joseph H. Choate had remarked, "You younger men will have to take our places; this is my last day," he suddenly passed away in New York City, the scene of his greatest legal triumphs, at peace with the world and with the knowledge that he had rendered extraordinary services in a most thorough manner to his country.

Although in the midst of war, it is fitting and proper that there should be recorded for all time the story of his services to our Republic in order that the rising and future generations may thereby receive encouragement to do likewise.

The New York Times prints to-day a short biography of his life and the many tributes that America's greatest citizens have paid to him. I therefore insert the same at length, as follows:

TO PAY HIGH HONORS AT CHOATE FUNERAL—SERVICES WILL BE HELD AT ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S CHURCH TO-MORROW MORNING—ENVOYS SEND MESSAGES—BALFOUR DEEPLY MOVED BY DEATH OF "OLD FRIEND"—VIVIANI SAYS FRANCE FEELS LOSS.

The funeral of Joseph H. Choate, the circumstances of whose death late Monday night were told in the later editions of the New York Times yesterday, will be held at 9.30 o'clock to-morrow morning from St. Bartholomew's Church, Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, with the rector, the Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks, officiating. The list of pallbearers and other details of the funeral were not announced last night, but a great attendance of prominent men is expected. The burial will be at Stockbridge, Mass., Mr. Choate's summer home, and the services at that place will be conducted by the Rev. Dr. George Merrill.

Mr. Choate's death, according to Dr. William K. Draper, was due to heart trouble, induced by his great exertions last week. The last appearance of Mr. Choate in public was at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Sunday, less than 36 hours before his death. His last social function was a dinner which he gave Saturday night, at which there was much table talk by the host, Arthur J. Balfour, Nicholas Murray Butler, and Henri Bergson on the immortality of the soul.

Mrs. Choate had recovered somewhat yesterday from the first effects of the shock caused by her husband's death, and with her daughter, Mabel, and her sons, George and Joseph, jr., was able to receive a great number of messages of condolence that poured in all day.

Mr. Balfour, in addition to an official message from the British commission, sent the following personal telegram:

"Am most deeply moved by tragic news of my old friend's sudden death and greatly fear it was hastened by last week's splendid efforts for your country and for mine. Please accept heartfelt sympathy for you and yours."

The official message of the British delegates, signed by Ian Malcolm, Mr. Balfour's parliamentary secretary, read:

"Members of British commission desire to express deepest sympathy with you and yours. They will always cherish memories of the eloquence and kindly welcome given them by Mr. Choate on the occasion of the international visit to New York."

M. Viviani sent the condolences of the French commission, as follows:

"In the name of Marshal Joffre, Admiral Chocheprat, and the entire French mission, allow me to convey our deep condolences for the terrible loss you have just sustained, which also strikes France. We bow in deep regret before your grief."

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, wired:

"Deepest sympathy in your great sorrow. We all mourn the loss of our country's best of friends and can never forget his noble words in championing the allied cause."

Governor Whitman telegraphed:

"Please accept my most personal and heartfelt sympathy in the infinite sorrow which has come to you and to the Nation which loved and respected him."

Commander Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, sent this message:

"My tender and loving sympathy is extended to you in this hour of your great bereavement in the passing away of your husband. Our country loses one of its foremost citizens, greatest patriots, brightest intellects, and noblest characters. One thousand Salvation Army officers assembled in congress in Philadelphia, representing all the Eastern States, have requested me to convey a message of condolence to yourself and family. The grace of God, upon which your illustrious husband lifted the great temple of his life's work, will not fail you. But in this hour, while the shadows fall, your way shall be full of light."

The following was sent by representatives of the Russian Zenesky Union:

"All the Russians who have had the honor and privilege of meeting your late husband, and all of them who knew him by his great name, beg leave to express their heartfelt sympathy and their deep sorrow for the irreparable loss of the great statesman."

Among the callers at the house were George L. Ingraham, Gen. Daniel Appleton, the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning, F. K. Sturgis, R. A. C. Smith, William D. Guthrie, Austin Fox, and George T. Wilson.

Flags were at half-mast on the city hall and other public buildings yesterday, on the great museums of the city, many banks, business houses, hotels, and apartment buildings. Courts took recess while judges praised the dead advocate and lawyers honored the man who had been regarded as the leader of their profession in the city and the Nation. The boards of educational, historical, patriotic, and civic organizations met to adopt resolutions on the death of a man who for many years had been their constant aid and supporter.

Hundreds of thousands of Mr. Choate's fellow citizens had seen him during the receptions last week when he acted as chairman of the mayor's committee to welcome the British and French war commissions. Many had heard him speak with the fire and enthusiasm of youth in the city hall at the merchants' association luncheon, at the chamber of commerce luncheon, and the mayor's dinner. Some had seen him at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine with Mr. Balfour on Sunday, and others knew that he was preparing to address the students of Columbia University yesterday afternoon. He had ignored his years for so long that the fact that he was really dead seemed impossible of realization.

To his friends and to those associated with him in his public activities there was the consoling reflection that, as the exertions of the last week had brought on the final illness which carried him so unexpectedly on Monday night, he had in effect died in the service. He had worn himself out in the cause that perhaps lay nearest to his heart—the bringing about of a closer harmony among the British, French, and American democracies in the struggle against the German power.

Some of those who heard his speech at the Union League Club in the last week of March, while it was still uncertain whether or not America would fight, remembered then his solemn statement that this might be his last public appearance, and that he regarded those words which might be his last as spoken in the actual service of his country; and they were comforted by the knowledge that if he had not lived to see the victory, as he had hopefully suggested to Mr. Balfour on Sunday, he had at least lived to see America take her place in line in the common cause.

LAWYER, STATESMAN, DIPLOMATIST.

As a lawyer, statesman, and diplomatist Mr. Choate was hardly less famous than his father's distinguished cousin, Rufus Choate, who was for decades regarded as the leader of the Massachusetts bar, and who was renowned as an orator when the eloquence of Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and Wendell Phillips stirred the country in the struggle over the ideal of "a free country for all, with bondage for none."

Rufus Choate, then a youth of 19, had been thrilled at hearing the eloquent argument of Daniel Webster in the famous Dartmouth College case, and he decided to enter the profession of law with the greatest barrister of that day as his ideal. Joseph Hodges Choate, born in Salem, Mass., on January 24, 1832, in turn took Rufus Choate as his example.

As lawyers and public men the careers of the two Choates were similar, each being rated as the best lawyer of his day. But the younger Choate brought more fame to the family name as ambassador to the Court of St. James. In 1899 President McKinley recalled John Hay from London to make him Secretary of State, and at the same time appointed Mr. Choate ambassador in his place.

He remained at this post until 1905, doing his utmost to bring the two branches of the English-speaking race closer together. When he left London to return to the United States English statesmen and writers described his stay there as "the abundant harvest and culmination of all that had gone before." It was said that he had more friends among statesmen abroad than any other envoy since Benjamin Franklin. His friendship with Mr. Balfour, head of the British commission recently sent to the United States, was of the strongest, and the efforts of the two to bring the two countries closer together were zealous and carried out in conjunction.

Only a few months before his death in 1859 Rufus Choate, struck by the promise of his young relative, gave him a letter to William M. Evarts, then one of the brightest figures at the American bar. After a few months in another law office in New York, the young man was invited to become a member of Mr. Evarts's law firm, and with the aid of brilliant associates Mr. Choate was able to make this coalition one of the most famous and successful in the country. When Mr. Choate was in the full flower of his success as a lawyer he paid his homage to his ideal, Rufus Choate, and, through him, to Daniel Webster, in these words:

"I owe more of my success to his example and inspiration, to his sympathy and his helping hand than I owe to any other man or men."

IN MANY FAMOUS CASES.

For the first few decades of his life in New York Mr. Choate gave his full energies to the practice of his profession, and there was hardly a famous case in the last half of the nineteenth century that he had not argued or been called in as an advisory counsel. One of the most spectacular of these cases was the defense of Brig. Gen. Fitz-Hugh Porter, who had been deprived of his rank in the Army because of charges arising from the retreat of the Union forces at the Battle of Bull Run. In preparing the case Mr. Choate had to master the military details of a campaign, and so well did he accomplish this that when he appeared before the Hayes Commission in 1879 he not only established Gen. Porter's innocence but caused the President to restore that officer's rank.

Perhaps Mr. Choate's most bitterly contested case was a suit for damages brought by W. R. Laidlaw, a clerk, against the late Russell Sage for $50,000. Laidlaw was in Sage's office when a bomb was thrown, killing two men and injuring the former. The suit for damages was based upon the alleged fact that Mr. Sage had seized the clerk and used him as a shield when the explosion came. The first trial brought a verdict of $25,000. Mr. Sage's lawyers appealed, and Mr. Choate then got a verdict for $43,000. Again an appeal was taken and the verdict was set aside, but the case was never again brought to trial. Mr. Choate said that the cross-examination of Mr. Sage was like "skinning an intellectual eel."

In another case Mr. Choate was forced to become an expert in archæology, and he successfully defended the genuineness of the Cypriote antiquities in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He argued in the Credit Mobilier case, involving the contract for the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, and the case against Collis P. Huntington for the recovery of money due on the contract for the purchase of stock and involving the operations of the builders of the Central Pacific. In 1891 he argued in the New York election-fraud cases. Following this he was counsel in a score of famous will-contest cases involving hundreds of millions of dollars, among them being the Commodore Vanderbilt case, the A. T. Stewart case, and the Tilden, Hoyt, Cruger, and Drake cases.

Even before he had successfully argued before the United States Supreme Court against the income tax of 1894 he had won fame as a great constitutional lawyer. Following the tax case he attacked the constitutionality of the Texas antitrust law.

NEVER HELD POLITICAL OFFICE.

Mr. Choate never held a political office. In 1897 he opposed Thomas C. Platt for the United States Senatorship, but he received only 7 votes to Platt's 142. It was said of Mr. Choate by his associates that he was too broad-minded to be a successful politician. He could see both sides of a controversy, and for that reason did not have blind devotion to small causes. Consequently, they contended, he was a statesman. It was not until the nineties that Mr. Choate gave much of his energy to politics, although he had always aided in measures of great public service. He assisted in smashing the Tweed ring, and in many other struggles he showed great animosity for the Tammany organization.

Mr. Choate was a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Law School, and had received honorary degrees from his alma mater, as well as from Yale, Amherst, Williams, Cambridge, and Edinburgh. He was also an honorary bencher of the Inner Temple of London.

FLOOD OF TRIBUTES TO CHOATE'S WORK—HUGHES CALLS "HEROIC" HIS PATRIOTIC SERVICES IN HIS LAST DAYS OF LIFE—BELOVED, SAYS ROOSEVELT—WICKERSHAM EMPHASIZES "GREAT PERSONALITY"—STETSON CONSIDERED HIM HEAD AND HEART OF BAR.

Praise of the life and public services of Joseph H. Choate came yesterday in unstinted measure from leading men of New York. Among the legal profession in the city there was deep personal mourning for the passing of the man whom Francis Lynde Stetson called "not only the head but the heart of the New York bar." National, State, and city officials and men prominent in many activities expressed their sense of the loss which the country felt in his death.

Many spoke of the deep and abiding value of the work of Mr. Choate's years in public life, and of the fact that he had died as he might have wished—in the full tide of energy, working hard for a cause near his heart.

The courts of the city, almost without exception, paid formal tribute, either by special exercises held at their opening or by early adjournment. Following are some of the testimonials by judges and lawyers to Mr. Choate's life and labors:

Charles E. Hughes: "No words that we can utter can express our love and admiration for Mr. Choate. He was not only the leader of the American bar, but he was the finest flower of American culture. In the truest sense he died in the service of his country.

"It is inexpressibly sad to think that he is gone, but nothing in his brilliant career did him more credit than his heroic service in these last days when at the most serious risk he so eloquently voiced the patriotic sentiment of our country."

Theodore Roosevelt: "In common with everyone else, I was very greatly shocked at the death of Mr. Choate. He had become not only the most distinguished citizen of New York City but also that man for whom his fellow citizens felt a particular affection. Probably the death of no other man in this city would be felt in such a peculiarly personal manner."

Elihu Root: "Mr. Choate was a very great man of the noblest quality, an extraordinary combination of distinguished ability, intellectual power, mediation, combined with a fund of wit and humor, and the highest courage. He was absolutely fearless, and he had the frankness and openness that goes with high courage. At the same time he had the most unselfish and devoted public spirit, and had a great capacity for friendship and warmth of heart. Taken all in all, he was one of the greatest men I ever knew."

George W. Wickersham: "I suppose that the simple announcement of the death of Mr. Choate has reached the hearts of more lawyers throughout the land than the passing away of any member of our profession within the recollection of living men, because no other man so filled the place in our hearts which we fondly assigned to the leader of the American bar. He was the leader in many different directions, for years the foremost advocate at this bar, for years the best voice at the bar in all matters which pertain to the dignity, advancement, and discharge of the high responsibilities of the bar.

"He went as the representative of the bar into the wider field of public service at an age when many men close their professional careers. Beginning at the age of 67 with an ever-widening activity, with an ever-growing ability, he filled larger and larger places in the activities of the world and with a magnificence of old age seldom equaled. Growing in stature, growing in moral suggestiveness, Mr. Choate came to fill a greater place in the eyes of the world.

"So he passed away, leaving to the bar the memory of a great career, of a great personality, of a kindly nature, and of that quality of humor without which learning is in vain."

Francis Lynde Stetson: "To refer to Mr. Choate as the head of the New York bar is not enough. Ever since his return from England he has been its heart not less than its head. He has won our affection as well as our respect.

"If I were to select the particular qualities to which he owed his preeminent professional success, I should mention his capacity for prolonged and intense study and labor, his ability to maintain close and critical attention to every event or incident in the courtroom, whether at the counsel table or in the jury box or on the bench; his ever-surprising readiness to observe and instantly to conform to any revelation on the part of the court, counsel, jury, or witness; his comprehension of humanity and his wit. During nearly 50 years at this bar I have known hardly more than four leaders who were remarkable for their wit—Mr. Evarts, whose lambent humor trickled and illuminated, but never scorched; Mr. Francis N. Bangs, whose brilliant thrusts flashed like a meteor with a train of burning sparks; Frederic R. Coudert, whose Gallic wit charmed and entertained; and Mr. Choate, the fun maker. His fun was a veritable bonfire around which all his hearers gathered and warmed themselves, and in the fire was his point, which they then felt, whether or not they saw it. He was the most dangerous adversary at the American bar of later days, although the late John G. Johnson, of Philadelphia, was the most formidable.

"But Mr. Choate was the head and the heart of more than the bar. There was no worthy cause to which he was not quick to respond, and the world struggle dominated him as powerfully as the passion of early youth. He was zealous for justice and for the good of his country and of the world.

"As a writer and speaker his fame would be secure had he written only his addresses on Abraham Lincoln and Rufus Choate. This last I consider his masterpiece, and when I said so to him he answered, 'Yes; that is the best. I never worked so hard on any speech as on that one.' And herein lay an explanation. The finished, flowing, easy, self-speaking address, in this case as in the others, was not something that had merely happened. It was, and most others were, the sum of painstaking labor and earnest reflection.

"His ending was an apotheosis. I watched him Sunday morning at that glorious service at the cathedral. Full of honors, crowned with love, carrying dignity and reverence in his presence, he was in his beautiful old age, uttering a nunc dimittis without precedent since the days of the ancient Simeon. All of us honored him, and those of us admitted to his intimacy loved him. His friendship and his portrait given to me by him and inscribed "With much affection" have been and are sufficient rewards for the labors of nearly 50 years at this bar."

Henry W. Taft: "Mr. Choate's death makes a void in this community, which will not soon be filled. It was not alone that he was a great orator, yet none surpassed him in his power to sway a multitude, especially where some great moral issue evoked his eloquent denunciation of the wrong and his fearless advocacy of the right; nor was it merely that he was a great, versatile, and resourceful advocate—and yet he was in more ways than any other lawyer of the country at the head of his profession; nor, again, was it that he was a great statesman and diplomat, and yet in the field of international law and negotiation his fame was surpassed by few Americans, and, finally, his eminence did not rest on the fact that he was a great citizen, and yet he lived to be the grand old man of this community. It was the combination of all his qualities and of all the achievements of his distinguished career that made him one of the foremost men of his time.

"His unusual and engaging personality, coupled with his great and varied abilities, made him the most conspicuous individual in our city life, and the most recent evidence of that fact was his selection before all others, and at the age of 85, to represent this city at the numerous functions recently given in honor of the French and English commissions.

"I saw much of Mr. Choate in his later years, and had a warm affection for him. His simplicity, his candor, his gay humor, his cheery philosophy, and his freedom from even a tinge of self-sufficiency or self-righteousness made him the most approachable of men, and the most agreeable of companions."

Samuel Untermyer: "Notwithstanding his ripe old age, the death of Mr. Choate comes as a distinct shock to the country. It is an irreparable loss and a deep grief to the American bar. We have not been accustomed to think of this great nestor of our bar as an old man. With his giant intellect, so well preserved to the last, his eloquence and delightful wit, his melodious voice, the like of which I never knew, his simple, genial, unaffected, and courtly manner, that have been a joy to us all for half a century or more, it seems hard to visualize us as getting along without him. He was a great world figure and will be severely missed. No one can quite take his place.

"I have tried cases with him and against him, extending over the last 30 years, and I know how considerate and yet how dangerous an adversary he was. He told me at one time, perhaps 25 years ago, when I congratulated him upon a particularly felicitous speech filled with humor, that he was sorry he had ever been recognized as able to make a witty speech, because the people always expected him to make them laugh and would not take him seriously. He was utterly wrong, for no man in our day has been able so completely to hold his audience spell-bound by his flights of eloquence.

"The reputation of a lawyer as a lawyer is an evanescent thing. He can not leave behind him many of the evidences of his wit or learning, but I believe that Mr. Choate's memory will live beyond that of any man in the last 100 years, and that his fame as a scholar, diplomat, and stateman will long outlive his reputation as a lawyer."

De Lancey Nicoll: "Mr. Choate had a combination of qualities not possessed by any lawyer whom I have ever known. He was not only a profound jurist, an accomplished student, an author gifted with a delightful style, but he was also a great orator, who shone alike in the forum and in all public assemblies. He possessed a fountain of humor, which never ran dry, and a magnetism which fascinated all who came in contact with him. He was a great statesman and diplomatist, and, above all, a patriot, who gave his life to his country as clearly as any soldier ever did in the firing line. His death in the present crisis is an irreparable loss. No one can just take his place."

Paul D. Cravath: "For years Mr. Choate was recognized as the leader of the New York bar and for years, by common consent, the leading citizen of our city. That he so long held this dual leadership is due to that remarkable combination of ability, character, high purpose, and magnificent personality, which placed him in the minds of all of us in a class by himself."

Former Senator John C. Spooner: "It is quite impossible to pay adequate tribute to Mr. Choate's long, brilliant, and useful career. His sudden death came as a shock not only to our people but to many in other countries. His oratory under all circumstances was charming. It seemed to me impossible for any orator, under any circumstances, to excel his speech at the city hall welcoming Mr. Balfour. There was a fascination in his voice, manner, and speech which could not be surpassed. All things considered, it is not to be expected that there will come another so gifted in wisdom, learning, oratory, and exquisite humor as he."

Nicholas Murray Butler: "Mr. Choate died as a happy warrior. He fell quite literally on the field of battle where the contest was for the ideals of human liberty and of civil government in which he so profoundly believed.

"Two incidents of the last few days will never be forgotten by those who witnessed them. Sitting in his own library after dinner on Saturday evening last, surrounded by a small group of intimate friends, he enlisted Mr. Balfour, Prof. Bergson, and some of the rest of us in a discussion of immortality. His question was half quizzical, half serious, but it drew out an interchange of brilliant thought and sparkling wit that will always be memorable.

"Again, on leaving the Cathedral of St. John the Divine after the stately service on Sunday morning, Mr. Choate bade farewell to Mr. Balfour with these last words, 'Remember, we shall meet again to celebrate the victory.'"

Frank A. Vanderlip: "Mr. Choate was certainly our grand old man. For a long lifetime he had been one of the leading figures of New York and of the Nation. Those people who were fortunate enough to sit under the spell of his voice at the several meetings last week while the international delegates were entertained felt that he had never been more powerful mentally than he was at that time.

"His statement of what we are fighting for, made at the Merchants' Association luncheon, was one of the finest utterances that has been made in regard to the true reasons underlying the world conflict and might well be reread and fixed in everyone's mind."

Elbert H. Gary: "Joseph H. Choate, all in all, was one of the greatest of great men of his time. As a lawyer, diplomat, public speaker, patriotic citizen, none outranked him. His natural talents, profound learning, wide experience, breadth of view, keen perception, honesty of purpose, consideration for the rights and feelings of others, enabled him to exert a pronounced influence in public affairs, concerning which he took an active part. As an orator he was earnest, sincere, eloquent, and persuasive. He charmed and convinced his audiences. His wit and his logic were superb."

Robert Bacon: "The cause of national preparedness and defense in this country has lost its great leader. The loss is, indeed, a personal one to all of us who have been associated with Mr. Choate in the National Security League. He was one of its organizers and most earnest workers. His active interest in the league continued to the very end."

LEE S. OVERMAN: "I admired Mr. Choate as a great lawyer, for his eloquence and his conversation, and for his wonderful power and experience. The country has had few greater diplomats in a century."

James A. O'Gorman: "Every lawyer, and indeed every citizen, deplores Mr. Choate's death. For more than a generation he was the dean of his profession in the State, and he endeared himself to everyone by his delightful personality. He was a man of versatile accomplishments, and his place can not readily be filled."

JUDGES PAY HONOR TO CHOATE—COURTS ADJOURN EARLY OUT OF RESPECT TO HIS MEMORY.

Justice Bissell in opening the criminal branch of the supreme court and Judges Crain, Nott, Wadhams, Rosalky, and McIntyre in general sessions paid their tributes to Mr. Choate before proceeding with the business before their tribunals. Judge Wadhams referred to this remark which Mr. Choate made to him at the Battery last Friday afternoon, while they were waiting to receive the British commission:

"You younger men will have to take our places. This is my last day."

Federal Judge Cushman adjourned the United States district court, in which Capt. Franz von Rintelen and his codefendants were being tried, half an hour earlier than usual on motion of former Senator Joseph W. Bailey, of Texas, counsel for Frank Buchanan. Mr. Bailey said:

"Last night the American bar lost that great man who for many years had been one of its leaders. It seems to me to be a fitting recognition of his high place that the minutes of this court should show that out of respect for his memory this session was adjourned."

Presiding Justice John Proctor Clarke, in convening the appellate division of the supreme court of the first department, said:

"Mr. Choate was above all a lawyer, a great advocate—long the leader of the bar in this community. It is fitting that we should take note of his passing, and an appropriate minute will be entered on our records."

Supreme Justices Bijur, Platzek, Giegerich, and Newburger ordered early adjournment out of respect to Mr. Choate. Justice Bijur said:

"As I knew Mr. Choate from my early entry into the profession, I can not emphasize too strongly his activities for the young men in the legal profession. Not only the profession but the great public of the United States has suffered one of its greatest losses."

Justice Platzek said:

"Mr. Choate had a sense of duty and a mission in life. He was a patriot, a public-spirited citizen, a philanthropist. He belonged to the world rather than to us."

Justice Giegerich called Mr. Choate "the acknowledged leader of the bar of this country."

MAYOR EXPRESSES CITY'S LOSS—ALDERMEN ADOPT RESOLUTIONS—TRIBUTES ORDERED IN SCHOOLS.

Mayor Mitchel wrote this letter to Mrs. Choate yesterday:

"Will you let me express to you on behalf of the people of the city of New York the sorrow that we feel for the death of your husband?

"Our grief is the more keen and our sense of loss the greater because his passing comes at a moment following close upon one of the most conspicuous acts of splendid service which has marked his long and valued life. I mean the leading part which he took as our foremost citizen in the welcome by this city to the special missions sent to this country by France and Great Britain. In the various functions incident to the city official welcome Mr. Choate stood as the representative of the great citizenship of New York—the most respected, the most revered, the most loved of New Yorkers. To those who knew him intimately, to those who felt themselves his friends, and to the great mass of our citizens who saw and heard him it was a consideration of great satisfaction and of pride that with each succeeding public appearance he seemed to grow in vigor, his voice seemed to gain in clarity and strength. The virility of his thought and the beauty of his phrases were impressive as seldom before. It was a very great compliment to the city's distinguished visitors that he should have been the head of the committee to receive them. As for the city—it was appropriately honored in this service which he performed in its behalf.

"Mr. Choate's death at this critical hour in his country's life should serve to bring into bold relief all the rare, unselfish service of his life as an object lesson of especial value to all of us. His fellow citizens know him now as a man who was right in all his instincts, his purposes, and his counsel, as one whose vigorous Americanism and fighting spirit were an inspiring example to the young men of America.

"Will you let me tell you how deep is my own sense of personal loss? I knew Mr. Choate to be my friend; his counsel and help were of great value to me during many trying days in the past three years."

Resolutions presented by President Frank L. Dowling to the board of aldermen were unanimously adopted by that body. They read:

"Joseph Hodges Choate, New York's foremost citizen, is dead. Lawyer, scholar, and diplomat, courtly gentleman, the world suffers a great loss. Leader at the bar, master of forensic eloquence, he commanded the respect and attention not alone of the people of his native land, but the people of the world. Grim death marked him for its own after he had lived to the eighth decade of his life, which he so beautifully said is 'far the best.'

"Resolved, By the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York, sincerely deploring the death of this distinguished, loving, and well-beloved man, that profound sympathy be, and the same is hereby, tendered to the family of Joseph Hodges Choate in this the hour of their mourning.

"Resolved further, That a copy hereof, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated by the mayor and the city clerk, be transmitted to the family."

President William G. Willcox, of the board of education, and Superintendent of Schools William H. Maxwell sent the following notice to public-school principals:

"In view of the sudden death of New York's most distinguished citizen, the Hon. Joseph Hodges Choate, it is highly appropriate that the attention of the children in the public schools should be called to his career, as containing elements which all would do well to admire and, if possible, to imitate.

"Special stress should be laid upon the fact that Mr. Choate received his preparation for Harvard University in the public schools of Salem, Mass., where he was born, and the fact should be dwelt upon that the public schools of New York City provide for every boy and girl who will take advantage of them opportunities for training, culture, and refinement which will enable them to tread in the footsteps, even though at a great distance, of the distinguished citizen who has just breathed his last. Appropriate exercises should be held in every school in the city on the day of Mr. Choate's funeral."

The New York Genealogical and Biographical Society, the trustees of the American Museum of Natural History, of the founders of which institution Mr. Choate was the last survivor, both adopted resolutions of sorrow and tribute. At the museum the flags were placed at half-mast, and Mr. Choate's portrait was taken from the members' room and, wreathed, was hung in the memorial hall above the tablet bearing the names of the founders.

DEEP REGRET IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, May 15.

News of the death of Joseph H. Choate was received with the deepest regret in England, where during his six years as ambassador he became the most popular of diplomats. The evening newspapers publish long obituaries and appreciations of Mr. Choate's work as ambassador, and more recently in advocating the cause of the allies in America.

Editorially the New York Times says:

JOSEPH HODGES CHOATE.

The long, fortunate life of Mr. Choate was happy also in its close. He was unsparing of himself at fourscore and five. His fine, gallant, undaunted, unaging spirit spent itself at last in the service of his country. For two generations what work of patriotism, of humanity, what cause of better government and the public good, lacked his fruitful aid?

Two brothers of his were likewise eminent in the law. As Mr. Lowell said of the Rossettis, genius ran by a sort of gavelkind in the family.

Of that sound and strong Essex County stock, his father's cousin, Rufus, had seemed, seems still, perhaps, the most brilliant flower. There was something strong, exotic, oriental in his personality, a distinction so commanding that Thackeray, quizzing everybody else that entered into the public hall in Boston where he was to lecture, dared make no comment on Rufus Choate. An eloquence a little florid, an instant piercing to the heart of the case, an unexcelled expertness in the psychology of petit juries were his. He had a marvelous and hypnotic eye. Sailors on remote seas were persuaded to scuttle ships on the ground that "old Choate" would get them off when they returned to Boston. It was complained that a defendant had no chance when Rufus Choate was attorney general of the State.

A magician of the jury room, he is become almost a legend, though chapter and verse can be shown in proof of many of his miracles. His scholarship, his love of history and literature, and especially of the classics, his wit, luminous intelligence, and social charm were gifts of Joseph Choate also, perhaps the last survivor of an ancient race of lawyers, "all-round" men, and not specialists, inheriting the honorable traditions of their profession, practicing it as a liberal art and not as a mere business. Lawyers like Mr. Evarts and the Choates were a kind of patriciate at the bar. To think of them and their training is to recall old offices where the Year Books and Yelverton, Bracton, Glanville, much crabbed Latin and fusty Norman French, the brave pedantries of the beginnings, are on the shelves with the marshaled companies of English and American reports. On the walls are pictures of bland, sheeplike lord chancellors, barons of the exchequer, lord chief justices, and advocates like Scarlett and Erskine, Wirt and Pinckney, English and American magnates of the bench and bar. Urbanity, wit, the art of quotation, the art of the agreeable, are practiced. What would happen now to a lawyer who quoted Cicero? Would he be disbarred?

Rufus Choate was about 35, if we remember, when he shook off the dust of Danvers and Ipswich and set up his office in Boston. Joseph Choate was 23 when, gracile and comely, with a sound classical and legal education, he invaded New York. He soon became a partner in a law firm once as well known as the Battery. In its later shape of Evarts, Choate & Beaman it had three principal partners famed for wit; and yet they were as successful as if they had been the most precise, matter-of-fact solemnities.

Rufus Choate, in his smaller theater at Boston, never had, of course, anything like the number of famous cases that fell to the younger man; and Rufus Choate was cut off at 59. Joseph Choate was on all the celebrated cases, one might almost say. There was no branch of the law in which he did not shine. He argued learnedly and persuasively before the Supreme Court, as in the monumental case of the income-tax law in 1894. In the Fitz-John Porter case he helped reverse an unjust verdict, a historical injustice, a bitter, unreasoning public prejudice. He bored into strategy and tactics, mastered military science, had at his fingers' ends a mass of obscure and wearisome minute detail. So as to yachting or naval discipline or archæology, or whatever the subject was, Mr. Choate acquired a marvelous working knowledge. He was a hard worker. He had the gift of concentration. The insides of witnesses and juries were almost transparent to him. He was good-natured, quiet; he led on; he sprang suddenly out of a covert; he was never taken aback. Some of his cases—notably his pursuit of Russell Sage and Feuardent v. Di Cesnola—were public delights, nor has Paris ever seen anything so Parisian, so Attic.

His presence and his voice made anything that Mr. Choate was pleased to say grateful to his audience. There was nothing cut and dried about his usual oratory. In the days when there were giants of after-dinner speakers and to the last he made no formal preparation. His alert intelligence, his sleepless wit, his fine ready irony, his perfect command of English, the great unconscious stores of his mind could always be drawn upon, and only on the most stately occasions, and not always then, did he surrender his gift of improvisation, his impromptu charm.

A fitter ambassador to Great Britain there could not be. That part of his career is in fresh remembrance, as is the force which he displayed at The Hague 10 years ago. This generation has largely forgotten his strong, active hand as a member of the Committee of Seventy in the downfall of the Tweed ring. It is an irony worthy of Mr. Choate's choicest ironical vein that 20 years ago he got only 7 votes for Senator in the Republican caucus at Albany.

But what was public office to so great a public character, to our chief New York citizen, in republica princeps? In his last days he showed memorably the high magnanimity of his nature. He had been a severe critic of Mr. Wilson. From the beginning of the war his sympathies had gone ardently to the allies. He was impatient, like so many others. He judged the feeling of the country by his own. He came to see that Mr. Wilson had been patiently wise in waiting; that he had waited until the country was of one mind. Mr. Choate frankly admitted that Mr. Wilson had been right. So, busied in a hundred patriotic activities, full of a noble passion for the future of democracy, giving his last strength to his country, this gracious and venerable figure, crowned with honors, departs.

Some time ago Laura Simmons desired to express her lasting sentiments in behalf of a dear friend of hers, and I know of no words that are as applicable on the present occasion as those that she wrote. They are as follows:

Lord, grant him still some task for heart and brain—
A man's rich day of usefulness again!
Eager, yet all unhurried—poised to meet
All fate holds forth of triumph or defeat.

O God most wise, who deftly takes away
The tools and playthings of our little day,
Take youth and hope and dreams surpassing fair,
But not the work we love!

Somehow, somewhere,
The master mind moves toward the goal it sought!
Spare him his splendid quest, his crystal thought,
His vision sure, that was our all delight
Till dusk enwrapped him and the long, long night.

The scene—where shifted? Where at Thy behest
That board of priceless lore made manifest?
What service for the restless hand and heart,
So lavish of the wealth they could impart?
Surely Thy blessed vineyard can not spare
Such craftsman, but must hold him dear and rare!

Some day, in Thy good time, shall we once more
About him press and marvel as before?
Shall we of lesser mold behold him still
On Thy high tasks intent, dauntless of will,
And in his work the old-time matchless skill?

—Laura Simmons.

On Motion to Recommit Army Bill With Instructions to Report Amendment Authorizing Four Divisions of Volunteers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, we are facing a critical situation at the beginning of the war in which our Government is now engaged. That war found us utterly unprepared with land forces for foreign service. We have neither guns, equipment, or needed ammunition for use, nor an army of size commensurate with the proposal to send troops to Europe. Statements from the Army Staff, according to the press, are to the effect that, although it will take nearly a year to conscript, equip, and properly train a new army of 1,000,000 men, in response to demands from across the sea American troops will soon be sent to the front in France, there to train with seasoned veterans. According to similar reports, the Army Staff opposes sending troops abroad from the Regular Army or National Guard, because these men are needed to help train the new army to be raised by conscription. It has been repeatedly stated in this debate that the administration and Army Staff are opposed to letting Roosevelt or any volunteer organization go to the front, as is proposed by this amendment. If an army is to be sent abroad, will that army be composed of raw conscripts to be trained in Europe, or from what service will it be taken? What influence is to-day opposing the amendment under discussion which authorizes four divisions of volunteers to compose an advance army? It will be remembered that throughout the Civil War Regular Army officers were bitterly opposed to the volunteer service, and that such opposition has never ceased. Why is the Army Staff opposed to volunteers, and what weight should be given that opposition?

Every proposal now coming before Congress is supported by a claim that either the Army Staff or War Department or the President favors it. Whenever war officials are quoted in its favor we are expected to pass every bill, wherever prepared and whatever its character. That is the present legislative situation.

A FEW MISTAKES OF WAR OFFICIALS.

In time of war the President should have the undivided support of Congress in carrying on that war, but this does not mean that every subordinate, irresponsible understrapper, or other minor official should control the action of Congress because he assumes to speak in the name of the President. We may well remember that it was not long ago when some war officials sent an American fleet to Vera Cruz, with lamentable results. Somebody then blundered. Not long ago some war officials sent Pershing into Mexico to get Villa, and after American troops were shot down by Carranza's orders our boys came back with drooping colors. Again somebody blundered. Very recently war officials directed Congress to authorize by law the arming of merchantmen in order to destroy submarines. The resolution drawn by them so provided. Yet within 30 days thereafter we learned from the President's own lips that any such proposed law would be useless and of no avail. Very recently some war officials determined that an even $3,000,000,000 must be given the Secretary of War immediately for practically unrestricted use. The bill prepared by the War Department so provided. The House investigated conditions and, without affecting the needs of any military interest, reduced the amount approximately $700,000,000 in round numbers.

Within several weeks the War Department has prepared and sent to Congress a bill carrying about $27,000,000 for "emergency" expenditures on waterways. This amount is in addition to over $30,000,000 on hand March 1, 1917, under control of the War Department for waterways. The bill as presented was declared to have the approval of the President, yet a strong minority of the committee, composed of Republicans and Democrats, have declared the bill wasteful and inexcusable at this time and when reached a vigorous effort will be made to secure its defeat. Less than two weeks ago war officials, in the name of the President, as usual, sent a proposed bill for Congress to enact into law permitting censorship of the press. The usual arguments of "stand by the President" were repeated here, but the House rejected the proposal to permit the President to be lawgiver, judge, jury, and executioner, while the Senate, believing the cure worse than the disease, repudiated any press censorship whatever by war officials.

Mistakes of judgment go with all human agencies, including the War Department, and Congress can not avoid its own official responsibility for intelligent action by assuming that the opinions of the Army Staff are invulnerable. I will not surrender my own judgment or convictions due to any such specious arguments.

TRYING TO IMPROVE THE CONSCRIPT BILL.

Recently the War Department prepared an indefensible conscript bill, supported by a powerful press and business propaganda which demanded its passage immediately, even before the bill was reported to Congress. That bill provided for an army of 1,000,000 conscripts 19 to 25 years of age and carried an Army Staff plan for making up this new army of boys of 19 and 20 years of age, as was disclosed in my speech of April 26, 1917. Under that proposed conscript law no right to review exemptions was given to any civil authority. Sole power was vested in the President, acting through the War Department, and thus through subordinate Army officials. No right to accept volunteers was permitted. An army of just "kids" was to be selected by the Regular Army Staff to fight our battles in European trenches at $15 per month. Constituents in Wisconsin who had never seen the bill and could not by any possibility know its contents wired me to support the Army Staff bill and to "stand by the President." The sources of that propaganda, which extended throughout the country, have been exposed in debate.

That Army Staff bill was not accepted by Congress. Boys of 19 and 20 years of age will not be conscripted and sent to France to make up the army of 1,000,000 as proposed by the Army Staff. Men from 21 years to 30 years of age instead of youths from 19 to 25 years will be subject to draft, although the age limit in practically every other country, whether it be an autocracy or democracy, reaches to 40 years or over.

Congress further insisted that the right of habeas corpus and to review exemptions by civil tribunals should be preserved. Congress further materially increased the pay of enlisted men by that same bill, although the volunteer provision was finally stricken out by the Kahn amendment. I voted for the bill which provided that the volunteer system should be tried before conscription would ensue. Canada and Australia voted down conscription; England raised 5,000,000 troops before adopting conscription; Balfour, England's leading statesman, and Gen. Miles and Gen. Wood, of the American Army, supported the volunteer system; and I believed that the experience of nearly a century and a half in our country's history should not be wiped out at the demand of the Army Staff.

Speaker CLARK, ex-Speaker CANNON, Gen. SHERWOOD, hero of 40 battles during the Civil War; Leader KITCHIN, Representatives MASON, CRISP, ANTHONY, and over 100 other Members of this House voted for that volunteer system, but it was stricken from the bill and conscription was substituted therefor. Men having the courage of their convictions have been denounced by a discredited propaganda because of that vote. Let the future determine their judgment.

THIS WAR WILL TEST THE WISDOM OF CONSCRIPTION.

Whether the draft law is wise or not this war will demonstrate. Now that it has become law we must support its provisions, but if this war is to be fought by men instead of by dollars alone, if the appeal from Europe for American soldiers on the firing line is to be met, it will be well for Congress to overrule the prejudices or jealousies of war officials particularly, as their judgment has been shown to be notoriously imperfect in the past.

If this amendment permitting four divisions of volunteers is passed, and the President or Army Staff refuses to send Roosevelt or other volunteers to France, responsibility should rest on those who care to assume it. I did not vote for this war, but now that war has been declared I want to see this Government use all its resources in bringing the conflict to an early and successful conclusion. Active, vigorous, patriotic support is due his country from every American to-day, and every resource of the country should be made available. I have voted all the money and men asked for by the administration, and I shall vote to permit volunteers to go to the front; whether officered by Roosevelt or by other military men is not the issue. Troops are urged for the battle line. If it is a question of sending green conscripts or volunteers to the front to get their training in France, I would rather send those whose example will be an inspiration to patriotism both at home and abroad, men who will fight with a determination shown by volunteers since the days of Marathon and Bunker Hill down to the Battles of the Somme and Arras; volunteers who will fight valiantly, because they believe in their cause, and that is an inspiration needed in this or any other war.

Several items of interest, all taken from a single issue of a Washington paper of May 15, are appended. The advice may be of value to those responsible for national legislation, and is here repeated.

THE GENERAL STAFF MAY VETO THE LAW—FATE OF T. R. ARMY PUT UP TO WILSON—ACTION TO-DAY COMES AS SURPRISE TO CERTAIN OFFICIALS.

The "Roosevelt division" amendment is now a clause in the selective service Army bill. * * *

The measure should go before President Wilson for his signature or veto some time to-morrow unless there is another unexpected hitch. The General Staff of the Army is said to favor veto of the measure as it now stands, but it was pointed out at the Capitol to-day that there is nothing in the bill which makes it compulsory that the President should raise the divisions authorized. He may avoid the section entirely if he desires.

It is probable the Army officials will urge that nothing be done about raising the picked volunteers until after the other machinery of selective service has been put into operation and the 1,600,000 men authorized under the bill secured.

The President, some say, may follow the advice of the War Department in the matter, and the General Staff is known to oppose the Roosevelt idea.

GENERAL STAFF DUE FOR A SHAKE-UP—REGULAR ARMY EXPERTS ARE TRANSITORY—TALK OF SHAKE-UP IN ARMY PERSISTS.

Rumors of a forthcoming shake-up in the Army persists. * * * Undoubtedly in the expansion of the military organization of the country called for in the new Army bill the machinery of the General Staff will have to be altered, and in the altering of the machinery there are many Army officers who believe that some alterations will have to take place in the personnel.

While it is thought that the present War Department may last several months longer as it now is, there are few officers who believe that it will survive beyond the period of preparation, if that long. Owing to the fact that the United States has never since the Spanish-American War attempted to operate large bodies of men in action, there is a dearth of men in the Army accustomed to the handling of such problems as are bound to arise with the mobilization, training, transportation, and direction of an Army of a million men. * * * What administration there was of this force (on Mexican border) fell largely on Maj. Gen. Funston, who is now dead.

"VAN AMBERG IS THE MAN"—WILSON TO USE WHIP TO HURRY CONGRESS—PLANS TO PUT STOP TO DILLYDALLYING TACTICS ON THE HILL.

President Wilson to-day decided to apply the whip to Congress.

He is said by close advisers to be out of patience with the dilatory lagging, dragging methods of Congress during the past six weeks. He is particularly displeased with injection of wholly extraneous matters into the various pieces of war legislation which the administration has decided, after consultation, must be put through if America is really to aid her allies and not blunder and muddle along at the start, as Great Britain did.

President Wilson feels that Congress has merely muddled and dilly-dallied for the six weeks that this Nation has been at war with Germany.

The first step to speed matters at the Capitol will be a series of conferences with leaders of both parties and both Houses. The President's closest advisers say he intends to speak plainly and mince no words when he talks to the legislative leaders.

RINGMASTERS AND WHIPS—PRESIDENT ON GOLF LINKS.

The President played golf this morning, motoring to a near-by country club for an early round of the links. The President attended the circus last evening.

LEGISLATION ENACTED UNDER WHIP—AS THE WORLD VIEWS CONSCRIPTION—"ENLIST AND AVOID CONSCRIPTION" CRY—FEW CAPITAL YOUTHS EXEMPT, OFFICERS DECLARE—VOLUNTEERS TO GET BEST—NATURAL RESENTMENT AGAINST MEN SERVING ONLY BECAUSE FORCED.

"Enlist now! Avoid being conscripted!"

This is the cry of recruiting officers for every branch of the service to-day.

"There are but few young men in Washington who will be exempt under the provisions of the conscription bill," declared Lieut. Robert Boyd, in charge of National Guard recruiting, to-day.

"Many think they will be left out, but with the call yesterday issued by the President for 183,000 more Regulars, there will be a large number of men needed to fill that gap, which, no doubt, will be exclusive of the new army of 500,000."

"I should think the young men of Washington would seek to join the service before they had to, and gain considerable more prestige," said Lieut. L. E. Morgan, in charge of the Navy recruiting station at 306 Ninth Street NW., to-day.

"LET GEORGE DO IT."

"Why should they wait? They will be taken anyway. It seems to be a case of 'let George do it.'"

Recruiting officers generally are of the opinion that the volunteer will receive more consideration, in every way, than the conscript. This is to be expected, they say, because there is a natural resentment against the man who will not volunteer when his country needs him, depending on another to take his place.

THE SELECTIVE DRAFT AND THE WHIP—EDITORIAL VIEWS ON CONSCRIPTION—VOLUNTEERS AND CONSCRIPTS.

Some one in authority should issue promptly an order calling down recruiting officers who are urging men to enlist with the threat that they will wear the name of "conscripts" if they do not. The fact that the officers are making this appeal is unquestioned. The War Department urged upon Congress the passage of the selective-draft measure instead of a volunteer bill, with the argument that the former was the only fair and wise thing to do, and the press of the country echoed this argument until Congress acted accordingly. Now, for uniformed underlings to be talking about the disgrace of being "conscripted" is to make their superiors ridiculous.

The thing should not be tolerated longer if the administration wishes the great new army to be composed of self-respecting men who are waiting their country's call and anxious to serve in whatever capacity the proper authorities decide.

NERO FIDDLED, CONGRESS PALAVERS—A "PATRIOT" SENDS ADVICE.

Nearly two months of actual war and no army yet organized. Nearly two months of war and during that time the headlines of the press daily announce that certain things "will be done" or the department is "preparing" to take up certain questions for discussion among the experts. Two months of such headlines when the impatient, patriotic people back home are looking for something actually done.

If the patriotic people of Russia could appreciate the feelings of the average American as he contemplates the lethargy of our Congress in the present crisis, they would think twice before trusting the destinies of that country to a duma or congress.

Think of it, nearly two months of war, such as this country has never seen—and, pray God, may never see again—and Congress fiddling over who shall go to the front, what the age limit shall be for the enlisted man, and whether prohibition shall be written into the Army bill.

Nero fiddled; Congress palavers among its conferees when there should be no question to discuss except the one to get ready the earliest.

Meanwhile the American patriot sits at home and spends the time between work hours cussing popular government, and at this particular time the most unpopular part of that popular government—Congress.

PRINCETON, W. VA.

A SMALL LEGISLATIVE TASK, FOR PATRIOTIC CRITICS BACK HOME—WORLD'S GREATEST WAR BUDGET READY—TOTAL OF $3,396,381.12 CARRIED IN BILL BEFORE SENATE—ARMY AND NAVY PROVIDED WITH PRACTICALLY UNLIMITED FUNDS.

The greatest appropriation bill in the history of the United States or any other nation was ordered favorably reported to the Senate this afternoon by the Appropriations Committee.

The bill is known as the war budget and includes a huge emergency shipping fund amounting to $405,000,000. The total of the bill as reported to the Senate is $3,396,945,381.12. This is an increase of $563,392,600.04 over the House bill.

Senator MARTIN, chairman of the Appropriation Committee, reported the bill with its startling and unprecedented totals to the Senate this afternoon. It has already passed the House, and will be taken up by the Senate in a short time.

FUNDS WITHOUT LIMIT.

Once it is passed, the War and Navy Departments will have at their disposal funds which are practically unlimited. In addition, provision will have been made for the construction of an enormous merchant fleet.

SWEEPING POWERS GRANTED.

In addition to authorizing the enormous total of $750,000,000 for emergency shipping purposes the bill contains legislation conferring sweeping powers upon the President for the purpose of enabling him to place orders for ships with private shipyards and compel fulfillment of such orders ahead of all others.

It provides, furthermore, that the President shall have sweeping powers to take possession of factories and establishments in which ships and materials for shipping are built or produced, and to obtain the output of such establishments for the Government.

PROVIDING A TAX OF $1,800,000,000, ANOTHER EASY LEGISLATIVE JOB FOR CRITICS—HOUSE LEADERS AGREE TO END TAX DEBATE—BILL UNDER SHARP CRITICISM NOT LIKELY TO PASS BEFORE SATURDAY.

An informal agreement to end general debate on the war-taxation bill late this afternoon was reached to-day by House leaders. The reading of the bill for amendment will begin immediately upon the conclusion of the general discussion, but there is little prospect that the bill can be passed before Saturday next. Criticism has been made against practically every section of the measure and scores of amendments probably will be suggested and discussed.

The warning of Congressman HILL, of Connecticut, a Republican member of the Ways and Means Committee, that the pending bill is but a start and other taxation bills are certain to follow, resulted in further demands to-day that the first bill be a model one.

AIMS AT EXCESS PROFITS TAX.

The 16 per cent tax on excess profits promised to-day to be a principal object of attack when the bill is read for amendment.

Congressmen GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, of New York, and MARTIN B. MADDEN, of Illinois, are scheduled to lead the fight for an amendment of the excess-profits section, which it is claimed favor overcapitalized concerns with watered stock, and hits hard the honestly capitalized business.

One of the large business concerns of the country advised its Washington representative to-day that companies are already being reorganized to evade the capital-invested provision of the tax.

The foregoing items are taken from a single issue of one local paper. Speaker CLARK recently said in debate that legislation was easy to enact by those without legislative experience, yet, by a strange anomaly, while able to pass laws overnight such men are rarely chosen to assume that responsibility. Those who are chosen for the service are notified to again respond to the whip. "Theirs not to reason why."

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY B. STEAGALL,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate as well as unfair that attempt should be made to inject partisan politics into the discussion of the proposal to authorize Col. Roosevelt to raise a division of troops. It is only natural that Members of the House should differ on this proposal when considered on its merits. Such is the situation among the Democrats of the House that the injection of partisan politics will not change any votes on the Democratic side, for the reason that, as a rule, they could not expect to gain votes by favoritism toward Col. Roosevelt. On the other hand, he has a large following among the constituents of almost every Republican Member of the House, a following inside the party that must determine the political fortunes of every Republican Member of this body. So it is easy to see that opponents of the proposed change in this bill are not responsible for dragging politics into this controversy. Certain it is that no such motive governs me. Before the passage of this bill the House, by a substantial majority, rejected a proposal which the motion to recommit is designed to secure, and it is at least remarkable now that the conferees have succeeded in eliminating such a provision passed by the Senate that Members of the House should now insist seriously upon repudiating the work of the committee in order that the Senate amendment may be incorporated in the bill.

Notwithstanding my party affiliations, I have always been an ardent admirer of Col. Roosevelt, and I am now. He is a most remarkable man, the strongest and most powerful personality in the ranks of his party—if not in the Nation. I admire his ability; I admire his honesty; and I admire his courage. It might not be an exaggeration to say that he is responsible for the entrance of the United States into this war. It is at least doubtful that without his efforts we should have entered the conflict. And I pay tribute to him because he is about the only one of those so clamorous to drag the United States into that contest who is really willing to take part in the fighting. I regret that the Congress can not consistently authorize him to have the part he desires. But what is the situation?

It it practically settled that we are to adopt the conscription method of raising an army, and, contradictory as it is, we are to fight for liberty and democracy. How, then, can we make any pretense at consistency if we begin by adopting conscription and at the same time pass a law the avowed purpose of which is in recognition of the fitness and claims of one individual? It is no answer to say that he is a man of great force and prestige, because we are to fight for the doctrine that all men shall be equal before the law. If we pass a law resting upon the claims of one American citizen, we stand in the attitude of repudiating one of the fundamental principles of democratic government, and as confessing that this great Nation has only one man worthy to raise a division of troops in accordance with the honored custom that has obtained since the foundation of the Republic. It violates the inmost spirit of the provision of the Constitution, which says "that no title of nobility shall be granted."

We have had dinned into our ears for weeks and weeks that the representatives of the people are not competent to raise an army; that, although the Constitution by specific provision places that duty and responsibility upon us, we shall forget our oaths and abdicate the functions placed in us by the Constitution, confess the failure of the democratic system of government which we are to fight to establish throughout the world, and follow blindly the lead of the military coterie in whom all wisdom regarding this subject is supposed to be centered. Aye, more than this, we are to be denounced as ignorant and disloyal unless we close our mouths and accept their view. Yet before the passage of the bill, in the discussion of which this contention is made, we are called upon to abandon the new doctrine and select even an officer for the Army, the plain and avowed purpose of the plan for which we are called upon to vote being to allow Col. Roosevelt to raise a division. At one stage we are called upon to surrender our independence as the legislative branch of Government, and next to throw to the winds the last vestige of claim to consistency. For my part I will not do it.

When the war resolution was before the House I voted for the substitute offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], the purpose of which was to assert our independence, to repudiate the outrages committed by the Imperial German Government against our rights and our sovereignty, and to prepare to protect our ships and our citizens in the right to traverse the high seas, unhurt and unhindered, and for the defense of our shores against invasion. When the substitute was lost I cast my vote for the other resolution, though I did so with hesitation and regret. I am willing to bear my part of the responsibility and to support the Government in the assertion of its power and prestige, and I am willing to vote to raise an army.

I favor the volunteer system. I favored the plan offered by a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, to authorize the President to call for volunteers, following the traditional policy of the Nation and the sacred custom of free people in all ages of the world, and to authorize a resort to conscription only in case of necessity. If a majority of the Representatives of the people prefer the conscription plan, I bow to the will of the majority. But I will not support in the same measure the inconsistent and undemocratic proposal to make an exception of the rule intended solely to gratify the ambition of one man no matter how great his prestige or how laudable his purpose. It is no answer to tell me that it is the strategic thing to do. It were better to stay out of the war or lose it than surrender the fundamental principles of democratic government. So far as I am concerned, I do not believe in the wisdom of the policy. Such a course will discredit our purposes before the world and disappoint and dishearten the masses of our own people, without whose sympathy and support all we may do will be in vain. The first indispensable step to bring the war to a successful and speedy end is to arouse the hearts and consciences of the American people to a realization that it is a fight for American rights and lasting liberty, and this can not be done unless we are true to the ideals which they have been taught to revere.

I am not able to see the wisdom in repudiating the principle of volunteer military service which has become so deeply embedded in the thought and custom of our people. This principle inheres in that very freedom, the benefits of which we are to fight to impress upon others. Through the ages involuntary service has been the handmaiden of despotism and autocracy, and since the birth of our independence it has been our boast that all men are free and equal and every citizen a soldier. The Constitution declares that a "well-regulated militia" is "necessary to the security of a free state," and this truth was set up in contradistinction to the idea that safety may be found in standing armies or enforced military service. When we were only a few millions of people in a comparative wilderness, our Army of Volunteers found the means and courage to repel an invading army of trained soldiers, and by their fortitude and heroism established the Republic under which we live.

American democracy was born of the courage of that brave band of Volunteers and baptized in their blood and set up as a blessing to mankind. In every war in which that democracy has been imperiled from that good day until this the blood and bayonet of the volunteer has been its reliance. By this system we won the War of 1812. By this system we won the War with Mexico. When the perpetuity of the Union was at stake it was the volunteers' heroism and courage that preserved the Union. I know it is said there had to be a resort to conscription, but only about 50,000 conscripts ever saw service in the Union Army, and it is established beyond question by the records that it took almost as many Regular troops to suppress riots and enforce the order for conscription. It is really doubtful whether either side in that great conflict gained anything by the resort to conscription. There were riots in New York, Pennsylvania, and Indiana which necessitated the use of about 35,000 Regular troops in the effort to enforce the order for conscription. And after all, out of a total of more than 2,000,000 men sent to the front in the Union Army, only about 50,000 conscripts ever saw actual service.

We listened with great interest to Gen. SHERWOOD, an honored and revered Member of this body, and a brave and fearless officer in the Union Army, as he told us of his experience with his command, in which he says he had 72 conscripts sent to his regiment and that all but 2 deserted, and that they were worthless as soldiers. The general further added that while he was commander of the Union Army in Tennessee that all the deserters from the Confederate to the Union Army were conscripts. This has been true of conscripts everywhere, not in all instances, but to such an extent that it has become an adage universally accepted, that "one volunteer is worth three conscripts."

In the War with Spain there was intelligence, patriotism, and courage enough in the country to conduct that contest in a way not discreditable to American honor and American arms, and it was the volunteer system by which we brought that conflict to a speedy and successful conclusion. Why, then, the sudden demand for the reversal of our long-established policy? No one insists that an army can not be raised by the volunteer system. No man will seriously charge such a lack of patriotism. If it were true that there is not enough sentiment favorable to the action we have taken to insure the successful raising of an army of volunteers it would prove that the country has been plunged into a war disapproved by the people, and that is the very sort of thing against which it is proposed we shall fight.

It is agreed by those who favor the conscription plan that the situation is such as to demand speedy action. Yet it is admitted that it will take four or five months to complete the registration. If a volunteer army can be secured at all, of course it can be done in less time than this. The truth is we could have raised by the volunteer plan the number desired by the War Department during the time we have consumed debating the method to be adopted.

Again, we are told that the volunteer plan will remove from industrial ranks those whose toil is necessary to produce the food and other materials essential to the proper conduct of the war. This is one of the main arguments on which are based the appeals with which Congressmen are being urged to support the conscription plan. And yet the bill as offered by the committee contains every provision in this regard applicable to the volunteer system as well as the conscription plan. This could be more easily done under the volunteer plan than it could in carrying out conscription, because the latter plan involves the work of summoning and exempting five times the number to be accepted. Under the former plan it would only be necessary to exempt those offering whose services might be considered more valuable elsewhere. The argument made is simply absurd to an intelligent man who is informed of the facts.

Again, we are told the conscription plan secures equality. This is perhaps the most colossal misrepresentation being indulged. Let us see what foundation exists for the claim. The population of the United States is something over 100,000,000. About half of these are females, who must be excluded. There are about 32,000,000 males who are over 19 and under 45 years of age. This leaves about 20,000,000 men of military age. The bill submitted to the committee by the War Department exempts all except those between the ages of 19 and 25, so it will be seen that the conscription plan would apply to about 6,000,000 out of a total population of more than 100,000,000. What an absurdity to claim that this system bears on all alike! But even when we get down to the 6,000,000 who are liable it is not proposed to place the burden on all equally. It is proposed to use only about one-sixth of that number. At this point the result is to be determined by chance, but not finally. The fellow who has the gambler's luck may nevertheless turn out loser, because somebody is to determine who out of the six will be required to serve. No man can tell in advance who in his community will have to go. No Member in this House, when the bill is passed, can give definite answers to his constituents as to its meaning in hundreds of specific cases that are likely to be presented to each Member. But the confusion and uncertainty will disturb almost every home and fireside in this broad land.

The most shocking provision in the entire proposal is that that contemplates drafting schoolboys under 21, and it has been said in the public press and reasserted on this floor as coming from those in authority, that it is the intention of the department to take the first increment of 500,000 from the schoolboys. No wonder it has been easy to manufacture sentiment in support of this proposal when it exempts four out of every five, and when it is contemplated that the system will be so handled that schoolboys of the country will be the first to serve! John Temple Graves, the gifted correspondent, known throughout the country, and whose word none will doubt, says that the chairman of the War College told him, if the original bill passed, it was intended that the first increment of 500,000 should be composed of boys under 20. This statement has been published and quoted broadly on the floor of the House and never denied. It would seem there would be scarcely anybody left for the present at least to express any formidable resentment at the ballot box. The impression seems to have been that this plan would commend itself to Congress because those to be drafted have no vote. If the majority of the Military Committee can accomplish nothing else, they deserve and will receive the sincere thanks of fair-minded people for securing the abandonment of the arbitrary and unjust scheme to have the heaviest burden of this war placed on the schoolboys of the country.

It is estimated by those in position to know that there are more than 1,000,000 men in this country who have had valuable military training in the colleges of the country, or from service in the State militia, or in the Regular Army, and who are not now in the regular service. Probably a large majority of them are over the age of 25, so under the bill proposed by the War College their services can not be obtained through the conscription system. Would there be anything unscientific in a plan that would utilize these men in preference to the untrained schoolboys of the country? Let some of the adherents of the conscription plan who talk incessantly of training and efficiency answer this. For my part, I will never vote for any plan to conscript the schoolboys of the country to fight on foreign soil or across the sea in a war in the inauguration of which they are allowed neither voice nor vote.

A member of the Committee on Military Affairs told us in this debate that when the representatives of the War College first appeared before that committee they stated it was only desired to raise an army of 1,000,000 men; but when it was pointed out that under existing laws the Regular Army and National Guard could be recruited approximately to that number, they came back next day admitting that the committee was correct in their construction of the law, but answered that they had decided it was necessary to raise an army of a million and a half, 500,000 of whom should be gotten under the conscription plan. They had asked for an appropriation of $3,000,000,000 based on an army of 1,000,000 men, and when they changed to 1,500,000 they did not change the amount of the appropriation to be carried in the bill. I guess this is to be accounted for by the fact that we are going so fast with expenditures that a discrepancy of one or two billions of dollars hardly attracts attention.

The conscription plan furnishes a fertile field for promotion among the officers of the Regular Army. The War College plan provided that the eight Army officers of the War Department who are to remain in Washington be raised from $6,000 to $9,300 each but contained no provision for an increase of the pay of the privates to be conscripted, who under existing laws are to receive only $15 per month, though they may be sent to die in the trenches.

The majority of the Committee on Military Affairs have rendered a great service in rejecting the plan of the War College to destroy territorial identity in enlistment. Even Germany is not so autocratic or obsessed with the spirit of militarism as to adopt such a system. It takes a boy and separates him from friends and kindred and those associated by sectional ties and sends him to fight and die among strangers. When young men from the same State serve together they find in one another companionships that soften the hardships of the service. The young man who is sick has a friend or a relative to administer to his needs, and if death be his lot there will be some survivor to tell the loved ones back home of his fortitude and courage and bear to them his parting message to hand down as an inspiration from generation to generation.

It is going far enough in this free country to enforce involuntary servitude even in case of necessity. It is too much to ask any man of democratic ideals and purposes to support such a plan in the absence of such necessity.

We are told that we must follow the example of Great Britain and profit by her mistakes. But Great Britain, with her very existence imperilled, with Germans dropping bombs on helpless women and children in her cities, and the boom of German guns being heard on her shores, did not resort to conscription until 5,000,000 men had volunteered. Canada, with a population of only about 8,000,000, a loyal subject to the mother country, raised 400,000 volunteers to fight in the cause and has refused to adopt conscription. Australia and New Zealand have about 400,000 soldiers in the field and have not thought of abandoning the volunteer system. In Australia a conscription measure submitted to the people by referendum was overwhelmingly voted down. Not a conscript to-day fights in the cause to which we are pledged. Such is the policy of Great Britain, a monarchy, with millions of her volunteers offering and losing their lives in the trenches, with her cities under constant bombardment, and with the war at her doors, with her very existence hanging in the balance. Yet we in the most democratic government on earth, with no invading force on our shores and separated by the great ocean from the scene of conflict, are told that we must resort to conscription at the very beginning.

Will not such a policy, so at variance with our history and so suddenly set up, create the impression that our people are being forced into the war against their will?

The supporters of conscription, unable to withstand the arguments against them, resort invariably to the assertion that the President wants it, and seek to substitute a eulogy of him for a defense of their plan. I shall not be influenced by such fallacious argument. I deem it my duty under the oath I have taken to vote my honest convictions on the real merits of the question. I am at all times ready to accord to the counsel of the President as the head of the Nation and the leader of my party the consideration it should command. I recognize that in legislative work compromises are sometimes indispensable to the passage of beneficent legislation, and when it is proper to do so I am ready always to yield something of my individual views. But there are times when the issues involved are so vast and vital that each Representative owes it to the country to cast his vote in accordance with his own convictions, guided by his own judgment. Such, as I view it, are the issues in this bill. I favor the volunteer system proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, but if we are to adopt the conscription method I will not stultify myself by making an exception the confessed purpose of which is to gratify the ambition of one man.

Keep Business Going for Our Country's Sake.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 17, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include report of an editorial from John Wanamaker's advertisement published in the New York Post April 21.

The report is as follows:

KEEP BUSINESS GOING FOR OUR COUNTRY'S SAKE.

Our country prosperous can pay our war costs as they come and have enough left over to aid our allies.

Our country unprosperous, with business halting, money hoarded through fear or false economy, will be hard pressed to keep food on the table and clothing on the back.

"Keep business going" is a patriotic slogan. Keep money in circulation. Keep employment for everybody. Keep wages good. Keep on making money that we may have money to spend for war sacrifices.

The worst thing that could happen to the world these days would be a business depression in our United States.

War in itself does not cause business depression.

The billions of dollars of money to be expended in war preparations will be put into circulation in our own country, and this in itself will create new wealth for use in the world struggle for humanity.

The one thing that might halt business now is an unpatriotic psychological feeling of panic and a false idea of patriotic economy.

PATRIOTIC ECONOMY.

Patriotic economy means the elimination of waste and extravagance. It means the conservation of our food products, our natural wealth, our health, our energies, our labor, our very lives. It means putting more efficiency in everything we do so that each unit of money, energy, and intelligence may accomplish the utmost.

Patriotic economy does not mean the lowering of America's standard of living, which would make us less efficient physically and mentally, nationally and individually, and would kill the spirit and the will to do the truly self-sacrificing things to be done.

Cities and communities must go on with their civic improvements. Road building and public works must proceed. Railroads must renew their equipment. Factories must be kept going to their full capacity. Labor must be employed. Homes must be kept up. Merchandise must be produced, distributed, and used. War duties and war expenditures must be in addition to peace duties and peace expenditures. The more we do the more we can do. The more money we spend the more we will have in our pockets to spend. Money creates money.

In a word, the natural sane life of the country must proceed as though we were not at war, in order that we may have the necessary prosperity to promote the war to a quick and successful conclusion.

President Wilson sounds the keynote in this sentence: "It is evident to every thinking man that our industries, on the farm, in the shipyards, in the mines, in the factories, must be made more prolific and more efficient."

Our industries can be made more prolific only if the people buy and use the merchandise produced by our industries. Manufacturing slackens when business slackens. Manufacturing grows in a prolific way when business grows. And business can grow and remain healthful only when the people buy and keep money in circulation.

BUSINESS IS GOING STRONG.

Business is going—in the East, the West, the North, the South. The country is prosperous. Last month's increase in business was very large. Banks may wait in their operations until the Government bonds are assimilated. People may pause temporarily in their outfitting to arrange to meet the new conditions. But the unloosing of billions of dollars will unloose a flow of prosperity absolutely necessary to sustain the world's burden.

GOVERNMENTS SET THE PACE IN THEIR EXPENDITURES.

Individuals must not lag behind. Seven billions of dollars to pay is only $70 per capita in the United States. Yet seven billions of dollars put into work at 6 per cent—a fair estimate of the producing power of money—will create four hundred and twenty millions of new wealth.

The income tax we pay will not be a tax on prosperity, but a spur to prosperity. Every dollar the individual pays out will come back to him with interest in the general prosperity of the people.

Keep business going—for our country's sake. War can not be waged and won without the sinews of war.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN Q. TILSON,

OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 17, 1917.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the net result of all the legislation we have been called into extra session to enact is to lay heavy burdens upon the people. The Army-increase bill places the burden of fighting the war upon the younger men. The $7,000,000,000 bond bill properly places upon posterity a portion of the burden of paying for the war. The $2,000,000,000 revenue bill now being considered levies upon those now living tax burdens that are grievous to be borne. The poor who are not affected directly by the imposition of taxes or are not of the sex or age to become soldiers nevertheless are burdened by the increase in the cost of living caused by the war. The burden of everyone has grown heavier, and the end is not yet.

In order to sustain the weight of the burdens thus imposed it is necessary to carefully conserve every possible resource. The most important of all our resources is man power. The young men are needed for the battle line. The older men are just as necessary to provide money, food, and material. Too little attention has been given to conserving the power of these older men.

It is a well-known fact that the most efficient and productive years of the life of a business or professional man are after he passes 45. To lose unnecessarily a single year of a life of ripened efficiency is an economic crime. One has only to look at the death notices of a newspaper to have brought home to him the distressing fact that too many men are dropping out between 45 and 65. It ought not to be so. A man who reaches 45 in a fair degree of bodily health should be good for 25 years more at least, barring accident, if he takes only reasonable care of himself.

It was thinking along this line in connection with the great demand being made upon the manhood of the country on account of the war that brought the great football authority, Walter Camp, to a consideration of this subject. As is well known, Walter Camp is not only the father and one of the natural guardians of football, but he is also a man of large business affairs, with a wide knowledge of business men. By reason of his close relationship to Yale University athletics he has observed at close range the physical development and perfection of youthful manhood. He has seen the same men grow older, many of them slowly or rapidly neutralizing or reversing the process of their development. In his association with other business or professional men of approximately his own age he has had abundant opportunity to observe their physical condition and too often premature decay.

As the war in Europe progressed and it became more and more apparent that there was grave danger of our becoming involved in it, Mr. Camp came to the conclusion that it would be a work well worth while to set about the task of attempting to lengthen and strengthen the effective years of mature men. All his life he had made a study of physical training and the handling of men. He believed the time would come when the physical condition of our more mature manhood would call for the introduction in government and civil life of a definite plan for meeting this problem. As his initial contribution to the working out of the problem he established in my home city, New Haven, an experimental school, giving it the name of the Senior Service Corps. It is based upon a number of fundamental propositions. Here are a few of them:

This country can ill afford to lose any of its most effective executives, either in the Government or among the manufacturing, transportation, and commercial interests, who are now, from a sense of public duty, offering their services to the Government in this emergency.

A large proportion of our most valuable men "behind the lines" at this time are 45 years of age or older. This is the climacteric with men as with women. These men upon whom the Government depends should be made fit and kept at the maximum of their efficiency.

It is unscientific and economically wasteful to treat men of 45 and over in the same way as men of military age. That is the reason why so many of the various attempts at misplaced enthusiasm are breaking down. There is a still more serious side to it. In many places men of 45 to 65 have been sent out on wild "hikes" of 10 miles or so with men of 25 to 35. Some of these older men have dropped out permanently injured.

Men of 45 and over are loyal and eager to be of service, whether they be men of large affairs or not.

A scientific conservation of this energy and a definite plan to bring it up and keep it at the highest point of efficiency is as necessary in this emergency as the development and training of troops, the production of food supplies, or the manufacture of ships and munitions, and should be carried along at the same time.

Upon the physical condition and fitness of such men depends the efficiency of every department of our Government, as well as the net value, over a continued period of time of those leaders in civil life who have so generously placed themselves and their energies in the service of the Government.

If some of these men sacrifice what has been their sole salvation against the health inroads of the last two years of commercial strain by still further giving up their relaxation and physical exercise, they will last scarcely six months.

The human machine is like any other machine, except that with the man physical exercise and relaxation is the lubricant.

If we run a machine faster or more hours, we must give it more oil; and if we make added calls upon the man, we surely can not expect to give him less physical exercise and relaxation if he is to last.

For this reason the Government should be deeply concerned in bringing about some method of conserving the energies and health of men over 45. The time was ripe for an experiment of this kind, and Mr. Camp's senior service corps was a success from the beginning. Over 100 men have been handled through a carefully prepared and considered course of training, which has in no way interfered with their business or professional pursuits. A list of the men upon whom this experiment has been tried demonstrates conclusively its scope, for in this squad of over 100 subjects the ages varied from 45 to 73, heights from 5 feet 4 inches to 6 feet 4 inches, and the weights from 116 pounds to 265 pounds. Without exception the men have become what the trainer calls "fit"; in other words, added to their physical well being, have performed all their tasks more easily, have reduced their waist measurements while increasing their chest measurements, are so much more erect in their bearing that their families and friends comment freely upon it, and, finally, while they are signed up for 90 days they now say they will keep it up indefinitely, even should peace be declared to-morrow.

Among those who have engaged and are now trying out this interesting experiment are such prominent leaders of New Haven as ex-President Taft; Col. I. M. Ullman, president chamber of commerce; Prof. Henry W. Farnam, of Yale University; Dean Frederick S. Jones, of Yale University; Henry B. Sargent, president of Sargent & Co.; ex-Mayor Fred B. Farnsworth; ex-Judge Livingston W. Cleaveland, and others. Secretary of War Baker has given it his unqualified approval as a means of putting in physical condition men past the military age. The General Electric Co. has applied for 100 of the books of instruction to start a squad there, and there are many other applications. It is being daily brought home to many communities that there must be some distinction between men under and over military age as to the method of training and drill, and this has been thoroughly recognized by the war departments of every country.

Mr. Camp contributes the result of a method already thoroughly tested and recommends that our Government take up this matter and correlate the many efforts, some well directed and others partially wasted, along one definite and tried-out line, upon which, as in a laboratory, a scientific test has been applied. The detail of this method is herewith appended:

First. The name. (For upon this depends the cumulative effect of united work throughout the country and the general recognition of a system, as such.)

The Senior Service Corps describes the organization as composed of men:

1. Above military age.
2. Who wish to be of service and will give time.
3. Who will act as a body not merely as individuals.

Second. The qualification.

1. Over 45 years of age.
2. Citizenship in United States of America.
3. Simple physical examination.
4. Willingness to devote an hour a day three days a week.

Third. The organization.

Must include among other officers:

1. A surgeon or physician to watch the condition of men.
2. A leader to direct the work.

Fourth. The detail of the work.

1. Ten to fifteen minutes' setting up drill or gymnastic work.
2. Forty-five to fifty minutes' outdoor work.

Of the former no part is severe, the results being accomplished by bringing gradually into play the forgotten or partially atrophied muscles, the strengthening of the muscles that produce an erect carriage, the increase of the resistive forces of the body, the opening up and deepening of the chest, the strengthening of the heart's action, the overcoming of the dropping of the abdominal viscera and the renewal of the response of the whole muscular system to will control.

The outdoor work is especially designed to supplement all this by giving plenty of fresh air for the increased lung capacity and the toning up of the heart action through walking, and the relief to the work of the kidneys by inducing moderate action of the skin. As the time is limited it is not possible to increase very materially the distance to be covered in a walk or march. The work can be increased through two satisfactory means, namely, a moderate amount of hill climbing and the carrying of weights. The latter is very simply arranged for and at slight expense. This is accomplished by giving each man in the later stages of the work a 3-foot long, 1 inch in diameter, iron bar to carry. Such a bar weighs 8 pounds—a little less than a service rifle. Perspiration is easily induced by means of this hill climbing and carrying of weights; and, if desired, a man of 45 in good condition can carry two of these bars all the way, while a man of greater age or in poorer condition can carry one bar only part way and then transfer it to another man of the same grade.

Fifth. The mental attitude.

This is of very vital importance, and has been made a distinct part of the system through the distribution to every man of the corps of cards.

It was found that the men came back for more of these cards whenever they were distributed, as other members of their families wished them in order to follow out the same regimen.

SUMMARY.

In summing up it should be said that this work is group patriotism of the highest kind, and is found far more effective than that of the individual. It is true that any one man could go through all these exercises and marching and carrying of weights. But it is a matter of common knowledge that, no matter how determined a single individual might be to keep it up, no man ever does by himself. The more groups there are carrying on such work the more the enthusiasm and high spirit of service increases. Finally, the force of the example of mature men following determinedly such a course of training is of incalculable value in developing the patriotism of the entire community, old and young alike, until the spirit of service and loyalty reaches an ideal height.

In a long letter giving, at my request, the details of his experiment, Mr. Camp closes with the following:

It may seem to go beyond the unique and trespass upon the extraordinary when I presume to make the following suggestion, but it would take but a single hour of the time of these gentlemen and would convince them how they themselves may better stand the strain of the trying days that are coming upon them. The suggestion is as follows:

Permit me to come to Washington and let me have as my football squad for one hour of a prearranged day—from 8 to 9 o'clock a. m.—President Wilson, Secretary Lansing, Secretary McAdoo, Secretary Baker, Attorney General Gregory, Postmaster General Burleson, Secretary Daniels, Secretary Lane, Secretary Houston, Secretary Redfield, and Secretary Wilson.

I will promise not to "scrimmage" them, but to take them through the hour's work. They will not make "touchdowns," but will shoulder again the burdens of state with renewed vigor. What they do they can then ask any man of 45 and over to do. It is not as nazardous as testing a submarine or an aeroplane, but it might prove as great a gain for our country in the long run.

Yours, very truly, WALTER CAMP.

In further extension of my remarks there are inserted the very brief constitution and by-laws, with a list of charter members, of the Senior Service Corps and sample cards of instruction and helpful suggestions.

The matter inserted is as follows:

SENIOR SERVICE CORPS.

CONSTITUTION.

Article I.

NAME.

The organization shall be known as the Senior Service Corps of New Haven.

Article II.

OBJECT.

The object of its formation is to provide that citizens whose age is beyond that of active military service or not by law subject to military duty, but who desire to be of aid to their Government, may be made as physically fit as possible.

In order to accomplish this, these gentlemen have bound themselves together and agree to follow a certain designated course of training for that purpose.

Article III.

MEMBERSHIP.

The membership of this organization shall be limited to citizens of the United States of America over 45 years of age.

Each member must sometime within a month previous to application have passed a physical examination.

Article IV.

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP.

Any citizen desiring to join the organization shall send to the secretary an application for membership in writing; said application to be submitted to the membership committee.

Article V.

OBLIGATION OF MEMBERSHIP.

Each member agrees to accept the rules of the organization.

Article VI.

GOVERNMENT.

This organization shall be governed entirely by its own constitution.

Article VII.

MANAGEMENT.

The management of this organization shall be entrusted to an executive committee, consisting of three members and the president (ex officio). They shall be elected for a term of 90 days. Vacancies in office may be filled by the executive committee.

Article VIII.

SPECIAL MEETINGS.

A special meeting may be called at the written request of any 10 members, provided that a notice be sent to every member at least 10 days before the date assigned for such meeting.

Article IX.

REPRESENTATION AT MEETINGS.

At all meetings each member shall be entitled to only one vote. No voting by proxy shall be allowed.

Article X.

AMENDMENTS.

No addition, alteration, or amendment shall be made to this constitution at any meeting, except by a two-thirds vote of those present. At least five days' notice of any such proposed change must be given to the secretary, of which due notice shall at once be sent to the members.

BY-LAWS.

Article I.

The officers of this organization shall be a president, a vice president, a secretary, a treasurer, a surgeon, and the following committees: Executive committee, finance committee, publicity committee, membership committee. They shall hold office for 90 days and shall be elected by a majority vote of all members present at first meeting.

Article II.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

SECTION 1. The president shall preside at all meetings of the organization and of the executive committee, appoint all subcommittees, audit and approve all bills, and order meetings of the executive committee or organizations whenever in his judgment he may deem it necessary.

SEC. 2. The secretary shall keep the minutes of the organization and of the executive committee, and shall conduct the correspondence, and shall have charge of and be responsible for all books and papers except those of the treasurer.

SEC. 3. The treasurer shall collect and have charge of all moneys belonging to the organization, shall pay all bills when properly approved, and submit a report thereof to the organization every 30 days, or whenever called upon to do so.

SEC. 4. All bills shall be presented by the president and shall be audited by him; in case of approval, he shall affix his signature and date of approval. After such approval the treasurer shall be authorized to pay by check.

SEC. 5. The surgeon shall have oversight over the physical condition of all the members so far as the amount and quality of the work are concerned and shall have final authority in discontinuing the work of any member.

Article III.

The executive committee shall assume entire control of the general detail of the work.

Article IV.

SECTION 1. All members shall be subject to the orders of the officers.

SEC. 2. Members shall not absent themselves from roll call without sending excuse.

SEC. 3. Members shall be ready for roll call at the Yale gymnasium at 8 o'clock a. m. Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

ROSTER OF CHARTER MEMBERS.

M. Ullman, A. L. Underwood, W. A. Warner, S. G. Weed, L. S. Welch, H. White, A. B. Woodford, W. A. Wright.

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS FOR TRAINING.

Clothing: All wear what you would ordinarily wear for walking. No tight collars, however.

Shoes and stockings: Wear those you are accustomed to. Do not put on extra thick ones just because you are going to train. With the moderate amount of walking in the first week or so there is no call for any change in footwear.

Smoking: Don't smoke anything till after your morning's walk.

Water: Drink all you like half an hour before breakfast but no drinking with meals. Drink half an hour before any meal or two hours after.

Eating: Eat as you are accustomed to, but gradually cut down on rich foods.

Alcohol in any form: Preferably none, but at any rate cut out all cocktails.

Rub down: If convenient, a shower and rub down, but this is not necessary. If a man goes direct to work after walking, he should keep a dry undershirt at the office and a rough bath towel. Rub down on return and put on the dry undershirt. This will not occupy more than four or five minutes.

Keep a pair of dry socks and an extra pair of shoes at the office and put on the dry socks and shoes when you come in.

Blister: If you should get a blister, put a corn plaster or bunion plaster over it with the opening over the blister and fasten it firmly with two strips of surgeon's plaster over the ends but not covering the opening.

SPECIAL SUGGESTIONS ON HOW TO BE FIT.

Drink without eating and eat without drinking.

Five glasses of water a day, none with meals, will make you free of the doctors.

Warm feet and a cool head need no physician.

A bath, cold if you please, hot if you must, with a good rub, starts the day right.

If you will save your smoke till after luncheon, you'll never have smoker's heart.

Wearing the same weight underclothing the year around will save you a lot of colds.

Dress cool when you walk and warm when you ride.

Your nose, not your mouth, was given you to breathe through.

Clean skin, clean socks, clean underwear every day.

Don't sit still with wet feet. Walk until you have a chance to change.

Never let a day pass without covering 4 miles on foot.

See how high you can hold your head and how deeply you can breathe whenever you are out of doors.

Hot water quick is the best thing for a sprain.

Short shoes and shoes that don't fit cost a lot in the long run.

Getting mad makes black marks on the health.

Envy, jealousy, and wrath will ruin any digestion.

When you rob the trolley company of a nickel by walking you add a dime to your deposit of health.

You'll never get the gout from walking.

Sleep woos the physically tired man, she flouts the mentally exhausted.

The best record in golf is the record she has made of restored health to the middle aged.

Tennis up to the thirties, but golf after forty.

Nature never punished a man for getting his legs tired. She has punished many for getting their nerves exhausted.

Two hours of outdoor exercise by the master never yet made him overcritical of the cook.

Don't ask the heart to pump extra blood to the brain all day and then to an overloaded stomach all night.

Tight shoes have sent many a man to bed with a cold.

Leg weariness never yet produced brain fag.

Loose clothes, loose gloves, easy shoes spell comfort and health.

No wise athlete stands still after exercise without putting something over him.

Open windows don't make half as many colds as closed ones do.

Too many drinks at the nineteenth hole undo all the good of the other 18.

The best way to use the Sunday supplement is to stick it under your vest while you walk an hour against the wind and then come home and read it.

Blood pressure does not come to the men who walk a lot out of doors; instead it looks for those who sit and eat a lot indoors.

Many a man finds too late that his motor car has cost him more in health and legs than it has in tires and gasoline.

A four or five mile walk daily makes your credit at the bank of health mount up steadily.

Nature won't stand for overdrafts any more than your bank.

The men who chase the golf ball don't have to pursue the doctor.

You never saw a dog fill his mouth with food and then take a drink to wash it down.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

Ten corps dont's: Dont shirk, don't talk, don't worry, don't explain, don't knock, don't kick, don't quit, don't loaf, don't lag, and don't rush.

You can be: Prompt, alert, quiet, determined, steady, helpful, unselfish, considerate, gracious, observant, brave, and clean.

You can own: A clean body, a clean mind, fresh air, and good water.

You can't be taxed on: Cleanliness, perspiration, walking, and deep breathing.

You can do without: Profanity, obscenity, anger, and envy.

You don't need money to be: Happy, healthy, hopeful, and hearty.

You can be master of: Self-control, self-respect, self-belief, and self-restraint.

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS.

Vacillation and doubt are poison to the nerves.

Two men in an eight-oared shell may be able to go faster than the other six, but they never win the race that way.

Don't disgrace the uniform.

"Eyes in the boat" is as good a maxim at drill as in a shell.

Success comes from service.

The leader may be no better man than you, but some one must give the orders and set the pace.

Don't make excuses. Make good.

Stand straight, think straight, march straight, and the rest will take care of itself.

Worry makes cowards.

If you feel tired, remember so does the other man.

Fear is the forerunner of illness.

Coordination in the individual means cooperation in the squad.

Happiness comes from health, not from money.

In a squad it is the job of each individual to make himself fit, for it is his example that helps the rest.

After a hearty meal stand up straight for 15 minutes.

Cooperation with others is the life of a squad.

When drinking a glass of water stand erect and take a full breath first, then drink with chest out and hips back and head up.

Your squad is only as good as the poorer ones. Don't be one of those.

Whenever you walk, stand up with chin in, hips back, and chest out, and think how tall you are.

The success of any drill depends upon the concentration of each man of the squad.

If you have a stake in life it is worth playing the game for all there is in it.

Drill is a mental as well as a physical discipline.

Courage and concentration will conquer most obstacles.

The man who gets things is the one who pulls up his belt a hole tighter and goes out after them.

Work will take your mind off most of your ills.

The hurry of half a squad never brought the whole troop home.

Two things are essential to a clean skin; one is bathing and a rub down, but the other is still more important, and that is perspiration.

Washing out the impurities from within through the pores of the skin takes the undue load of work off the kidneys.

An army must have legs and a good stomach quite as much as arms and ammunition.

Preparedness is nine-tenths physical strength and endurance.

Food, water, and oxygen are the fuel for running the human machine.

Obesity comes from overloading the stomach and underworking the body.

Nature said, "You must earn your living by the sweat of your brow," and if you earn that living in some other way you must get the sweat or she will make you pay.

If you take more food than the digestion can handle you not only tire the stomach but the whole system.

Nine-tenths of "the blues" come from a bad liver and lack of outdoor exercise.

Full, deep breathing, drinking plenty of water, and keeping the skin active will keep most people out of the doctors' hands.

Sample letter sent in response to numerous inquiries:

SENIOR SERVICE CORPS,
New Haven, Conn., ——— ———, 1917.

I most heartily appreciate your interest and cooperation, and I am glad to give you the information you ask. The course of training will take about 90 days and will not materially interfere with the business of the candidates.

The plan as outlined is to put in operation the system at one point, New Haven, and as soon as possible thereafter to make distribution of schedules of the work to other points. If you will organize at once a local committee and send the names of the committee and its secretary and surgeon to me, your section will be placed upon a list to receive as early as possible the detail of the method, which will be a reasonable course of training, leading with careful graduations to physical fitness. Each section or division will be expected to choose its own leaders, we from here furnishing detail of the work only, all organization plans to be left to local men.

Immediate action is essential in order to expedite the work of distributing the details as to the course of training. As soon as you send the names of the committee your secretary will be put upon the list to receive the forms. Meantime you will not need to delay the work of enrollment and the collection of the following data:

Statement of Amos Pinchot Before Senate Finance Committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM GORDON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 17, 1917.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the statement of Amos Pinchot before the Senate Finance Committee on May 15, 1917, representing the American Committee on War Finance.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT OF AMOS PINCHOT BEFORE THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE ON MAY 15, 1917, REPRESENTING THE AMERICAN COMMITTEE ON WAR FINANCE.

Senator SIMMONS and gentlemen, I represent the American Committee on War Finance. Our object is to get you gentlemen to have this war paid for as it goes along largely by a tax on surplus incomes.

This committee is, as you know, a recent organization. It was formed just before war was declared. We issued a declaration of principles and a pledge, advertised a little in the newspapers, and wrote letters to some prominent people. In a few days we got together a group, including lawyers, editors, writers, civic and business men's associations, labor and farm organizations and leaders, a governor of the Federal Reserve Board bank, the chairman of the New York Civil Service Commission, and so on. To-day, I think I am well within the facts when I say, that the organizations, which have already passed resolutions indorsing our plan and offering cooperation and support, contain several million people.

Since our committee was formed, we have had each day an enormous mail, letters from prominent people and people less prominent, from all over the country. They have expressed their belief that the war can not be either justly or efficiently carried on unless people who do not fight but have plenty of money are made to realize their responsibility and forced to give to the Government the use of their wealth, at least to the extent of a heavy tax on large incomes.

We have had little organization; the main work of the committee has been conducted from my office at 60 Broadway, New York City. Our funds have been very limited, as we have found, strange as it may appear, that most rich people are not enthusiastic about backing a project that means heavier taxation on themselves. Yet we have had an overwhelming response and, if we have another month to work in, I believe we will get, to indorse our demand upon you gentlemen for equitable financing of this war, all the labor and farm organizations in the country, three-fourths of the civic and business associations; in fact, the demand for a pay-as-you-go war, financed by the people who can do so without great sacrifice, will become not merely what it is now, a broad national demand, but a literally universal one. The people, Mr. Chairman, are solidly behind the movement.

In the last few days we have had resolutions from business, political, and labor organizations, composed of some 500,000 people of good standing. I refer particularly to the resolutions of the four railroad brotherhoods passed on Saturday afternoon, and to those of the city council of Cleveland, Ohio, and to a large number of scattered industrial unions that have sent us the record of their indorsement.

Mr. Chairman, I want to protest quite vigorously against some of the tariff taxation contained in the Ways and Means Committee bill. The ordinary people of the United States are not in a position to be further taxed. They should not be further taxed, and they can not be without their feeling dissatisfied with the Government, and especially with this Congress.

Let me show you what I mean. In 1914 I had made for me by statisticians in New York and Washington a comparison between the incomes of ordinary people and the cost of living from 1900 to 1914. I found that in that time incomes—I mean by this wages, salaries, the earnings of small people—had gone up about 27 per cent. The cost of living, figured out in food, fuel, clothing, rent, and household utensils, had gone up in the same years about 40 per cent. In other words, from 1900 up to the outbreak of the war, the average man's income was certainly increasing; but, notwithstanding this fact, he was actually growing poorer. He received more money for his work or from his business or for his services, but with that money he could buy less of the necessaries of life.

This, Mr. Chairman, is not a matter of speculation. It is a matter of mathematical certainty. Not long ago I was talking with the general counsel of one of our very large industrial corporations. I told him about my investigation of wages and the cost of living, and asked him what he thought about it. He told me that he had just completed a survey of wages and cost of living among his thousands of employees for the last 10 years. He said the result of his survey was precisely the same as the one my statisticians had arrived at. He said that his employees, though they did not realize it themselves on account of getting a fatter pay envelope, had grown steadily poorer in purchasing power and were still growing poorer.

Since the war this situation has grown acute. The cost of living has gone up much faster than ever before. No doubt it will go on going up. Since the war the average man's expense account has still more rapidly outstripped his earning power. Increases in wages and small incomes have been insignificant compared to the rise in prices. That is why our committee protests against the House bill, which intends to raise a thousand millions of dollars this year from taxes taken out of the pocket of the consumer. I will refer you later to figures which prove in detail what I have said generally.

Mr. Chairman, something is happening in the United States that can not help having a serious influence upon the country. While the country is getting rich, the people are getting poor. The average American is steadily losing his purchasing power. In other words, wealth is being concentrated in the hands of a comparatively few rich people. In other words again, the great genius and energy of the Nation has not during the last few years, benefited the average citizen. We have had a class as opposed to a popular prosperity.

We have got to face this. You have got to face it. You ought to face it now, when you are making up your budget to raise money to carry on the war. The people of the United States have become informed on this subject, and they know what they are up against. They want you as their representatives to help them out.

The revenue bill which you are considering does not seem to me to be a measure representing the necessities of the situation. There is no reason for burdening the consumer, who is already overburdened. It is estimated that the income tax in Great Britain will yield at least $1,000,000,000, which is about $750,000,000 more than it yielded before the war. In the year ending March 31, 1916, the huge sum of £205,033,000 was raised by income taxes. Your bill only intends to raise $532,000,000 in new income taxes. It is estimated that the British excess-profits tax will yield $700,000,000 this year. You only intend to raise $200,000,000 in that way. The population of Great Britain is about 46,000,000; its total wealth, including Ireland, is about $85,000,000,000. Our population is 100,000,000 and our total wealth is estimated from $187,000,000,000 to $230,000,000,000. Certainly it seems as if we ought to be able to raise as much by an income tax, when we are strong and unexhausted, as England can in the third year of the war.

It is true that England does not tax her largest incomes adequately, although through the profits tax and income tax together the percentage is far higher than anything contemplated in the House bill. But England distinguishes between earned and unearned incomes and taxes the latter very heavily. She also taxes medium incomes much more than the House bill provides, which I think is unwise.

It seems to me that the House bill is undemocratic, unjust to the poor, and unbusinesslike. It bears on the wrong man, discourages the people who must fight the war, and it throws barbed wire into the business machine and taxes it at the wrong end. If Great Britain can raise $1,000,000,000 from incomes without disturbing business, the United States ought to be able to raise $1,500,000,000 or $2,000,000,000 in that way without disturbing business. If Great Britain can put on a $700,000,000 excess-profits tax without disturbing business, we ought to be able to put on a $1,400,000,000 excess-profits tax without disturbing business. What is the matter with American business that it should be disturbed so much more easily than British business by income and profits taxes? And, on the other hand, why should we impose on American business an unscientific and haphazard horizontal increase in the raw materials that industry uses?

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, confessed that he would vote for the revenue bill with his eyes shut, and that the horizontal increase of 10 per cent on imports already paying a tariff tax and on all articles now on the free list was unscientific and indefensible.

Before the revenue bill becomes a law there should be ability enough in the House and the Senate to make it scientific and defensible, for it will have to be defended on the stump by those who impose this tax in their effort to secure reelection from those upon whom its burden falls.

Evidently the Ways and Means Committee underestimates the patriotism of the business men of the country in considering them unwilling to pay heavy income taxes. It is true the protests have been most bitter at the unscientific tinkering with present productive enterprises, especially in this horizontal increase of tariff rates, including taxes on raw materials. But in my opinion the patriotic business men of the country are willing to contribute heavily from profits and incomes as long as his productive energies are allowed to function properly. He is willing to be milked if you don't kill the cow.

Take the single item of a 10 per cent tax on hides, now on the free list. Shoe manufacturers contend that this will produce a comparatively small revenue for the Government, while enabling the Beef Trust to raise their prices on hides automatically 10 per cent; and that the export shoe business will be brought to an end, thus crippling an enterprise which would produce large revenues directly to the Government through taxes on incomes and excess profits. At the other end of the line the consumer, who is already paying in the neighborhood of 100 per cent more for shoes, must add not only the 10 per cent increase on hides but an additional increment of taxation for every stage of handling between the manufacturer and the consumer.

The 3 per cent increase in freight rates again automatically makes a readjustment of all business contracts necessary, and by the time the increase reaches the consumer it will have multiplied itself several times, thus making a horizontal raising of the cost of living, already mountain high. Again, a 10 per cent tax on passenger rates will, of course, be felt by the man who has to travel for business or chooses to do so for pleasure; but it means a tremendous increase in the expenses of the business man with drummers upon the road.

The same thing is true in the increase in postal rates. To increase the cost of sending letters one-third, when everyone knows that the 2-cent postage on letters already more than pays the cost of distribution, tends again to decrease production.

It is to be hoped that the House, through independent action, or if the House should weakly consent to pass the compromise measure because it received a unanimous report from the Ways and Means Committee, that the Senate will lift the burden of taxation from consumption and place it upon large incomes and profits.

A curious plexus of circumstances lies immediately before us, Mr. Chairman. The public is going to be subjected to conscription. We are going to confiscate the lives of our young men for this war, and at the same time that this confiscation goes on the public is going to be pinched by poverty, probably by hunger, in the near future. We are up against a very serious crisis, that demands extraordinarily careful and wise action.

The poor man who goes to the front is not going to be happy or easy in his mind if he realizes that the rich man, who is too old to fight or in a position so important that he will not be asked to fight, is only going to make a mighty small and insignificant sacrifice. Mr. Chairman, it is more for a man to give his life than it is to give all his money, capital as well as interest. It is more for a man with a family to give $40 from his $3,000 income than it is for a man with a million dollars a year to give all of that million dollars and some of his capital to boot. Why? Because when the $3,000 a year man gives some of his income he gives the meat and bread, the shoes and clothes of his children, the coal and rent, his wife's dress, the movie show, and the little luxury that makes life a little less hard on him and those he loves. But the millionaire does not have to give those things, not even if you split his fortune in two. Mr. REAVIS put it well debating the bill in the House last week. He said:

"You are taking a great deal, so far as actual dollars and cents are concerned, but in the proportionate sacrifice that the men who pay it will make, you are taking a great deal more from the married man with $2,000 who has a family to support than you are from the $10,000,000 man.

"The man with an income of $2,000 whom you tax has to pay this tax from the very necessities of life, while the man with the income of $10,000,000 is paying that income out of funds that he can use only in the way of investment. The relative sacrifice is not to be compared."

Mr. Chairman, I think that we are inclined to underestimate the determination of the people to have this war justly financed. I also think you overestimate the opposition that a real income and a real excess-profits tax would develop on the part of rich people. Rich people will soon realize, if they haven't already, that we are in war, and that war is neither a tea party nor a directors' meeting. They will see men and boys go to the front to die, and they will be ashamed of ever having had a thought or a wish to oppose giving every cent they can raise to back up those men and boys. They will see women and children starving in the next year and men, too. And they will have to go the whole way in giving their money to fight war abroad and suffering at home. They should and must be taxed to pay for the war simply because they have money and can part with a lot of it without acute physical or mental suffering. God knows the sacrifice of those of us who have money will be trivial enough when compared with that of the vast majority of the public who will do the fighting, make the supplies, raise the food, and be the Nation's backbone until the war is over and afterwards. They are the people that this bill should consider; they are the people that this Government in all its branches should represent; they are the people, in fact, who maintain the Government; and we must remember that they do not maintain it for the purpose of being governed by it, but in order to govern themselves through it.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, I would like to call your attention to the fact that extreme poverty caused by the war, joining with the additional rise in the cost of living which this bill will bring about, will precipitate a situation where the proceeds from taxation on the consumer may seriously disappoint you. The House bill may not raise a thousand millions or anything like it. People won't spend money unless they have it. They won't spend it to buy things at prohibitive prices. But you can always tax the people who have money. Their incomes are a sure and safe source of war revenue. England has learned this. We will learn it. Why not learn it now?

The fact is that we have been rather extravagant here in America. Our people have maintained, apparently for social or ornamental purposes, a very large number of multimillionaires. This past year, according to tax returns, there were twice as many people with an income of over a million dollars a year as there were the year before.

Two per cent of the people in the United States own 65 per cent of the wealth. But of those who will fight in this war probably much less than one in a hundred will be men of means. For less than one-half of 1 per cent of our people have, up to date, been rich enough to pay an income tax. If our wealthy classes are to make a substantial contribution, it must be through paying very large income and profit taxes.

WAR, PRICES AND INCOMES.

Index figures published in the April Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics indicate that even in the field of organized labor there has not been a large raise in wages compared to the raise in the cost of living. The Review says:

"The index numbers appear in the following table, where it will be seen that, while wage rates have increased materially and hours of labor have slightly decreased since 1907, the retail prices of food have advanced to a much greater extent, especially in 1916, thus reducing the purchasing power of wages."

In the general field of organized labor between 1912 and 1917 an estimate that wages had increased 18 per cent would be an extravagant one. I have found no estimate as high as that. The Review of Labor Statistics for April, 1917, says that wages increased nine points from 1912 to 1916, while retail food prices went up 20 points. As to the incomes of professional people—teachers, clerks, shopkeepers, farmers, etc., I could not get any broad or definite statistics; there are none. But from such as there are, and from talking with them, it seems pretty evident that there has been a fairly small increase in their incomes in the last few years. Since I have been working on the Committee on War Finance we have had numberless letters from teachers, professors in universities, and men and women in salaried positions, small-business men, stating that they have practically had no increase in income during the last few years and that being taxed to pay for the war will be a very serious hardship.

Let us look at the other side of the shield and see how the cost of living has gone up.

War conditions and war prices have already placed the average American in a financial position where he can not decently be asked to pay for the war.

The New York Times Annalist of April 23, 1917, publishes a table showing "index numbers" of the increase in the cost of living in the last two years. It explains the table as follows: "The Annalist index number shows the fluctuations in the average wholesale price of 25 food commodities selected and arranged to represent a theoretical family's food budget." Here are the figures:

For April 24, 1915, index number is 154.
For April 22, 1916, index number is 166.
For April 21, 1917, index number is 270.

In other words, the 25 most common and necessary articles of family use have almost doubled in price in the last two years.

Dun's index figures show similar price increases, as follows:

Between April 1, 1914, and April 1, 1917, dairy and garden products increased 84 per cent; meat, 46 per cent; clothing, 49 per cent; metals, 69 per cent; and foodstuffs, 105 per cent.

A few days ago the Old Dutch Market Co. (Inc.), of Washington, D. C., which operates a large string of stores, selling meats, canned goods, eggs, vegetables, etc., published a comparison of prices in April, 1914, and April, 1917. It deals in all with 60 table necessaries. The average increase on all items listed is 85.32 per cent during that period.

As a corollary to this we have the report issued on April 26 of the food committee appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. "Interesting figures were obtained," says the committee, "from the proprietors of some of the smaller stores, whose business is with the poorer people. They show clearly that the poor have been compelled to resort to the strictest economy in order to provide food on account of high prices. Their purchases are of the cheapest possible articles and in smaller quantities than heretofore. The sale of ordinary cuts of meat in this class of stores seems to have been discontinued, and the meat now purchased consists of hog livers, hog kidneys, neck bones, hog faces, etc."

Following the food riots in New York, Miss Helen M. Todd was appointed to make an investigation of the effect on school children of the high cost of food. She reported last week that in the poorer districts diet has been so cut down that the children's scholarship has suffered materially through malnutrition, and that public-school teachers complain that the children are unable to maintain their grades.

The Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics for April, 1917, tells the same story. In the four years from February 15, 1913, to February 15, 1917, flour increased in price 69 per cent, eggs 61 per cent, potatoes 224 per cent. A 16-ounce loaf of bread cost on February 15, 1914, $0.055; on February 15, 1915, $0.063; on February 15, 1916, $0.062, and on February 15, 1917, $0.071. Bread to-day is 10 cents a loaf. As this goes to press wheat is $3 a bushel in the western markets.

As to coal, the Black Diamond Magazine and the Coal Trade Journal show that the average retail price of anthracite range coal in New York was $5 a ton in January, 1915, and $8.75 a ton in January, 1917. Soft coal at the mines was from $0.80 to $1.65 a ton in December, 1914, and from $4.75 to $6.50 a ton in January, 1917; this in the face of yearly increasing output.

Take one particular item—shoes. I could give you quite definite statistics on shoes. I will quote from the Shoe Retailer, the leading periodical of the shoe trade. Its issue of March 24 contains a symposium on the subject from leading manufacturers throughout the country. I will hand in a copy of excerpts from it. Mr. James Coward, of the great retail store of New York, says, "A staple shoe that we sold at $3.95 two years ago sells to-day for $6.50." Mr. Coward said that the increase in price within the next year would be even greater and would begin to climb at once. He said that kid skin that sold a year ago for 32 cents a foot now sells at 80 cents.

Where, then, has the Nation's prosperity gone since the world-war began—into whose pockets? And, above all, where may we find the accumulations of wealth which may now be taxed to pay for the war with the least hardship or injustice to the public?

The following figures, selected almost at random from the great list of industrial corporations that have profited by war times may suggest the answers to the above questions. They may also indicate the economic conditions which lie below the fact, reported by Prof. King, of the University of Wisconsin, that 2 per cent of the people of the United States own 65 per cent of the country's total wealth.

Taking 24 of the principal companies listed above and comparing their earnings in 1914 and 1916, we find in these two years an increase of 500 per cent, and these increases may be expected to continue. For instance, the steel corporations' last quarter's earnings, just published, would indicate that; for, if the percentage is maintained for the whole year, the net sum applicable to dividends for 1917 should be about $450,000,000.

Comparing the increased earnings and the increased stock values of two of these corporations, we get a still more concrete idea of the increased wealth which offers the country a ready source of war taxation:

United States Steel Corporation.

Net earnings, 1914	$23,496,768
Net earnings, 1916	271,531,730
Increase	248,034,962
Average market value of outsanding stock in 1914	682,648,282
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1916	961,181,378
Increase	278,533,096

Bethlehem Steel Corporation.

Net earnings, 1914	$5,590,020
Net earnings, 1916	43,593,968
Increase	38,003,948
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1914	17,536,690
Average market value of outstanding stock in 1916	106,112,130
Increase	88,575,440

RAILROADS.

Shareholders of railroads have also improved their position as investors since the war began.

In 1913 the net operating revenue ran approximately from $275 a mile in January to $300 a mile in December. In 1916 the net operating revenue ran approximately from $337 a mile in January to $550 in October.

The net revenue for railroads earning over a million dollars annually for the six months ending January 1, 1917, was practically $700,000,000, which is the largest profit in the history of American railroading.

COST OF SHOES.

Under the heading "Serious situation in children's shoes," the Shoe Retailer, the leading periodical of the shoe trade, runs in its issue of March 24, 1917, a symposium of the subject from leading manufacturers throughout the country.

A Pennsylvania producer writes:

"In other words, to give a practical illustration, we will take the misses' run of sizes; we sold, a year ago, misses' Goodyear welt shoes at $1.85. That shoe last season, that is, six months later, was advanced to $2.25 and is now $2.50. We had a cheaper grade in a welt that we sold at $1.60; that shoe was advanced last season to $1.80, and in December to $2, and is now $2.25. In other words, our better shoe was formerly sold by the retailer at $2.50 and now sells at $3.50, an advance of $1 a pair. The cheaper shoe was sold in some instances by the retailer as low as $2, but more generally at $2.25; that shoe now sells at $3, so there is an advance to the consumer of from 75 cents to $1 a pair.

"On McKay shoes there is about the same advance. Our $1.50 McKay shoe, which was the price a year ago, has been advanced at various intervals until now the price is $2.25. Last season the price was $2. Our cheaper grade of shoes, the one we sold for $1.20, we are selling to-day at $1.75, an advance of 55 cents per pair.

"On the growing girls' sizes, the advance is a little more than it is on the misses'. On the children's it is a little less, and on the 5–8 or small children's it is still less.

"We have made no radical changes in the use of materials. While we used a large quantity of composition soles, they have not been in all cases satisfactory. Of course, we are using a very large amount of horn-fiber counters and inner soles and various compositions are also used in the heels."

A New England manufacturer of children's cheap and medium-priced shoes writes, as follows:

"We think if retailers have been buying misses' and children's shoes that have been satisfactory from a point of service it would be much better for them and their customers to continue buying the same lines, paying the advance, and charging their customers in proportion to the advance over the cost. This we realize is going to be a great hardship for parents with four or five children, because it means an advance of fully $1.50 a pair over what they used to pay for the same grade of shoes. But at the same time there have been, and are being made to-day, a great many misses' and children's shoes that never should be allowed to be sold, because the people who buy them do not understand what to expect of their service by simply looking at them. The consequence is that where parents buy shoes for children made from sheepskin either in the top or vamp they are practically throwing so much money away, because the sheepskin will not give service."

Concerning the increases still to be expected, the same general article in the Shoe Retailer contained the following:

A Pennsylvania manufacturer writes:

"The increase in cost of our line will run 20 per cent to 25 per cent beyond our prices for spring, and at that they are lower than will be the case later on, as these figures are based on materials bought some time ago. As soon as these materials are exhausted, we will have to go into the market for more, and there is no doubt but we will have to advance our selling prices considerably."

From Ohio a manufacturer writes:

"In regard to our selling plans and ideas for fall we will say that our salesmen are on their territories with instructions to see all their regular customers first, not to permit any of them to overbuy, and to distribute the fall shoes from June 15 to August 1. They were also informed that we feel the prices, while high, will be considerably higher before the season advances many weeks."

On another page of the same number of the Shoe Retailer appeared this item:

"EVEN BABY SHOES ARE HIGH PRICED.

"Babies wear two kinds of shoes. First, moccasins and soft soles, not intended for wear when a baby is learning to walk, however. Next, the turn cack. The latter costs so much to make that a cack which formerly retailed at $1.25 must now sell for $2.50 to $3. The old $4.50 soft sole, of kid, patent, or lambskin, now wholesales at $6 to $8 a dozen pairs."

The following relative prices of this time and a year ago were procured to-day from James Coward, of James C. Coward, the great retail store of New York City:

"Men's and women's strong, serviceable shoes that sold for $6 a year ago retail now at $8.50, although we make them ourselves and sell at small retailer's profit.

"A stable shoe that we sold at $3.95 two years ago sells to-day for $6.50."

Mr. Coward said that the increases in prices within the next year would be even greater, and would begin to climb steadily at once.

Among interesting "side-light" facts Mr. Coward gave were these:

There are orders in this country now for 10,000,000 pairs of shoes to Europe.

It takes four cows to upholster one limousine.

Kid skin that sold a year ago at 32 cents a foot now sells at 80 cents, and it requires 5 feet to make one pair of men's shoes.

The Roosevelt Resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID A. HOLLINGSWORTH,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the burden of half that has been said to-day on this "Roosevelt resolution" seems to be centered on keeping the record of Members consistent with their past voting. This does not trouble me in the least. We may as well cease to expect consistency in its ordinary sense on the great questions involved in the present world's upheaval, kaleidoscopic in its changing from day to day. The jewel of consistency, to my mind, is simply acting in good faith all the time according to existing facts and an honest conviction of right and duty when called upon to act on any particular subject.

The President himself has set us an illuminating example of this kind. No one doubts his honesty; no one doubts his lofty ideals. And yet what a zigzag course of thought this Nation has followed since American volunteers in Mexico were ruthlessly shot down like dogs, and are still unavenged and the Government without an apology therefor, to our present condition of uncertainty, where, under other terms of the bill, we have abandoned the time-honored volunteer system of America and propose to raise an army of a half million by arbitrary conscription, and force them, willing or unwilling, to join in the trench fighting of far-away Europe to avenge wrongs not solely directed against our own beloved land and people. It is a humiliating reflection for red-blooded Americans.

And if this resolution be adopted to-day, judging from the many changes of mind and purpose on vital questions of public policy on the part of our honored President, it is quite within the range of possibility, and it would be perfectly consistent with his broad statesmanlike methods for him to again change his attitude on the subject of conscription without requiring the citizen, willing and anxious to volunteer in defense of his country, to wait for the iron hand of conscription to be laid upon him.

Evidently there has been a marked change in public sentiment on this subject; evidently, judging from the tenor of a number of patriotic speeches made here to-day by Members who have heretofore supported the conscriptive system, but now propose to vote for this resolution, there has been an awakening in this House. It is admittedly unique and exceptional, but Roosevelt himself is an exception. Outside of official position he is far and away the biggest figure in American life to-day. Radical conscription leaders are getting their eyes open and are beginning to look with toleration upon the proposal to send Col. Roosevelt to Europe backed by an army of American volunteers, real soldiers, none under the age of 25 years, and all anxious and willing to follow him as an ideal leader. No one suggests a conscript army for this expedition. Everyone realizes that it is a work for men, not for civic slackers or army shirks.

And yet, strange inconsistency, under other provisions of this bill conscription is to become the future permanent policy of the Republic. Nothing but a presidential veto can now prevent this basic change in our governmental policy. It has the O. K. stamp of the General Staff, and nothing short of a miracle, such as brought a change of heart to Saul of Tarsus, can be expected to divert the present head of the War Department from his purpose.

And suggestions against carrying out this resolution, if adopted, have been made on the floor of the House by one of the ablest leaders on the Democratic side, Mr. FITZGERALD, of New York, who expresses a hope that the President will ignore the Roosevelt resolution entirely and go on with conscription, overriding not only the expressed will of Congress, if it shall adopt it, but the plain wishes of the plain people of America, who hope yet to avert the destruction of their cherished ideals of government by the abandonment on the part of their officials, high and low, of all militaristic leanings.

I have more faith in President Wilson than to think of him trying thus to usurp the powers of Congress and the people, although, led by the General Staff of the Army and by a civilian Secretary of War, his changing attitude on military questions since his reelection on the plea that he kept us out of war has been most strange and remarkable. I believe he wishes, in good faith, to stand with the plain people, and it is possible if this resolution be adopted he will heed the warning as a danger signal to stop, look, and listen as though approaching a dangerous railroad crossing, and thus save the Republic from disaster and government of, by, and for the people from perishing from the earth.

But, whether so or not, I feel it to be my duty, from every angle of reasoning, to vote for this resolution. It will preserve the volunteer system from total abandonment. It will keep before the American people the distinction between a volunteer and a conscript army; yea, more, when the war closes and the armies of the Republic face disbandment, the superiority of the former over the latter will have been so emphasized by achievements under Col. Roosevelt that in the calm which follows war conditions there may be ready acquiescence in a safe, sane, and sensible return to the traditions and ideals of the Republic, from which I fear we are now dangerously drifting.

I shall vote for the resolution because I believe in the right of every citizen of proper age and health to volunteer in defense of his country, without being compelled to submit to the haphazard chance of being drafted with unwilling shirks and slackers.

I shall vote for it because I believe Col. Roosevelt to be the one incomparable character among the big men of the Nation, who unselfishly offers his services to the country in a war for which he is in no wise responsible by acts of commission or omission on his part.

I shall vote for him because he is a man among men, a leader of leaders, one whom neither slackers nor shirks can deceive. He knows men, and in accepting volunteers knows how to winnow the chaff from the grain, separate the thoroughbred from the cob. A slacker at home will be a shirk in the Army; like an unruly horse, you can force him to the trough but you can not make him drink. Roosevelt has no use for such men in or out of the Army.

On the other hand, a willing citizen, alert at home to all the duties of good citizenship, will, if permitted to volunteer in defense of his country, carry with him all his manly, self-respecting attributes, and in the Army will take pride in being at his post of duty all the time without slacking or shirking. Such is the ideal soldier of Col. Roosevelt. Very little training is needed for such men; instinctively they seem to know what is expected of them, and if this resolution be adopted and Col. Roosevelt's wishes be respected, I predict the people will cease complaining of the slowness of Congress and the War Department and the Roosevelt volunteer divisions will be on the firing line fighting, like intelligent American volunteer soldiers always do, long before the red-tape drafting machinery gets started, and, in my judgment, the war will be over before any drafted man ever gets to see a German in arms.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am for Col. Roosevelt and a volunteer army.

Increase of Military Establishment by Allowing Col. Roosevelt to Raise Four Divisions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT H. VESTAL,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, the first great national character who lifted his voice for preparedness in this country was Theodore Roosevelt. To-day everyone admits if the Nation had heeded the warning sounded by him we would find ourselves in a much better position to wage a successful war. But, being at war with a powerful nation, we ought to act, and act as quickly as possible, in a manner best calculated to produce results, vindicate our rights upon the high seas, and prove to the world that American citizens must be protected in their lives and property everywhere.

When the President spoke to this body at the beginning of this session of Congress and told us how American property had been destroyed by the Imperial German Government in its ruthless submarine warfare, how American ships, no matter what the kind or character or what the destination or mission, were sunk without warning, destroying the lives of American citizens, men, women, and children; when he depicted to us how he had striven, by diplomacy, to avoid war and failed; and when he asked this Congress to declare that a state of war existed, the great majority of the people of this country said to us, "Stand by the President," and we did.

Then again, when we began to raise an army to make good our declaration, the President insisted that we should discard the traditional policy of our country in the raising of an army, the volunteer system, and inaugurate a new system called the selective draft, and the people again said, "Stand by the President," and many Members, against their better judgment, voted to give the President what he desired.

Then the President insisted that we appropriate billions of dollars, not only to equip and finance our own Army, but said we must have enough to loan our allies what they need. The people again said, "Stand by the President," and we did.

Like patriotic citizens we have stood by the President and sustained him in every proposition he has proposed. But to-day, this very hour, the American people are asking us to stand by the Republic and to vote to permit Col. Roosevelt to go to the front with the brave men who have enlisted under him, and I for one propose to support the wishes of the American people.

And why should not Col. Roosevelt be permitted to go? Will the opposition pin their protest to the flimsy argument that it shows favoritism? Or do they say it will interfere with the system of a selective draft? What the United States needs is an army of fighting men. A month has elapsed since we solemnly declared that a state of war existed between this country and Germany, yet Germany pursues her course of almost uninterrupted submarine warfare, sinking ships at a greater rate than they can be built, and making declarations, at least, that her battle lines are invincible, regardless of the fierce assaults made against them by the French and English.

While we have been trying in every conceivable way to get volunteers for the National Guard and the Regular Army, over in New York, without extensive advertising, without the aid of recruiting officers, Col. Roosevelt, because of his well-known, red-blooded Americanism, his personal magnetism, and his undaunted courage, has recruited an army of more than 200,000 men, equipped and financed without a dollar's expense to the Government, and is ready at a moment's notice to lead or go with that army of volunteers to the battle fields of France, to fight alongside the descendants of the immortal Lafayette for the rights of American citizens.

Furthermore, there is not a single man signed with Col. Roosevelt and accepted but who is without the age of the draft, and every man so signed and accepted having an annual income of from $2,500 to $50,000.

Do you charge favoritism in permitting an ex-President of the United States to recruit an army of 200,000 such men, equip and finance them, and go to the front to give his life, if need be, for his country?

I believe that upon these great questions this body is free from politics; I believe that every Member acts only for the best interests of his country as he sees it. God forbid that I should cast a vote upon any proposition in this great crisis except for the good of my country.

My judgment is that no single act of this Congress would create the enthusiasm or arouse American patriotism as much as would a resolution permitting Col. Roosevelt to lead his volunteer army to France.

To have such a force on the battle front of France, with Old Glory entwined with the French and English flags, led by an ex-President of the greatest Republic God ever let live, would not only encourage the men who have been fighting for more than two years in the trenches, but would strike terror to the heart of the Kaiser himself, and would, in my opinion, hasten the end of this terrible conflict.

It is the wish of the American people this hour. Shall we, as their Representatives, execute the will of the people, or bow to the demand of the Executive?

We are all patriotic, but some gentlemen have argued that sentiment plays no part in the success of armies in the field. In my judgment, sentiment plays an important part and has played an important part in every successful war that has been waged on either continent.

We need some sentiment to-day. We are engaged in a war with a nation 3,000 miles away. We are not being invaded at home. To protect our standing as a Nation, to vindicate our rights, to protect our property and the lives of our citizens upon the high seas, it will become necessary to transport troops across the ocean. Nothing, as I have said before, can or will awaken the American people to a sense of their patriotic duty so much as to have an ex-President of these United States lead a volunteer force on the battle field.

We need encouragement at home as much as the French and English need encouragement on the battle front. I am satisfied that this motion to recommit will pass and the Senate amendment be put back in the bill, and when it is I feel sure the President of the United States is big enough and patriotic enough to listen to the voice of the American people, through the Congress of the United States, and permit Col. Roosevelt to lead a division to France. If he does not heed the wishes of the American people he will receive their condemnation.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. MEDILL McCORMICK,
OF ILLINOIS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, May 17, 1917.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

CHICAGO, May 16, 1917.

To Hon. MEDILL MCCORMICK:

In reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday I noticed that in your speech on the revenue bill you say that none of the Chicago papers has protested to you against the increase in second-class postal rates or have expressed an opinion that even if they were imposed they would be unbearable.

I personally appeared before the Senate Finance Committee yesterday and protested against this proposed unjust and inequitable taxation. I showed that the Chicago Herald, for instance, under the provisions of the bill would pay thousands of dollars in new taxes to the United States Government. The increase in first-class postage would cost us between $4,000 and $5,000; on postal cards, over $1,000; on drafts, notes, checks, etc., $3,500; on insurance, over $100; the 3 per cent increase on freight bills, nearly $2,000; the 5 per cent on electricity, etc., $500; and the tax on telephone and telegraph messages, $1,500.

We will pay, in addition, 10 per cent more for all imported materials. The paper in which we wrap the Herald is up 300 per cent. The sisal rope with which we tie the bundles 90 per cent. Chemicals used in various processes from 25 to 430 per cent.

The proposed increase of 15 per cent in railroad charges also would be borne by us.

On top of this terrific increase in manufacturing cost the proposed increase in second-class postal rates would add a burden of $152,000, without taking into consideration the possibility that if the postal rates are advanced other transportation companies might follow suit. My paper bill for this year will be $400,000 in excess of last year, and if the 10 per cent duty on white print paper is imposed that will mean another $100,000, approximately. It is true the Chicago papers have recently raised their price to 2 cents in common with the newspapers of practically every city of any importance in America, with the exception of New York, but this increase barely takes care of the terrific burden we have been under in the last two years. To-day advertising is decreasing.

I think with your experience in the newspaper business you can easily see that the postal burden sought to be imposed will be the last straw on many a camel's back. And do not forget that the Herald, for instance, has contracts with 56,000 mail subscribers who have paid in advance, and the price we received was based on a 1-cent postal rate. We must supply these customers with the papers. If the proposed rate goes into effect, the postage on a thousand will be in excess of amount we have received for our product.

This is my personal protest. The other Chicago papers were represented in protest before the Senate Finance Committee in the person of Don Seitz, chairman of the postal rate committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, to which all the Chicago newspapers belong. Mr. Seitz spoke for every member of the association, and protested vigorously. I have talked to over 100 publishers in the last week. Their unanimous point of view, to which I subscribe, is this: Let the Government take any proportion or all of our profits, if necessary, but do not seriously cripple and put out of business a large proportion of this important industry. The proposed second-class postal increase is not a revenue-producing measure. It is a revenue-destroying measure.

I sincerely hope that you can give this statement publicity in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

JAMES KEELEY.

Resolutions Adopted By the Westchester County Commission of General Safety.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JAMES W. HUSTED,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, May 17, 1917.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include resolutions adopted at a meeting of the executive committee of the Westchester County Commission of General Safety held Monday, May 7.

The resolutions are as follows:

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Westchester County Commission of General Safety held Monday, May 7, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas the Westchester County Commission of General Safety, recognizing the importance of increasing agricultural production, has through its committee on increased food supply been endeavoring to get all available acreage cultivated, but has fallen far short of what the exigencies of the times require; and

"Whereas it has been demonstrated by careful inquiries of the chairman of the executive committee that the farmers will not plant more land on account of the cost of labor and seeds and the fear that overproduction or a sudden ending of the war will cause a fall in prices entailing heavy loss; and

"Whereas it is realized that unusual situations need unusual measures to cope with them, and that abnormal conditions make abnormal prices, which may be expected to fluctuate widely, and it has been made clear that the farmers will extend their planting to the highest point if the assurance is given that prices will be remunerative for the crops raised on additional acreage cultivated: Therefore it was

"Resolved, That this commission demonstrate its confidence in this as a solution of the problem of production by authorizing the executive committee to create a corporation which shall guarantee minimum prices upon all crops raised on this additional acreage in Westchester County, and that these facts should be laid before the President and the Congress with the request that immediate action be taken by the Congress to establish minimum prices at which all imperishable agricultural products, enumerating the same, and all raw materials from the soil will be purchased by the Government of the United States, as this would stimulate production in this country to meet the demands which are being made upon it by the people of our own country and the allied nations engaged with us in the war.

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President and the Members of Congress, and that V. Everit Macy, Esq., of Ossining, be appointed a committee of one to urge the measure upon the administration, the Congress, and all officials, boards, and organizations dealing with this matter."

Gross Sales of Manufactures.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BENJAMIN K. FOCHT,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Thursday, May 17, 1917.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, much has been said about the profits of large industrial institutions. Vaguely and indiscriminately various Members of the House have cited instances of abnormal profits, some without exact information. We, Mr. Speaker, are here to legislate for the whole country and should act with that same care and full information in legislation that affects the country that we would exact from others in matters that might pertain to a business that we have a personal interest in. To cast a vote that would hurt the manufacturers of the country would be harming the wage earner also. There is in the proposed revenue act now under consideration in the House one provision that puts a tax upon the gross net sales of automobile and other manufacturing companies. The profits of the Ford Motor Co., of Detroit, Mich., has been cited here as reason for such a tax, as I believe they are conceded to be the most successful automobile manufacturing concern in the world.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have taken the time to investigate their last annual statement, and, for the information of the House, I am printing it as a part of my remarks. It will be observed that while they made a profit of $59,994,118.01 for the year ending July 31, 1916, that that profit was made on a sale price 15 per cent greater than the price of their car for the current year. The statement shows that they reduced by this action their profits $40,000,000, which they gave to the purchasers of their cars this year. Now, with prices of all material going up, I see by statements from Detroit also that since the declaration of war sales have fallen off 25 to 35 per cent. Considering these facts, how can any sane man expect them to show large profits for the coming year, if any profit, unless they cut the wages of their employees? All know that Henry Ford was the pioneer in the advance of wages to labor and the reduction of the hours of day labor; that Mr. Ford spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in an effort to put a stop to this slaughter in Europe; that he now will be called upon to pay millions of dollars to the Government to sustain this war, and I am told he is willing to do so and is not protesting; but, Mr. Speaker, there are others to be considered. You surely do not desire to close a single plant on account of unjust tax legislation; and if, as I believe, the Ford motor plant will be crippled, then what would be the fate of the balance of automobile manufacturers or other manufacturers that this tax would apply to? I think we can not afford to adopt a policy of a tax on the gross sales of manufactures of any kind instead of net profits. There will be few who in these war times will show any net profits whatever, and we would therefore legislate them into bankruptcy instead of more properly taxing the actual existing dollar wealth of the country. It is a wrong system of taxation and I think indefensible in peace or war.

[Being the report as expressed by the Detroit News, Aug. 31, 1916, commenting upon the annual statement of the Ford Motor Co., for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1916.]

Most of the profit earned by the Ford Motor Co. goes back into the business to create more jobs for another army of men. Forty-nine thousand eight hundred and seventy are employed; 36,626 of them are on the company's profit-sharing basis, receiving $5 a day or more.

SOME STARTLING FORD FACTS.

Total business done	$206,867,347.46
Profit for the year	$59,994,118.01
Cash on hand and in banks	$52,550,771.92
Materials on hand	$31,895,434.69
Number of cars made in Detroit, 1915–16	508,000
Employed at home plant	34,489
Employed at home offices	1,028
Total in Detroit plant receiving $5 a day or more	27,002
Employed at 74 branch plants	14,355
Total employees (all plants)	49,870
Total employees receiving $5 a day or more	36,626

All employees are on eight-hour basis.

Henry Ford said: "If you expect a man to give you his time and energy, you must fix his wages so he will have no financial worries. It pays. Our profits this year, after giving our employees a big share in them, show that to pay good wages is the most profitable way to do business."

After a three-hour talk with Mr. Ford one comes away with the conclusion that he has two great objects in life: To give employment to the greatest possible army of men in works of peace at the highest wages paid in the world, so they may live in comfort and peace; and to do all in his power to induce the military armies of the world to stop killing each other and bringing suffering on themselves and those dependent on them.

"The bigger our business gets, the easier it is to run," said Mr. Ford.

The price of the touring car was reduced $80 on August 1, which, on the basis of last year's output, would reduce the company's profit $40,000,000 this year.

In that regard Treasurer Klingensmith said: "The present year we expect to make not an equivalent amount of profit to last year, but a substantial amount because of efficiency; that efficiency is due to an honest day's work for an honest day's wages."

HOW THE CASH PILE GREW.

The marvelous growth of the Ford company's cash balance during the past four years (1912 to 1916) is shown as follows:

1912 cash on hand and in banks	$6,400,100
1913 cash on hand and in banks	13,225,710
1914 cash on hand and in banks	27,441,468
1915 cash on hand and in banks	43,788,151
1916 cash on hand and in banks	52,550,771

Besides that, their materials on hand were increased in the same time from $6,629,533 to $31,895,434, and their investment in buildings grew from $2,596,115 to $17,293,293.

The net gain in these three items alone over four years ago is $86,113,750—that is, where the Ford Co. had $15,625,748 in cash, in materials, and in buildings in 1912, it has $101,739,498 in the three items now.

The largest contract ever made by the company was recently signed for $34,000,000 worth of rubber tires; being one-half of the company's three-year supply. It was signed by Edsel Ford, secretary of the company, and was perhaps the largest contract ever signed by a young man of 22 years.

Henry Ford plans to open at the plant a school for boys from 14 to 18 years old; they will be given the training boys get at the technical schools, will be taught mechanical work on light parts, and will be paid for what they do as well, also having time for the regular studies they get at public schools.

If a man can show the company how to save 10 cents on a car, it means a saving of over $50,000 a year to the company and places the man where he will not have to worry the rest of his life. Suggestions for improvements on the car are valued as highly as suggestions for saving money.

The Ford Motor Co. made a profit of $59,994,118 in the fiscal year ending July 31, or over $1,000,000 a week—and paid its workmen the highest wages known in the industrial world.

If the company had sold 46 more cars its profits would have just passed the $60,000,000 mark. As it was it manufactured over 508,000 automobiles, and did a gross business of $206,867,347.46.

Seventy-four per cent of the 49,870 employees of the Ford Co., working eight hours a day, shared in the great profits which they helped to make, and left this enormous balance for the company.

"The recompense for doing good is the fact that you are able to do more," declared Henry Ford, in reviewing the statement of the year's business.

"We have had a wonderful year and it will enable us to give employment to a steadily increasing number of men. It's our reward for treating our men right and for sharing our profits with them.

"When we announced our profit-sharing plan there were hundreds of manufacturers who said it couldn't be done. They declared it wouldn't work. They assailed it from all angles. Our statement shows whether it has worked or not. It shows that we have made a profit of about $60,000,000 and at the same time have paid our men the very highest industrial wages.

"About 74 per cent of our workers enjoy the advantages of the plan. The remainder are mostly beginners who work on fixed rates according to skill, and who receive the benefits of the advanced rate after the expiration of six months."

PROFIT-SHARING EMPLOYEES IN FACTORY.

The number of shopmen participating in the profit-sharing plan of the Ford Co. is shown by the following table, taken from the books of the company:

Employees and rate of pay.

The Ford Motor Co., of Manchester, England, employs 2,000 shop men at rates ranging from 30 cents to 50 cents an hour and 80 office employees on salary.

The Ford Motor Co., of Paris and Bordeaux, France, employs about 100 men.

The Ford Motor Co., of Canada (Ltd.), employs at the factory and the branches 2,515 shop men and 490 office men. Shop rates are from 30 cents to 75 cents an hour.

IMMENSE CASH RESERVE.

The financial statement of the Ford Motor Co., when read alone, is a marvelous financial statement, but when compared with the statements of other years it produces figures which stagger the intellect.

In 1912 the cash balance was $6,400,000. In 1913 it had grown to $13,225,710. The following year saw this increased to $27,441,468, and in 1915 there followed another advance, which placed the balance at $43,788,151. Finally the 1916 figures, showing cash on hand and in banks to the total of $52,550,771. But more impressive, even, than the figures of the cash balances are those of the total assets of the company for the same years, 1912–1916. In 1912 the total assets of the company were $20,815,785. In 1913 they were $35,033,919. In 1914 they grew to $61,632,257, increasing in 1915 to $88,535,840, and in 1916 they stood at the tremendous sum of $132,088,219.

With regards to dividends, the company paid 60 per cent on its capitalization of $2,000,000, or $1,200,000, leaving over $58,500,000 to reinvest for the growth of the company. This is Mr. Ford's policy at the present, and it is understood that other stockholders cheerfully accede to his plan.

WOULD EMPLOY MORE MEN.

"My ambition," declares Mr. Ford, "is to employ still more men; to spread the benefits of this industrial system to the greatest possible number; to help them build up their lives and their homes. To do this we are putting the greatest share of our profits back into the business."

Despite the tremendous record of the last 12 months there is no feeling in the offices of the Ford Motor Co. that the limit of achievement is close at hand. On the contrary, plans in all stages are being developed for an increase in capacity, for an improvement in the product, and for the refinement of the organization.

"The bigger the business is the easier it runs," declared Mr. Ford in discussing the intentions of the company. "With a closely knit organization, fired by the right spirit, there is no size which is impracticable.

"Believing that we have the organization and the spirit, we are going ahead steadily. We are preparing to turn from the retail method of handling cars to the wholesale plan. We plan to ship cars to our 74 branches, where they will be disposed of in wholesale lots to dealers.

"In this connection it is not out of place to state that we are introducing a new phase in the work of organization building at this time. A corps of men will visit each of the 74 branches. They will instruct the branch managers and their corps of workers in Ford policies. They will teach them that the idol of the Ford plant is its car, and that the ideal of every man must be to make that car good.

"No matter how engrossed we may be in building plants, we will never forget to build character, spirit, and organization."

NEW BLAST FURNACES AT ONCE.

Mr. Ford confirmed the report that work will begin upon the new blast furnaces which the company is to erect in the immediate future.

Julian Kenendy, the foremost designer of blast furnaces in this country, has been retained by the Ford Co. to design and superintend the construction of two furnaces on the company's River Rouge property, west of Detroit. The drawings are now under way, and construction work will begin as soon as they are completed. One hundred and thirty-four acres of ground will be necessary to accommodate the furnaces, docks, coke ovens, and buildings of the plant which will furnish all the iron used in the company's products. The loading docks will be 2,400 feet long, and the furnaces will have a combined capacity of 1,000 tons a day. The total cost of the entire works is estimated at $3,500,000.

In an endeavor to warn the public against real estate speculators the company announces that only 500 men will be employed in this plant. The nature of the work, together with the fact that only the most modern or labor-saving machinery is to be installed, precludes the necessity for a large number of workmen.

NEW BUILDING AT HIGHLAND PARK.

At their Highland Park plant the company has constructed within the last six months one 6-story building, costing $900,000, with a floor space of 910,000 square feet, and three buildings one story high, 1,200 feet long, and 75 feet wide. The capacity of the foundry has also been doubled, making possible the production of 800 tons of castings a day.

There is under construction at the present time additions to the main buildings which will cost approximately $2,500,000. Upon the drawing board there are plans for another addition costing approximately $2,000,000 and containing 2,000,000 square feet of floor space, also an addition to the power house costing, with the engines, approximately $1,000,000. The cost of the new machinery and equipment at the Highland Park plant alone is in excess of $6,000,000.

The new buildings and their equipment will be utilized not only in the production of cars for the coming season, which number is estimated at 650,000, but in the manufacture of the 1-ton truck announced some time ago by Mr. Ford. Mr. Klingensmith, vice president of the company, stated that the truck would sell for less than $500 and would be put on the market about the first of the year.

TRAINING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Not the least of the company's plans for the coming year is the one which includes a training school for boys—a school for the boys who have never had a chance. It will be opened in the plant at Highland Park and its object will be to make skilled workmen of the lads who outgrow their occupations and are thrown on the world without a trade.

Fifteen hundred boys, between the ages of 14 and 18 years, will be enrolled when the first term opens, and after the new departure is in full operation it is hoped that 2,000 pupils will graduate every year.

The course will consist of two hours in the schoolroom and five in mechanical training, and for every hour spent at the bench or the machine the boy will be paid for his labor. It is part of Mr. Ford's plan to make the boy see, by utilizing his products, that the work of skilled hands commands a high value.

"The trouble with most manual-training schools, or technical schools," said Mr. Ford, in discussing his plan, "is that the boy never gets into the heart of his work, because he knows that in the end it is not used. The products of his hands have no real market value after they are finished, the boy knows it, and consequently he loses the most valuable part of the lesson.

"I want to take these boys, teach them to make small parts, instruct them in the operation of machines, and while doing it give them a sense of responsibility by utilizing their product. I want them to be able to see a definite purpose in their labor.

"They can not, of course, do heavy work. But there are numberless operations which they are capable of performing that will give them skill and fit them for jobs which will bring them the wages of an artisan.

"We do not intend to overlook their school work. Some of them will probably need to be taught to read and write and spell. Wherever we find that this is necessary we will give them such a course. Those who are ready will be given courses in mathematics and drawing, specially chosen with the idea of assisting them in their work."

The plan has been discussed with the heads of Detroit's public-school system and with other educators. It meets with their approval and commendation. The boys it will reach are, for the most part, the ones the public schools lose entirely.

Competent instructors will be employed in all branches of work taught, both in the schoolroom and the technical-training shops. The course will be varied in each case with particular attention to the capabilities of the student. Individual instruction will be one of its strongest points and no boy will leave the school with a knowledge of merely one or two mechanical operations. The benchwork is to be diversified in such a manner that every student will receive general training.

The school is to be incorporated under the name of "The Henry Ford Trade School." It will become an integral part of the activities of the Ford Motor Co. and will be watched with the keenest interest by the heads of the concern. Both Mr. Ford and his associates expect great things from it.

"I hope," said Mr. Ford, "that the future heads of our departments may come from this school. We like to develop our own stars, you know. We have found it is the only successful way. We promote men from the ranks, as the roll of the managers of this concern will show. We hope to be able to do that with these boys. There will be no limit to the success which they attain if they are capable and energetic. We will try to bring out the best that is in them.

"It's going to be worth-while work and I shall watch it with great interest."

THE REDUCED PRICE OF THE CAR.

The recent reduction in the price of the Ford car is a step of which Mr. Ford and his associates are very proud. It is one which, on the value of last year's production, would mean a loss in revenue of $40,000,000. But this is a subject to which neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Klingensmith devoted more than passing attention in discussing the future of the company. To them it seemed to be of minor importance when compared with the fact that they had been able to bring all ends of their endeavors to a point where the price of the product could be lowered more than 15 per cent.

"We may not make an amount equivalent to this year's profits in the next 12 months," declared Mr. Klingensmith, "but we will certainly make a substantial amount. Our profits are going back into the car. We are refining our methods of production, as the erection of the blast furnaces and the increase in foundry facilities will show. We are perfecting our organization to a still higher degree than the one attained. When we have done these things we will have increased efficiency and when we increase efficiency we make for a greater production at a less cost, and consequently we can supply a better product.

"The cut in prices assures us of new territory. Every time the price of an automobile is lowered, it is placed in reach of a certain class which was never before able to enjoy the advantages of a car and a totally new field is opened.

"Spirit and organization are the great factors in our success. Every man in our employ knows that we are willing and anxious to recognize merit. Every man knows that if he can study out a method of improving the product and reducing the cost of operations he is sure of appreciation.

"The best proof of that fact lies in the record of advancement made by men who have stayed with us, studied the product and the methods of production, not to speak of the thousands who are drawing an honest day's wage for an honest day's work.

"Besides Mr. C. H. Wills we have four men with us who began work with Mr. Ford when he was building his first car on Mack Avenue. They are John Wandersee, Edward Martin, Frank Kulick, and August Degner, all in good positions.

DEVELOP OWN STARS.

"We never have brought a man in from the outside to take over important work who proved to be a star. Now we develop our own stars. We have not hired an outside man for our offices now for three years. We have advanced the men in line. We could do it, because every man in our office employ is expected to be able to fill the place just above him."

In the opinion of Mr. Klingensmith, the basis of the Ford Motor Co.'s great growth and prosperity rests on the foundation of organization and service, and these in turn he believes to be the result of the Ford profit-sharing plan.

"We have nearly 50,000 men at work making and marketing this car," he said. "This does not include the thousands employed by other concerns who furnish us with material. These thousands of employees are working, calculating, planning for one thing, namely, the improvement of their product and the simplification of the work of production. We have their loyalty and their good will. This means that we have among these 50,000 the brains of many thousand working to make our product better all the time. It's a tremendous power. It's the power which has made the Ford Motor Co."

Authorizing the President to Organize Four Divisions of Infantry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN L. BURNETT,

OF ALABAMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen in this debate have repeatedly characterized this resolution as a Roosevelt resolution. That is not true. The name of Roosevelt does not appear in it at all. It reads as follows:

The President is further authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, to organize, and equip not to exceed four Infantry divisions, the officers of which shall be selected in the manner provided by paragraph 3 of section 1 of this act.

Paragraph 3 of section 1 referred to authorizes the President to appoint the officers. So what is there in this resolution to cause men to go into a frenzy either for or against Roosevelt? It merely gives the President authority to raise 100,000 men by the volunteer system and to appoint such officers as he may see proper. Only this and nothing more. He is neither compelled to raise the divisions nor to appoint any particular man as an officer.

Mr. Speaker, I am for the resolution because it permits volunteering and is right in line with my insistence ever since this bill was presented. Many gentlemen who raved for the draft system are now just as frantic for this. In that somersault they have made an abject surrender of their position in favor of the draft. There is no escape from that conclusion. One day they spoke and voted for the draft; to-day they are voting to permit volunteering.

But, Mr. Speaker, these are the same kind of acrobatics that we witnessed while this bill was before the House two weeks ago. We then had the ludicrous exhibition of gentlemen one day being loud for the volunteer system and the next clamoring for the draft. Some even made speeches on both sides within two days.

I voted then to permit volunteering, and I am now going to consistently do the same.

I believed then that I was right, and I have not run away from that position.

The attitude of my able friend and colleague from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is very different from my own.

When this resolution was before the House two weeks ago, offered as an amendment to this bill, it was defeated by 170 to 106. The Senate inserted it as an amendment to the House bill, and that put it in conference.

Chairman DENT and the other House conferees properly regarded the action of the House as instructions to them and forced the Senate conferees to recede. As fair and honest men they could not do otherwise. My colleague, Mr. DENT, and other members of the conference committee who voted for the volunteer system have been twitted on this floor with inconsistently changing their positions. As to these conferees that is not true, for the reasons I have just shown. They could have done nothing else and been true to the instructions of this House, and I resent any such charge against them.

God never made a braver, truer man than my good friend and colleague from Alabama, Mr. DENT.

I saw him stand in this fight for what he thought was right when weaker men, who had promised to stand by him, were deserting him by the score.

I saw him stand for the volunteer system when mass meetings and boards of trade in his own district were bombarding him with telegrams and resolutions urging him to abandon what he believed to be right and just.

I saw him when his lifelong friends and supporters back home were urging him to stand by the President, even by violating his sworn obligation to do his duty. But he stood like some mountain peak, steady and unshaken, while the winds of calumny and abuse were howling about his devoted head.

The cause of his people will always be safe in the hands of a man like that, and to-day even those in his district who thought him wrong have cause to be prouder of him than ever before.

Mr. Speaker, the hardest thing that I now have to face is to cast my vote on this resolution against the views of a man like Mr. DENT. During this debate I have almost been shaken from my purpose to vote for this resolution on account of my love for this noble son of Alabama. I have faltered "'twixt love and duty," and with a sad heart I am forced to dissent from his views now.

While, as I have said, his duty as a conferee was to stand by the instructions of the House, my path of duty is clear to vote for volunteers, just as I have done before.

I have no special regard for Roosevelt, but I do care for the principle for which I have fought, and which is now about to win.

Gentlemen have prated about sending untrained men to die on foreign soil. Under this resolution we do not send them but only authorize the President to permit them to volunteer to go.

They will not go into the trenches untrained men. That great French chieftain, Marshal Jeffre, to-day the honored guest of this Nation, said only a few days ago that such a force as he desired could be quickly organized in this country, and that with a month or two of preliminary training here can be sent to their great training camps in France, and with four months' training there just behind the trenches could be made the best fighting soldiers to be found on the battle lines. He believes that such a force would inspire courage and hope in the hearts of the soldiers of the allies and strike terror to the armed hosts arrayed against us.

Gentlemen, let them go. I want to see this war won and won quickly, and such an expedition of fearless volunteers may save the lives of thousands of America's brave sons.

Let no political expediency stand in the way.

President Wilson, in his speech at the Red Cross dedication this very day, said in reference to our going into the war:

> We have gone in with no special grievance of our own, because we have always said that we were the friends and servants of mankind.

Strange words! No grievance of our own, but sacrificing billions of treasure and thousands of lives in a war as servants of mankind. I thought we had a grievance against Germany of our own, and so stated in my speech on the war resolution, when I urged that the grievance was our own and that our war should be alone to avenge that grievance.

But since the President has made that declaration there is greater reason why those should be permitted to volunteer who think it America's duty to enter this war as "friends and servants of mankind."

When the draft was up for discussion, Members on this floor declared with vehemence that the selection would be a badge of honor and not of disgrace. It was then shown by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] that advertisements for recruits to the Regular Army and National Guard were being posted over this city, urging young men to volunteer and escape the odium of conscription.

The following appears in the Washington times: "Enlist now! Avoid being conscripted!" This is the cry of recruiting officers for every branch of the service to-day.

"I should think the young men of Washington would seek to join the service before they had to and gain considerably more prestige," said Lieut. L. E. Morgan, in charge of the Navy recruiting station at 506 Ninth Street NW. to-day.

This right under the shadow of the White House and of the War Department and presumably with the assent of that department.

Right under the shadow of the Dome of the Capitol, where gentlemen were two weeks ago proclaiming the glories of the selective draft.

Surely, gentlemen, we ought to let this resolution pass and get more volunteers when the Army officials are even now casting slurs at those who will go under the selective draft.

Exempting Mining Claimants and Desert-Land Entrymen From Assessment Work During the Present War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RAKER,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 16, 1917.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I desire to state that on April 18, 1917, I introduced H. R. 3331, a bill for the protection of the owners of mining claims and of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war. The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3331) for the protection of the owners of mining claims and of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each mining claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, shall not apply to claims or parts of claim owned or held by officers or enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Organized Militia of the United States from April 1, 1917, to and including the termination of the existing war, or until six months after such owner or claimant is mustered out of service, or until six months after his death in the service: Provided, That the claimant of any such mining location in order to obtain the benefits of this act, shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded within six months from and after the date of this act, or within six months after he is mustered into the service, a notice of his muster into the service of the United States and of his desire to hold said mining claim under this act.

SEC. 2. That no desert-land entry made or held under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1877, as amended by the act of March 3, 1891, by an officer or enlisted man in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Organized Militia of the United States shall, after April 1, 1917, be subject to contest or cancellation for failure to make or expend the sum of $1 per acre per year in improvements upon such claim, or to effect the reclamation thereof, so long as said entryman or his successor in interest is engaged in the military service of the United States, and the time within which such entryman or claimant is required to make such expenditures and effect reclamation of the land shall include four years, exclusive of the time of his actual service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Organized Militia of the United States: Provided, That each such entryman or claimant shall, within six months after the passage of this act, or within six months after he is mustered into the service, file in the local land office of the district wherein his claim is situate a notice of his muster into the service of the United States and of his desire to hold said desert claim under this act.

Similar legislation in regard to mining claims was passed during the Spanish-American War for the years 1893–94, and worked very successfully. Mr. J. W. Phillips, a mining engineer of Lewiston, Cal., of wide experience in mining matters, under date of April 17, 1917, writes me as follows:

Owing to the state of war existing between this country and Germany and the necessity of devoting our unrestricted efforts to bring it to an early termination, I believe it will be to the best interest of our country if an act is passed exempting quartz and placer locators from the performance of annual assessment work required by section 2344, chapter 6, Title 32, Revised Statutes. You will recall that this was done during the Spanish-American War for the years 1893–94, and worked very successfully. There are many young men prospecting for gold who will join the military service of the country, and they should be protected.

Mr. Wright S. Curless, of Blocksburg, Cal., a man of experience in mining matters, writes, among other things, as follows:

They (the mining claimants) would like to have something done to protect their mines and water rights from persons who would try to jump their claims.

This applies to the time they are in the service of the United States in the Army or Navy.

Mr. Fletcher McN. Hamilton, State mineralogist of California, telegraphs me under date of May 4, 1917, as follows:

I heartily indorse your measure providing for the exemption of the payment of annual labor on mining claims and desert entries by those who enter the military or naval service of the United States in the time of war.

Mr. Hamilton is in close touch with the general needs and conditions of the mineral interests of the West.

Hon. Crittenden Hampton, of Sonora, Tuolumne County, Cal., under date of May 8, 1917, writes me as follows:

Would like to see an act passed to relieve during the war prospectors and quartz and placer claimants on unpatented lands of the United States from doing assessment or annual work. That work does not bring any Federal aid to our country, and is for the purpose of showing good faith and not playing dog in the manger with mineral claims. This would release a lot of labor needful to the Nation. Also an enlisted man need have no apprehension while away serving his country that $100 worth of work would go toward other employment, and the claims could wait, without injury to our country. Then the prospectors could work in the mine producing chrome, iron, and other necessaries for general purposes. I think this will be an act that would meet with hearty approval by the committee at Washington on mining industries.

Mr. Hampton is an experienced mining man, as well as an attorney of wide experience.

In addition to relieving mining claimants on unpatented locations, the bill has for its purpose the relief of entrymen on desert-land entries of the expenditure of $1 per acre who are like situated as mine locators.

There are about 20,000 desert-land entries now pending for which patent has not been issued, and upon which final proof has not been made, and which require expenditure of $1 per acre per annum in improvements on the land. There are many mining claims upon which the law requires expenditure of $100 per annum; they run into the thousands.

There will be a large percentage of these mining claimants and desert-land entrymen who will enter the services of the United States either in the Army or Navy, or Marine Corps, or Organized Militia. Their rights should be protected while they are thus in the service of the Government. It can be of no possible disadvantage to the Government to thus protect them, but will be the saving of large sums of money which under present need can be better expended.

The bill (H. R. 3331) was submitted to Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, for consideration and report by the Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands, and thereafter on May 11, 1917, Mr. Lane made favorable report thereon, recommending that the bill be enacted, which report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 11, 1917.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: H. R. 3331 was referred by you under date of April 21, 1917 for consideration and report.

The bill would exempt unpatented locations held by officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Organized Militia of the United States from the requirement of section 2324, Revised Statutes, that not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year in order to prevent a relocation of the land by others; and desert-land entries made or held by such officers or enlisted men from the requirements of the act of March 3, 1877, as amended by act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095), that the entryman shall expend the sum of $1 per acre per year in improvements on the land, or to effect the reclamation thereof, such exemptions to begin April 1, 1917, and to continue to and including the termination of the existing war, or until six months after the claimant is mustered out of the service, or after his death in the service. In order to be entitled to the exemption, the mineral claimant must file in the office where his location certificate is of record a notice of his muster into the service and of his desire to hold the claim, and the desert-land claimant must file a similar notice in the local land office.

Exemption from residence and cultivation required under the homestead laws is given to homestead claimants enlisted in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States during any war in which the United States is engaged by the act of June 16, 1898 (30 Stat., 473), and similar protection should be afforded such mining and desert-land claimants. No rights of third persons will be affected adversely nor will any of the requirements of the laws necessary to be made in order to secure patent to the public lands be waived by making the proposed exemptions. The bill is general in its terms and would apply to claimants of the character desired wherever situated, including the Territory of Alaska. I favor such legislation and accordingly recommend that the bill be enacted.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

The bill was likewise referred to the Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, who on May 27, 1917, made favorable report thereon, which report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1917.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. FERRIS: Receipt is acknowledged of a copy of the bill (H. R. 3331) for the protection of the owners of mining claims and of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war, with request that your committee be sent such suggestions as this department may desire to make.

The bill proposes, in substance, that the annual labor now required upon mining locations need not be performed by such locators from April 1, 1917, during the period of the war, or until six months after such owner or claimant is mustered out of the service, or until six months after his death in the service. Section 2 provides that desert-land entries shall not be canceled because of failure to make or expend the sum of $1 per acre per year in improvements of such claims, or for failure to reclaim the lands so long as the claimant is engaged in military service for the United States.

Because of the rough, broken surface of the national forests, very few desert-land entries are located within the forest boundaries. Desert-land entries can not be made within a national forest after the lands are once withdrawn for national-forest purposes.

The act of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 11), authorizes prospecting, locating, and developing of mineral resources within the national forests. The mining laws require that before a location can be made a mineral discovery shall exist. Those laws also require that $100 worth of development work shall be performed or improvements made during each year. If bona fide mineral locations have been made and the locators or owners are called from their usual work to perform military duties for the Government, it is believed that they should not forfeit their locations. The administration of the mining laws, however, is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. While this department has no objection to the passage of the bill, it is suggested that your committee may desire to obtain the views of the Secretary of the Interior.

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

This bill should be enacted at an early date, so as to relieve the men who are mining claimants or desert-land entrymen from any anxiety or worry when they tender their services to the Government in these war times, so that their rights will be guarded and protected while they are in the service of their country.

I am convinced that this legislation is fundamentally right and that it will be passed expeditiously.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CLARENCE F. LEA,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, the question presented to-day is not whether or not our country shall avail itself of the services of Mr. Roosevelt. It is my judgment that it should. Mr. Roosevelt is a strong character in our country and in the world. He has those human magnetic qualities that inspire and attract loyal adherence and support. No one will question his enthusiasm or his courage, and it seems to me that those qualities should be capitalized for the use of our country in the approaching time of conflict.

Roosevelt has a rank that entitles him to appointment to a command in the Regular Army. He is qualified for appointment into the National Guard of the State of New York, whose governor has declared his willingness to appoint him to any position in that body. The way for him to serve his country is open. Personally I believe those in charge of our military affairs should welcome his services. But I believe that they should do so according to the same rules by which other men secure appointments to Army positions of leadership, honor, and responsibility. We should not be asked to repudiate the system of selective draft we have so recently provided, create distinctions in our Army among those who shall serve with equal sacrifice, and make the same service more honorable in one than in another.

Recently the Military Committee reported in favor of raising an army by a volunteer system and to authorize the President, in case that failed, to raise the remainder of the army required by conscription. The plan reported by the committee, after exhaustive consideration, was rejected by an overwhelming vote, and this House adopted a uniform plan of selective conscription. It was determined that if we established both a volunteer system and a draft system for raising an army, we would provide one honor for the volunteer and a less honor, a stigma in fact, for the man drafted. One of the greatest things that can be said in favor of the system we established is that all who are selected shall go to war with equal honor.

To-day it is proposed to break down the wholesome uniformity of that system for raising an army. It is proposed to make distinctions between those who shall serve the flag of our country with equal sacrifice. It is proposed to make a special class or caste by permitting special volunteers for only four divisions and thus giving them an honor that shall be denied to all who shall be conscripted to serve in the great special army we are now about to raise. These four divisions, consisting of about 80,000 men, are not suggested on account of the 80,000 but on account of the one who it is proposed shall lead them. In fact, nothing is urged as to the fitness or prowess of the 80,000 proposed volunteers, whose names are yet unknown. All favoring this proposition have directed their discussion to the one man who shall lead the 80,000. The proposed army would have more than 3,000 officers. Those officers are not to be selected by training and tests such as are required of our other officers in order that the men whom they are to command shall have the protection of their training and proven skill. But nothing is heard of the qualifications of these thousands of officers or the likelihood of their harmonious cooperation with the rest of the great army we are to raise.

At the present time we have a seasoned army of trained men, from which sufficient numbers could be immediately assembled and shortly dispatched to Europe, led by a general like Pershing, to carry the banner of our country through the streets of Paris, and at an early date to the trenches of France. They can be prepared to go sooner than any other division can possibly be so prepared. I believe some should be sent, so that the heart of America can follow them to France, so that we can bear our full share and play a man's part in this war. Other soldiers to follow them should go when prepared but not before.

The President is the Commander in Chief of our Army. A regularly constituted War Department has long been established to direct, organize, and control that Army. The leadership and responsibility of conducting the war must be in the War Department. It is well known that the proposal of to-day does not have the approval of the Army Staff. The particular selection and appointment of the officers of our Army should be left to the executive department to which that function belongs. Ours is the legislative function to raise and maintain armies. The selections and assignment of those in command throughout the history of this country, with unbroken precedent, have been left to the executive department of the Government. I might differ, you might differ, from the General Staff as to whom should be appointed; but, as for me, I believe it to be my duty to leave that executive function to those upon whom the responsibility rests according to the unbroken history of our country and the laws of the land. It seems to me unwise that at the very beginning of this mighty undertaking we should seek to impose upon those upon whom the responsibility for its conduct rests, arrangements and administrative plans not of their approval, and which constitute an infringement of their powers and responsibilities.

We have long delayed in passing this bill and providing for the very army that is necessary to protect, defend, and advance the cause of this country. Daily our allies in Europe grapple in a life and death struggle fighting for what is now our cause. Only yesterday we read the Macedonian cry of Marshal Joffre, appealing in behalf of our sister Republic, France, "Come over and help us." If some of these days that cry should become more insistent, if the wearied arms of our allies should fail, and an increasing responsibility of this war should fall upon us, if Germany should by any possibility become master of the sea, and we should hear her guns and torpedoes thundering at our gates, who can then justify sending this bill again back to conference for further debate and delay and for a further postponement of the time when we shall have a larger and more efficient army with which to cope with our enemies? Even this day I understand the President has written a letter expressing the hope that the conference committee's report may be immediately adopted and declaring that a delay of one day, of one hour, may jeopardize the interests of our country.

I propose to vote against recommitting this Army bill for further debate and delay. In so doing I do not intend and am not casting any reflection or in the least detracting from Theodore Roosevelt. Only to-day we are told that the son of one of the most prominent of our public men has enlisted in the United States Army as a private. Members of this House have offered to do that, sons of Members of this House have offered to do that, and I believe that course is just as patriotic, just as glorious, and reflects just as much credit as any man could gain by offering to be a general to lead an army. I entirely agree that the willing services of Theodore Roosevelt should be accepted in this great contest for the good of our country, but in my judgment he would be performing a more useful and a more glorious service by offering to serve in our Army as it is, as it has been provided by law, instead of asking us for a private army and to destroy the harmony of our system of selection; to create odious distinctions and honors of different degrees among those who serve our country with equal loyalty and equal sacrifice.

As this debate has proceeded, I have listened to a number of men of high intelligence and common sense, of unquestioned patriotism and unquestioned Republicanism, who are against recommitting this bill. In voting with them against what is supposed to be or claimed to be the interest of one who is a Republican, I am doing what they, too, believe best for the country. On this measure I take a pleasure in voting with Mr. KAHN, that Republican who faithfully, tenaciously, and brilliantly, through days and weeks, with credit to himself and with honor to my own State, has led the fight for this law, which calls our country at the beginning of this war to adopt a modern system of selecting our Army in accordance with the wisdom gained from the history and sad experiences of the last three years.

Increase of the Military Establishment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 12, 1917.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, there are many provisions in this conference report that to my mind are manifestly unfair and of which I do not approve, and wish that they could be eliminated, but that is now impossible. However, I shall not criticize the House conferees, believing that they have done their duty in trying to comply with the views expressed by the House. But I realize the position they were placed in on many of these provisions, and, taking everything into consideration, I am of the opinion that they have done fairly well in eliminating some of the objectionable provisions and amendments inserted in the bill by the Senate.

The objection is raised to the conference report that the House conferees have forced the Senate to recede on the so-called "volunteers division" amendment. In that they have carried out the expression of the House. But some of the Members who were loudest in demanding the elimination of the volunteer system and who favored and succeeded in having the House adopt the universal draft or service plan, are now found to be the main objectors, and cry out that the conferees should have disobeyed the House and agreed to that political Senate amendment. The excuses for the change of front they are making are ridiculous. If they were right before, they are wrong now, and if they are right now they could not have been right before. To me it is inconceivable how some of these gentlemen can and do change front. I have voted for the draft because all our military experts advised and pleaded for that plan, and I shall stand by their recommendations now. This is no time to play politics. This is no time for personal publicity and advertising. We are at war, and it is high time that some of you professed patriots should realize that fact.

You, on the Republican side, charge that politics is responsible for the refusal of sending Col. Roosevelt to France. If politics has been injected into this, it has been by you. Everyone must realize that sending twenty or forty or even eighty thousand untrained men will not help. What is needed by the allies is an ammunition supply for their guns and not targets for the enemy's guns.

The amendment eliminated on the part of the conferees:

The President is further authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment, to organize, and equip, not to exceed four Infantry divisions, the officers of which shall be selected in the manner provided by paragraph 3 of section 1 of this act: Provided, That the organization of said force shall be the same as that of the corresponding organization of the Regular Army: And provided further, That there shall be no enlistments in said force of men under 25 years of age at time of enlisting: And provided further, That no such volunteer force shall be accepted in any unit smaller than a division.

This gives the President the authority to raise four Infantry divisions, but there is nothing to indicate that Col. Roosevelt is to be made the chief of that division, and I feel that he could not expect to be appointed and intrusted with a responsibility involving thousands of lives, considering that he has not had any experience in the present-day military operations.

Furthermore, I do not know, and, in fact, no one can tell what effect his going may have upon the present harmonious cooperation that exists in the Army to-day. What would be his position if he were subjected to all rules and regulations of the combined forces? Would he not, with his strong will, try to domineer the Staff, which is just now progressing so splendidly, and thereby disorganize that body? I am afraid.

Now, as to the fact that 200,000 have volunteered to enlist and go to France under his command, and that their services would be lost otherwise, is to be, indeed, deplored. If they think more of one man than they do of their country, I am forced to doubt their sincerity and patriotism.

If Col. Roosevelt were a man of vast military experience and knowledge and was willing to cooperate and not dominate, he, no doubt, could render the cause valuable service.

The letter of Mr. Joseph Leiter, the president of the Army League, sent to Col. Roosevelt, expresses the views of a majority of honest, sincere, and well-meaning American citizens who have the interests of our country at heart.

MY DEAR COL. ROOSEVELT: Your letter of May 8 resigning your office in this organization, in reply to mine of May 2, I have received. The executive council at its next meeting will take action upon it. While you seem to think my letter indefinite, you have grasped the point which I wanted to convey—I am opposed to the Harding amendment.

The charge that I am using the Army League to the detriment of the Army and the country is personal. To this charge let me reply as an individual. Because I do not agree with you, you can see nothing in my attitude but the betrayal of a trust. Do you think that you alone can think correctly? Did the Almighty constitute you the sole arbiter of what is right or wrong? Has no one else the right to an opinion? I can imagine such a state of affairs in Germany alone.

Do you think that you are the most competent person in the United States to head the first expeditionary force sent to Europe?

Candidly, do you think you have had sufficient military experience to in any way qualify you for this position?

Why not leave the business to competent people who have been trained to it instead of injecting yourself into the situation without the desire of any of the authorities who must be responsible for the success or failure of the conduct of the war.

I thought at first that your intentions were inspired by patriotism. I am now constrained to believe that your own schemes of political and personal aggrandizement lie at the bottom of your agitation.

The early disasters of the Civil War came from those who had received military rank as the result of possessing the political influence to put them in commands for which they were not fitted. Let us hope that in this war this can be avoided. Do your part to this end Make a sacrifice of your personal ambitions on the altar of efficiency, and as an act of real patriotism put an end to the political storm which has been caused by the Harding amendment.

Very truly, yours, JOSEPH LEITER, President.

I repeat, do not play politics or try to secure political publicity and advantage at the expense of our country.

Our concern first, last, and all the time shall be our country and not that of a party or individual, no matter who he may be.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. JOHN M. ROSE,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 15, 1917.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Speaker, it has been freely admitted that the present bill is full of inequalities, and it is but fair to say that its sponsors admit that it can be defended only upon the ground that "we need the money." The members of the Ways and Means Committee applied themselves to a very difficult task, and since they were obliged to frame a measure without the formality of public hearings, our criticism should be tempered with mercy. In any event it is a measure which should not be acted upon hastily and without due consideration, as the passage of any bill relating to the levying of heavy additional burdens upon the people should be carefully scrutinized, so as to properly divide the burdens upon a basis which will result in justice to all concerned. The exemptions as recommended by the committee seem to me unduly burdensome to the laboring man and should be raised materially, as the price of foodstuffs and the necessaries of life now exceed the earning power of many of our unskilled workmen, and since it seems to be conceded that taxes should be levied upon the class best able to pay, I submit that we are departing from that rule in the light of existing conditions.

My judgment is that the poorer classes, upon whom the greatest burdens fall in times of war, should be relieved in a great measure from contributing to the enormous fund necessary to meet the extraordinary conditions aroused by a state of war. I trust that before the revenue bill is enacted into law that amendments will be adopted which will prevent the confiscation of any industry, a condition now so much feared by many opponents of the present measure. I can not expect that a revenue bill can be framed which will not work a hardship upon some industries or certain classes of individuals, but we shall do well to carefully and thoughtfully consider every phase of a bill of so great an importance.

I am in receipt of a number of complaints from the publishers of newspapers, and as a sample I desire to quote the following from the Altoona Tribune Co., publishers of the Altoona Tribune, Altoona, Pa.:

ALTOONA, PA., May 14, 1917.

Hon. JOHN M. ROSE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The postal section in the war-revenue bill as relating to newspapers, with which you are no doubt familiar, will, if enacted as a law, be a great burden to all newspapers, and we therefore ask that when the bill comes before your body for action that you will use your influence and vote toward the defeat of the bill in its present form.

As you are no doubt well aware, newspapers are at present burdened beyond all reason, and it would be an injustice to increase this burden by enacting this legislation.

We thank you for the many past favors and trust you will comply with our request in this particular instance and do what you can toward the defeat of said bill. We remain,

Very courteously, yours,

THE ALTOONA TRIBUNE CO.,
A. D. HOUCK.

Also the following from the Grit Publishing Co., of Williamsport, Pa.:

WILLIAMSPORT, PA., May 14, 1917.

Hon. JOHN M. ROSE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. ROSE: Believing you desire to vote on any measure in full possession of all information relating to the subject matter, we desire to call your attention to the proposed second-class mail rates as they affect newspapers of general circulation, including Grit.

Under the present rate of 1 cent a pound Grit is paying $40,000 a year in second-class postage. As a war tax Grit could pay $40,000 a year more; that is a rate of 2 cents a pound. Grit would be unable, however, to pay a higher rate, whatever the plan or system, as it would practically confiscate this paper's business.

Only the urgency of the prospect compels this company to ask you to give consideration to newspapers of general circulation, of which Grit is one, and which bind the country together in common thought and action at a time when education and diffusion of intelligence are so vital to the welfare of the Nation.

Very truly, yours,

DIETRICK LAMADE,
President and General Manager.

The Proposed Tax On Automobiles.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. CHARLES A. NICHOLS,
OF MICHIGAN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, May 18, 1917.

Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks I submit for the consideration of Members of the House statements made by representatives of automobile manufacturers before the Finance Committee of the Senate. In view of the fact that no opportunity was given representatives of this great industry to present testimony to the Ways and Means Committee, I feel justified in asking the membership of the House to peruse the following statements before voting to cripple one of the greatest of American manufacturing interests.

STATEMENT OF MR. ALFRED REEVES.

Mr. Chairman, automobile manufacturers, without exception, desire to pay their full fair share of the Government's expense, and they ask to be taxed fully and in proportion to all other industries.

They do, however, consider it unfair to subject them to double taxation or to any form of taxation that may make for monopoly by the elimination of scores of companies that can not afford to carry the proposed burden.

12 MAKERS PRODUCE 80 PER CENT AND 438 MAKERS 20 PER CENT OF CARS.

There are 450 listed automobile manufacturers in the United States (Automobile Trade Director, April, 1917), of which 12 makers produce 80 per cent and 438 makers 20 per cent of the whole. The 12 have been prosperous, while the bulk of the others are able to exist only in good times. Prosperity in the motor-car trade is due to increasing volume, and the reverse occurs when the volume shrinks.

It is the prosperity of a few of the very big companies which makes it appear that every one is prosperous in the motor-car trade and that it can stand the special tax.

In truth, the making and marketing of motor cars is an industry of many hazards. Purchases of supplies have to be made more than a year ahead, and in the assembling of a car the failure to be supplied with one or two parts has been known to hold up production for weeks.

Last year the trade was the best that the industry ever enjoyed, but with the declaration of war the volume of sales has been seriously affected. The automobile business is one of big units, and profits come only with volume.

This industry has been obliged to increase its cost for labor 25 per cent and material a great deal more, as indicated in the appended list of recent increases:

	Per cent.
Sheet aluminum	40
Steel castings	30
Bearings	35
Aluminum castings	50
Leather	30
Stampings	75
Sheet steel	65
Tungsten steel	400
Steel tubing	40
Iron castings	35
Forgings	75

By the increased volume of sales, these material and labor costs have been overcome to some degree, although last year almost all makers were obliged to increase their list prices in a good market. To attempt any increase now, however, with a falling market, would be certain to seriously curtail sales and production.

NINE HUNDRED AND FIFTEEN THOUSAND WAGE EARNERS.

Although not generally known, because of the giant strides of 10 or 15 of the bigger companies, the automobile industry comprises approximately 450 manufacturers of motor cars, located in 32 States, 825 makers of parts and accessories, located in almost every State of the Union, besides 25,924 dealers and 23,686 garages throughout the country, all depending on the products of the motor-car manufacturers. Fourteen companies employ 145,000 men. Figuring an average of only 300 men for each of the others gives 135,000, or a total of 280,000 wage earners.

Body, parts, material, accessory, and supply plants employ 350,000. The 25,724 automobile dealers, with an average of only 6 employees, indicates 150,000.

The 23,686 garages, with 3 people each, is 75,000, while there are approximately 50,000 employees in the 12,171 machine shops and not less than 10,000 employees in the 2,500 supply houses. These figures show 66,443 concerns or plants directly or indirectly associated with the industry, employing 915,000 wage earners, with total dependents of almost 3,000,000. These figures are considered very conservative.

EXPORT TRADE LOST THIS YEAR.

Another very serious fact that faces the automobile industry is the falling off of exports, these exports amounting last year to 61,941 passenger cars and 18,903 trucks, with a total valuation of $96,000,000. Because of embargoes, shipping conditions, and other reasons exports have already largely fallen off, and for 1917 will no doubt be less than half the previous year.

PROFITS OF MAKERS SMALL ON VOLUME.

Few of the 450 manufacturers are, we believe, averaging to exceed 12 per cent on their turnover. The 5 per cent tax would, therefore, take five-twelfths of their profits (assuming the tax can not be passed on to the consumer), which would equal five-twelfths of the profits of the trade as a whole. It would be equivalent to a tax of 41.5 per cent on the profits of companies that make profits, and would, of course, entail a serious loss for a great many others.

Profits have been small per unit, because the trade depends on volume. An average of 12 per cent is much lower than in most other industries.

Overland made 10 per cent on $80,000,000, car sales.
Hupmobile made 1.1 per cent on $10,000,000 sales.
Chandler made 11.4 per cent on $12,860,000.
Winton made 4.4 per cent on $9,150,000.
Chalmers made 2.1 per cent on $18,500,000.
Packard made 11 per cent on $35,000,000.
Saxon made 8 per cent on $15,000,000.

It is worth noting that these are all prominent companies. The Winton Co. is next to the oldest in this country and has been in business for 20 years, yet it made only a little over 4 per cent. In 1915, on more than $5,000,000, it made only a little over 3 per cent, while in 1914 on $3,821,000 sales it made a little more than 6 per cent. The records of all companies are available and will show figures of a similar character.

It can be readily seen from this low margin of profits on the volume of sales how confiscatory would be the proposed 5 per cent tax.

INDUSTRY NOW SUFFERING IN SALES.

The motor-car industry is suffering from the war, makers showing any number of cancellations and a general slowing of demands. If added to this general slowing down there is a 5 per cent tax the future of the industry is certainly menaced.

The Pierce Co. reports 40 orders last month for passenger cars and 76 cancellations.

Mercer cut production schedule from 1,250 cars to 800.

Hudson reduced from 30,000 to 20,000.

Overland's cancellations reduced shipping orders from 30,000 to 16,500 cars.

From 12 dealers Packard, since April 1, has had cancellation of 199 passenger cars and 33 trucks.

Cadillac reports that 42 per cent of dealers have cancelled orders of $1,207,000 worth of cars.

Scores of other companies report similar conditions.

DIFFICULTIES OF A FALLING MARKET.

The 5 per cent tax can not generally be passed with any success to the consumer because of the impossibility of advancing prices on a falling market. If attempted, and some may attempt it, it will decrease demand and, of course, the volume of business, on which profits depend.

Very few manufacturers if obliged to pay this tax would not have anything to pay under the excess-profits tax and their profits remaining, if any, would be less than 8 per cent on their investments. In many cases it would entail a substantial loss.

Such condition would curtail sales and production and decrease any excess profit which the Government might ordinarily receive.

SEVEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTEEN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS FAIL OR RETIRE FROM BUSINESS IN FIVE YEARS.

There can probably be no greater indication of the difficulties than to note the failures that have strewn the path of the past five years. The business has been extremely hazardous and the difficulties of many have been overshadowed by the glittering successes of a few great concerns whose organizations and facilities were such that they would have made probably as great a success in any other line. The mortality has been greater than in any other industry of which we have record.

The official records of the Automobile Trade Directory gives the names and addresses of 718 companies that failed or went out of business since 1912, and of this number, 133 car manufacturers failed during the past two years.

Motor Age, February 8, 1917, prints a list of 241 orphan cars; that is, cars made by companies that have gone out of business. The Puritan Machine Co. has blue prints and parts of 105 companies that have ceased making motor cars.

MANY PROMINENT NAMES AMONG FAILURES.

Not all of these companies were small, for in the list we find such names as Alco, which the American Locomotive Co. ceased making after losing several million dollars; Pope, Herreschoff, Thomas, Brush, Maxwell-Briscoe, Stoddard-Dayton, Stevens-Duryea, Owen, Acme, Knox, Columbus, Columbia, Cleveland, Garford, Elmore, Welch, Krit, Midland, Parry, U. S. Motor, Rainier, Republic, Sterling, Warren, Yale, Cutting, American, Bergdoll, and others equally well known.

We believe that not more than one-half of our automobile manufacturers are breaking even, and certainly very few are making in excess of 10 per cent on their turnover.

MANY INVESTORS IN MOTOR COMPANIES.

Stockholders in some instances have had very substantial returns from their investments in motor-car companies, while in many other cases the returns have been little or nothing. Some companies now have from 1,500 to 5,000 stockholders, while one company—the Harroun Motors, of Wayne, Mich.—has been getting under way for a year and has more than 15,000 stockholders awaiting the results of a business which is just now beginning to produce cars. The average holding is 18 shares of $10 par value stock.

The automobile industry is anxious to supply its share of revenue to the Government, and feels that with a fair chance to do business and to keep its industry stable it can supply a substantial amount. If the volume of trade falls off, however, this result will be disappointing.

FOUR OUT OF FIVE SALES WITH A TRADE.

During the past year, excluding Ford, 80 per cent, or four-fifths, of all new cars were sold to people who already owned cars and traded them in. If any effort is made to impose a 5 per cent tax on them they will largely keep their old cars instead of replacing them with new, and thus prevent the industry producing any great revenue for the Government.

While some makers may try to add such a tax to the consumer price, the makers generally agree that on the falling market such an attempt would curtail buying to the detriment of the trade as a whole. With materials bought and schedule of cars under way, a congestion of the market might result.

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING MONOPOLY FOR BIG COMPANIES.

If one or two of the big makers decided to absorb this tax themselves the result would be an increasing monopoly for them and certain failure for many of the smaller ones.

MOTOR CARS IN GENERAL USE.

It is estimated that more than 40 per cent of the cars registered in this country are owned by farmers, who have been the biggest buyers of cars for the past two years.

State records showed 3,541,738 cars and trucks registered in the United States on January 1, 1917. There is 1 motor car for every 13 people in Iowa and Nebraska, 1 for every 19 people in Arizona and Montana, and 1 for every 22 people in Texas. New York State and Pennsylvania have only 1 for every 37 people. (Reprint from Automobile, Mar. 15, 1917.)

ADVERTISING THE AUTOMOBILE.

The advertising expense of motor-car makers based on the volume of business is about the same as in other lines of manufactured and trade-marked articles. The Hudson Co.'s advertising expense last year was 1.3 per cent on the volume of their sales; the Studebaker Co. spent only nine-tenths of 1 per cent, while the Maxwell spent 2 per cent for advertising and Overland 3 per cent. Printers' Ink of May 10, 1917, says the average for 40 advertisers of various lines was 4½ per cent.

CARS ARE MADE EVERYWHERE.

So many cars are produced in Michigan and Indiana that statements made indicate the belief that only those States are interested in motor-car manufacture.

While the great majority of the cars are put together or assembled in Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio, Indiana, New York, and Illinois, the parts for these cars are made in a score of States throughout the country.

There are automobile factories in 32 States. (The Automobile, Mar. 15, 1917.) There are 825 makers of parts and accessories dealing directly and more than 1,100 other companies dealing indirectly with the trade to supply the needs of car makers, and these companies are from almost every State in the country.

The Chilton Trade Directory lists 465 articles sold to automobile makers, including leather, cotton, lumber, steel, copper, paint, glass, rubber, brass, and parts (complete), ranging from air gauges, ammeters, and axles to windshields, wrenches, and wheels.

POSITION OF MANUFACTURERS OF PARTS AND ACCESSORIES.

Parts and accessory manufacturers call attention to the fact that any great falling off in the industry, curtailing production and with possible failures, would leave them with many articles manufactured for a special purpose but unavailable for general use. Parts like axles, steering gears, frames, and bodies are designed especially for certain cars and are of little use for other cars of different design and weights.

DEALERS AND GARAGES EVERYWHERE.

Even after motor cars are sold they must be rehandled by 25,000 or more dealers in every city and hamlet, stored by 23,000 garage-owners, and repaired when necessary by 12,000 machine shops.

THE DEALER'S POSITION AND RISK.

The dealer's position in connection with this tax warrants careful consideration. He maintains salesrooms, under lease, with certain fixed expenses all dependent on the sale of certain types of motor car. If a dealer can not obtain cars from his own company, he suffers a loss, because most other lines are represented in his own city and he is left with nothing to sell.

Reports show that not more than half of the motor-car dealers are making more than a living. The dealer buys his cars at 15 to 25 per cent from the list price (on 60 per cent of the cars it is 18 per cent or less) and out of that margin he is obliged to pay rent, commissions to salesmen, heat, light, and power, furnish a certain amount of free service on all cars sold, and because of his using gasoline and having his cars driven by demonstrators he is obliged to pay high rates for fire and liability insurance.

To make sales dealers are obliged to take in the second-hand cars of their customers, which are invariably sold at cost and in many cases at a loss. In general, it may be said that the average dealer has to make two sales to get one profit, because, with the exception of Fords, four out of five sales of new cars involve the trading of an old car.

UNFAIR TO TAX CARS IN HANDS OF DEALERS.

Because of the trade practice of buying motor cars in advance, the plan to apply the tax on cars held by other than manufacturers at time the law becomes effective would entail a severe hardship upon the dealers.

It is customary for dealers to take cars from the manufacturers during the winter for selling during the spring months. Dealers now have millions of dollars worth of new and second-hand cars on hand; they have accepted contracts from subdealers for future delivery and retail buyers at published prices, and payment of the tax would mean substantial losses. If an attempt is made to change the retail buyers' orders, it will result in many cancellations. The second-hand cars in the hands of the dealers have been taken in at their full worth, and in most cases will be sold without profit. To tax these used cars when cars in the hands of users are not taxed is wholly unfair, and will certainly result in large losses to the dealers.

In selling to customers the dealer has to overcome the prejudice which the former has in connection with the general taxing of automobiles, involving as it does in some States a car tax, a driver's license tax, a wheel tax, a personal tax, and in some cases, as in the District of Columbia, a double registration required by the District and by the adjacent States.

Then, too, in some States, as in North Carolina, $500 must be paid for a license to sell any make of motor car in the State.

MOTOR TRUCKS NOT A LUXURY.

It seems very unfair to class motor trucks in the bill as a luxury. Passenger cars have almost entirely ceased to be a luxury, while motor trucks never were. Truck makers are supplying a vehicle for the transportation of goods that is aiding the railroads and helping to keep down the cost of almost everything that is used by the American family.

The 300,000 commercial cars now in use in the country give an annual service of 4,500,000,000 ton-miles. At the average railroad freight rate of seven-tenths of a cent per ton-mile this is worth $31,500,000, and at the rate of 20 cents per ton-mile for haulage by wagon road is worth $900,000,000 a year.

Certainly the motor truck has no place under any heading that carries with it the idea of luxury. On the contrary, the truck is to be considered a great and growing necessity in our industrial, military, and commercial life.

People will not freely buy automobiles in war times or under heavy tax conditions, and the greatest kind of economy must be practiced and energetic business methods followed to maintain a fair selling average this year.

If makers have to begin curtailing output to any substantial extent it will mean increased manufacturing cost. Reduction of output does not correspondingly save overhead, which, next to material, is the largest element entering into the manufacture of cars and trucks.

Automobile manufacturers are proud of the advancement of their industry, and the service of the motor car has supplied and added to the facilities for the transportation of men and materials.

The automobile makers asked to be recorded in their desire to cooperate with the Government needs in every way. They simply ask to be treated like all other industries, and in the long run believe such treatment will furnish greater financial and greater industrial support to the Government, and with an even chance of maintaining themselves under the very trying conditions which beset all lines of endeavor in this crisis.

Our effort has been to give in a most concise form a statement of the position of the industry, and we are ready to supply further information and details regarding any of the statements made herein.

STATEMENT OF DR. E. C. CROW, OF THE CROW-ELKHART CO.

Dr. CROW. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, we have thought it wise to give you a concrete statement of an individual concern, which of course is embarrassing to me.

We have been manufacturing automobiles for eight years in the State of Indiana, at Elkhart, and did not make much progress until last year for the reason that overhead expense was too great, and our volume was too small. Last year, however, we turned out approximately 3,000 cars and made a little money. In view of the advancing cost of all sorts of material, with which everybody is familiar, we found about the first of this year that we were not making any money on our cars. Our net profit last year per car was $49.89, but after the first of the year we found we were not making any money at all. We were compelled to advance the price of that car $50. We sold the car last year at $795 and this year for $845, and the advance has taken care of the advance in materials up to the present time, but if material continues to advance we will have to increase the price of the car again or quit, even if this tax is not imposed If this tax is imposed, our commercial life, I believe, is limited.

We are employing now about 500 people. We have approximately 500 dealers, big, little, and all kinds, scattered throughout the United States. But we do not believe, in view of the fact that we have recently raised the price of our car, that we can add this tax to the price of the car when we sell it to the distributor or dealer, and we know beyond any doubt that we can not absorb it and live. We are too familiar with our costs, and so forth, to try to fool ourselves in regard to that.

Then, if we approximate our output at 3,000 cars at the selling price, after the 20 per cent is taken out which is about what we give our dealers, it would leave a tax of $31.50, approximately, to be paid by us or by the consumer, and we do not think we can possibly pass it on, and we know that we can not absorb it ourselves. That would amount to $94,000, and that is 33⅓ per cent of our capitalization. In three years, if we could live that long, we would be done; we would be down and out absolutely, because the tax we would pay, as I say, would be one-third of our entire capitalization of $250,000.

Senator MCCUMBER. Let me ask a question to elucidate what you are saying. Is it not absolutely true in the automobile business that there are a large number of manufacturers of medium-priced cars which are in intense competition with cars selling just a little lower, and on those medium-priced cars the companies are not making more than 5 per cent, and if they attempt to raise them they destroy their sales entirely and lose them to the lower-priced cars, even though the lower class of car may be making 100 per cent, like Ford?

Dr. CROW. That is quite true, absolutely true. I had overlooked that point. I am glad you called it to my attention. That is very true. If we lower the price, we go broke; if we raise the price, we can not sell the car and will go broke; so it looks like we are up against a stone wall.

STATEMENT OF MR. THOMAS HENDERSON, OF THE WINTON CO.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am here to represent the 400 or more makers who make 20 per cent of all the cars made in the United States, and I was asked to come here and make this presentation because of the fact that the Winton Co. is one of the oldest, perhaps the first company, that was advertising and selling from a standard model, automobiles in the United States. We have had some experience, if we do not have much money.

We had, to begin with, to hew the car out of the whole, to forge the gears on the anvil and turn them upon the lathe, and to forge our own axles and everything else, to make even our own electrical apparatus as best we could, and develop that and everything else about it, because there was no one to go to; and yet we managed to live on and build up a business for over 20 years, and in that time we made some money. We made enough money to build up quite a sizeable business, but none of us got rich out of it. Some years we made no money, some years we lost money; but taking one year with another, especially when competition was not so keen, we managed to come out on the right side of the ledger. But with all our economical management, that the whole trade knows and has looked to and commented on, the fact that Mr. Winton, myself, and our treasurer, Mr. Brown, worked there for very small salaries in that company—and we worked, and worked all the time in the management of the company—perhaps accounts for the slight success we have had. We have no high-priced man around there. With all our efforts we to-day can not afford to pay 5 per cent on our product and come out whole at all.

I have the figures on that. Just the main facts of the case were taken by the public accountants in Cleveland, whose reports will show exactly this:

In 1914 our whole business was $381,000, and we made 6 per cent. In 1915 we had about $5,000,000 and made 3 per cent. You will notice, then, that the price of material and the cost of labor was going up very fast. We made a slight increase in the price of our car, and in 1916 we turned out $9,000,000 worth of business, the largest business we ever did in our history, but the net profit on that large business was just 4⅝ per cent. We have to turn out quite a large number of cars and sell them at the full price before we break even. During the years that we did not make money, they were years that for some one reason or another we did not get enough cars together or did not sell enough. We made money on every car we sold, but we did not make enough to pay overhead and to come out on the right side of the ledger at the end of the year.

Our condition is the reason why I have consented to make this personal revelation of the condition of this old company, of which I am so proud, and to tell you the sad fact that, with all our experience, we are not making any more money than that, where many people who came into the business after all the detail of it was developed and who had the genius to go ahead and finance it in a big way and work rapidly to large production, have made these fabulous millions. We were the people who laid the foundation of this business for them. Mr. Haynes, who is present, started out the very year we started, and began buiness in the same way. When, with all our vast experience, we were not able to see any better than that, I want to tell you that we know there are hundreds of companies that can not make up this increase in the form of 5 per cent tax on all their output and live, for the reason that those who are better situated—those who have made these great successes and whose balance sheets show millions of cash and surplus—can go on the market, "We will absorb that tax, and we do not need to raise our price," but all these other companies will be forced to add that tax. By so doing they will have that many less sales, and any sales made will go to the larger and more wealthy companies, and the smaller ones will be the sufferers. We are here to make this revelation and to plead for those which are worse off than ourselves.

STATEMENT OF MR. A. B. C. HARDY, OF THE CHEVROLET MOTOR CO.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the committees of Congress understand how dependent a business the automobile business is. Each man can use his own figures if he knows they are right. I have no plea to make for the Chevrolet Co. Those things which we can do we will work out in the most patriotic way. The company will do what it has to do. We hope that it will be asked to do it in the same way that all other lines of business will be asked, and will go the limit. We shall be in at the finish; but there is this element in this, and I will have to use our own figures for illustration.

The product which we build is priced at $550. That price was made upon the basis of estimates made 18 months ago. Into the frame of the automobile enters what is called frame steel. Ours will be a lower class of stock than that contained in the higher-priced cars. It takes 120 pounds of metal, including the waste in cutting and fabricating. Eighteen months ago that metal stood us $1.35 per hundred pounds. To-day the most favorable contract we can get is $5.15 to $5.25. It will take 250 pounds of thin sheet metal, of a very high grade, to make what you see on the outside of the body, the fenders, the running-board shields, and the hood of the motor car. In the costs we figured upon this car 18 months ago the average price of that metal was $2.75 per hundred pounds. We would be very glad to get a more favorable contract to-day than $8.15 per hundred pounds. The cheap stuff that is under the body of the car, in the muffler, and things that do not have to show but simply have to hold something, is the ordinary black stovepipe iron. Eighteen months ago $1.75 per hundred pounds was a good, high price on that metal. A contract made 90 days ago called for $5.75 per hundred pounds on that same material. There are 131 pounds of cheap malleable iron in a cheap car sold at $550 that cost us $3.90 per hundred pounds 18 months ago, and it is now $6.70, and July 1 it must go far, far, above that. There are 350 pounds of ordinary gray iron castings involved in the motor in that particular car, and it does not differ in that very much from other cars of like or better class. That is based on standard northern pig iron, which 18 months ago was selling for $13.35 a ton. An exceedingly favorable contract made four months ago is $43 a ton. The average amount of lumber that goes into a cheap car is not great It will figure $16 on cars made six months ago. After all, it is an item. Throwing in the materials used in loading these cars and all, the average price of that lumber 14 months ago was $27.50 a thousand, and it is now from $42 to $47.50. Cotton fabrics inside of the tire, in a cheap tire, in the top, in the so-called imitation leather, and similar places, has raised in price over 100 per cent.

These are simply indications that these automobile people, not us—do not think of us in the matter at all—have absorbed and absorbed and absorbed, and have not raised their prices—and why? They are trying to hold this industry alive, trying to have it not react upon the sales and thus stop these plants. I believe that we have fairly well bought our materials by buying 12 or 14 or 16 months ahead, if possible. We make our motor; we make our transmission; we make our axles; we make our universal joints and many other parts, and we have considered ourselves as manufacturers. I will swear on the stand that 70 per cent of the money value in a cheap car, such as a $550 car, is completely finished and fabricated in other men's plants, and they are all specialists. When you get back and figure on that question, really they are absolutely dependent upon getting their material wrapped up and on the market. The automobile business is only the stopping place to wrap the material into a package that the public will take away and pay their money for

When I started off the other day we had received within the past three days 700 cancellations because of this threatened condition. Our profit in January, February, and March, on $11,000,000 worth of business, was far less than 8 per cent, and the books are open to you and the statements ready. If on that volume of business nothing more than that can be realized, I do not know what the situation is with the smaller concerns who can not command their merchandise. We have come to a point where we can not absorb any more. We have got to get a little more money for the product, anyway. If a tax is to be tied on top of all that we have now got to bear, we must come out and ask for a double raise. The raise we were compelled to make recently has already stopped sales with us, and this tax will paralyze this industry. Behind that cheap car that I have been telling you about are 135 different concerns who have invested their money and their talent. They are specialists. We have been telling them to "go ahead; we will get an outlet for you." They have strained their resources, and we know it, and we feel a moral responsibility about it. We have engaged more machinery that is coming in a little at a time. The condition is certainly very serious. We ask you, gentlemen, to give it most careful consideration before you apply this large tax to our business.

STATEMENT OF MR. ELWOOD HAYNES, OF THE HAYNES AUTOMOBILE CO.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, Mr. Henderson and I started into the automobile business at a very early date, and it has now been about 24 years since we commenced to build the first car. I will say in regard to the industry that it has not been a bed of roses by any manner of means. Those who started earlier perhaps had a harder time than those who came in later years, because, as Mr. Henderson has already explained, we had to make nearly everything that went into the construction of the car.

For 20 years in our business I think we declared one 6 per cent dividend, and we felt as though we could hardly afford to do that. I must admit that within the last two or three years we have done pretty well. We have made more money in that period than ever before, but considering the business as a whole it has not been more remunerative than any other legitimate business up to the present time. I think the public is making a mistake and I think the committee is making a mistake when they put the automobile into a class along with things that are of no utility at all—for instance, with chewing gum and moving pictures. If there is an accident of any kind to a train, you get your automobile down there and if there is a wreck you bring those people home and take care of them. If somebody is sick in your family you call for your physician and he has an automobile and is able to get to you quickly. Suburban residences have become possible for people who formerly lived in congested parts of the large cities and who are now enabled to live in the suburbs because of the automobile, even where they are within or without the reach of the trolley lines.

I do not want to take your valuable time further than this, but I can assure you that so far as our own company is concerned, the business has not been at all remunerative. It has been a menace to everything that we had for 15 or 20 years, and with the exception of the last 2 or 3 years it has not paid us at all. We have done well in the last 2 or 3 years, but our business for the month of March this year was about 20 per cent greater than it was in April. That is an alarming condition, for the reason that usually April deliveries are very much better than March. This was on account of the war itself, not the war tax. It caused people to hesitate to purchase. The people do not know what may happen, and they hesitate to buy an automobile under those conditions. Of course, this committee and nobody else is responsible for that, but it is a serious condition that we in the business have to face.

STATEMENT OF MR. FREDERICK I. BARROWS, OF THE LEXINGTON-HOWARD CO., LEXINGTON, IND.

Mr. BARROWS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am going to speak about three things I conceive to be important in this situation as regards our car. It has been manufactured since 1908, and up to 1914 the net results of all those labors had been a loss of $180,000, for the reason that no automobile concern can live until it is doing a business of at least a million dollars a year. I think that even a genius like Ford could not make an automobile business a success unless he did a million dollars of business a year, unless they were in some subsidiary manufacturing business that brought in the revenue some other way. Our business has to be big. We can not sell merely a dollar's worth of automobile. We must sell something like $500 or $1,000 or $2,000 worth of automobile.

It seems to me the levying of this tax will disorganize the business. It will ruin some people who are not appearing here to-day as automobile men. It will prevent us from doing our share, which we are truly anxious to do in this war. It will not bring the revenue that you gentlemen desire and that the people expect. We are perfectly ready to do our share. I think the automobile people were among the first to tender their services in any way they could help, and they are just as ready to-day to do their full duty. We are ready to pay our full share of taxation. We will not whimper on the proposition of paying our full share of taxation, but we want to be in with the other fellows, and incidentally the thing that stumps our business will not make it possible for us to pay our taxes.

You may say that the fire insurance man can add his taxes. We can not, because when we add anything more how are you going to get a market? If you will say in your bill that we may add this tax to the cost of the automobiles, it will be all right if you will then say they shall buy them. If you would say that we might be for this proposition, but as it stands we have 36 distributing districts in the United States, and we have got a stop order from each and every one of them since this proposition has been under discussion. I do not know what did it. I do not know whether the weather did it or the talk of conditions did it, but I know it was done. I know that we have been way, way behind in our orders. I know we are now right up, and we reduced our schedule for the coming month from 650 to 400, and we are one of the little fellows.

We did what you might think was a big business last month of $403,000, but that is a little thing in the automobile business, because on that amount of business you can just hardly get by. If we were to make 10 per cent on that, we would be so tickled that I don't know what we would be willing to do. We would be willing to pay some big taxes, I assure you. We have never seen anything like 10 per cent on our turnover since 1908. We are getting better and stronger. We are getting toward the point where we have volume, and when you get volume you can do something. We are merely assemblers. A lot of companies are closely associated with us. They depend on us, and while we have a capital of only $500,000, we have on contract, on positive, definite orders, the most of which are started to be performed, $5,000,000 worth of material. I wonder how in the world a $500,000 company is going to buy five millions worth of material, with the market going down for automobiles and people saying, "I guess the Government does not want us to use automobiles because it is not patriotic to use them." I do not believe the Congress of the United States will tell the people that this necessity for health and for business purposes is in the same class with whisky. I do not know but what I like whisky—I would not say—but I will say this, that I do not think that we are on a par with that. Here is a business where there are 250 or 300 men who are putting together the stuff that 5,000 men are building in different parts of the country. Down in Mississippi they saw up the wood for our frames; other parts are made in Pennsylvania and some of them in Connecticut. We buy a lot of stuff there. There are 450 different classes of material go into our little automobile, and if we are shy one of them—bingo, we can not ship!

My main business is not to talk, but I do know how to get this stuff together and get it matched up, and to turn this stuff over to the extent of the amount of our capital stock of $500,000 about once a month, and if we could make 5 per cent during the coming year on what I can turnover, I would be tickled to death. I do not know much about selling, but I do know that when they telegraph us from all over the country to hold up their orders until they know what is happening that it means a very serious condition for us to handle.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps a lot of people have decided to stop using automobiles and are going to get Fords.

Mr. BARROWS. That might be so. If the Senate wants us to do something else besides make automobiles, and let them ride in wheelbarrows, just let us know. We do not want to stand back on any proposition of that kind.

When the first news of this war came we telegraphed a positive offer of our services to this Government. If you think tax is not high enough, we are not standing back on that, but we do want to be treated as other manufacturers, and we do want you to recognize this product of ours as a necessity, a useful thing, and not a harmful thing.

Payment of Second-Class Postage According to Rate of Subscription Price and Number of Copies Circulated Through the Mails.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ALBERT JOHNSON,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 19, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, during consideration of H. R. 4280, a bill to provide revenue to defray war expenses, which bill carries a zone system of second-class postage rates, which system is thought by many publishers to be unfair, I have in connection with a number of my colleagues prepared a bill which seeks to place on an absolutely fair basis all circulation of second-class matter through the mails. The system is based on the collection per annual average circulation and the price per annum of the publication, and is so arranged that small dailies and weeklies with limited circulations pay a small sum in addition to the 1 cent per pound for the privilege of mail circulation. Large papers pay in proportion to their large circulations, and in proportion to their subscription price. All papers pay the present rate of 1 cent per pound, and the "free-in-county" privilege is left to those papers now enjoying it.

The rates I have suggested begin at one-fourth of a cent for papers selling at 50 cents a year and having a circulation of less than 20,000. Such a paper, with 1,000 subscribers, pays a war tax of $1.25. If it has 100,000 subscribers it pays $1,000, the rate having increased when the paper passed 20,000 mailed subscriptions.

A $1 paper with 1,000 subscribers would pay $5 war tax, with 10,000 subscribers that paper would pay $50, and with 20,000 mail subscribers $200; or, if it should reach 100,000 subscribers, it would pay $2,000.

If the Saturday Evening Post, selling for $1.50 per year, has 1,000,000 subscribers, it would pay $80,000 in addition to the 1-cent-a-pound rate now prevailing. This is not an exorbitant tax and yet it is enough. The scale fixes permanently the overhead charge that a newspaper at a certain price must pay on reaching a certain circulation.

The Weekly Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, with 85,000 subscribers, if all are sent through the mails, would pay $425 and 1 cent per pound.

The Calvert Gazette, published in Prince Frederick County, Md., has 500 subscribers at $1 per year. It would have its circulation in county free, pay 1 cent a pound for papers sent outside the county, and would pay $2.50 war tax. Should this paper reach 1,000 copies it would pay $5.

The Iron Age, published at $5 a year, is reported to have 11,924 subscribers. It would pay 2 cents for each subscriber, or $450, and the regular pound rate of 1 cent.

Comfort, with 1,276,800 subscribers, at 25 cents each, would pay 1 cent per annual subscription, or $12,768, and the pound rate in addition.

The plan if carried out will produce an enormous sum in revenue, remove all complaint of undercharge in second-class mail matter, and will give the newspapers an opportunity to help finance the war in exact proportion to their circulation and ability to pay a war tax.

The following table shows the graduated scale, commencing with a tax rate of one-quarter of a cent on 50-cent papers with a circulation of 1,000, and running up to a tax of 12 cents per average annual mail subscription for newspapers or magazines selling at $6 per year and having in excess of 100,000 subscribers.

Tax rate.	Subscription rate.	1,000	5,000	10,000	20,000	100,000
¼ cent	$0.50 or less	$2.50	$12.50	$25.00
½ cent					$100
1 cent						$1,000
½ cent	$1	5.00	25.00	50.00
1 cent					200
2 cents						2,000
1 cent	$2	20.00	100.00	200.00
2 cents					800
4 cents						8,000
1½ cents	$3	45.00	225.00	450.00
3 cents					1,800
6 cents						18,000
2 cents	$4	80.00	400.00	800.00
4 cents					3,200
8 cents						32,000
2½ cents	$5	125.00	625.00	1,250.00
5 cents					5,000
10 cents						50,000
3 cents	$6	180.00	900.00	1,800.00
6 cents					7,200
12 cents						72,000

In order not to discourage the securing of subscriptions but three divisions providing different charges for a number of subscribers are made.

The first fixes one rate for all papers circulated through the mails up to 20,000. The second makes a rate for all papers up to 100,000. The third rate is for papers in excess of 100,000. The largest rate is applied to every mail subscription and does not permit the first 20,000 to be at a lower rate than the other subscriptions which have placed the paper in the 20,000 subscription class.

The machinery for setting up this plan of taxation is already in operation. Newspapers now have to certify to the true circulation. They can be asked to divide the circulation into mail circulation and other circulation.

The plan is incorporated in a bill which I am introducing. The bill is as follows:

A bill providing a graduated rate for payment of second-class postage on newspapers and periodicals according to rate of subscription price, and number of copies circulated through the mails.

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after June 1, 1917, the rate of postage on all mail matter of the second class shall be, in addition to the existing rate of 1 cent for each pound or fraction thereof, as follows:

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is 50 cents or less per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, one-fourth of 1 cent for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is 50 cents or less per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 copies but less than 100,000 copies per issue, one-half of 1 cent for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is 50 cents or less per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 1 cent for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than 50 cents, but less than $1.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, one-half of 1 cent for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than 50 cents, but less than $1.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 copies per issue, but less than 100,000 copies per issue, 1 cent for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than 50 cents but less than $1.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 2 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $1 but less than $2.01 per year and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, 1 cent for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $1 but less than $2.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 copies but less than 100,000 copies per issue, 2 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $1 but less than $2.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 4 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $2 but less than $3.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, 1½ cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $2 but less than $3.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 but less than 100,000 copies per issue, 3 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $2 but less than $3.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 6 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $3 but less than $4.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, 2 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $3 but less than $4.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 copies but less than 100,000 copies per issue, 4 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $3 but less than $4.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 8 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $4 but less than $5.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, 2½ cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $4 but less than $5.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 but less than 100,000 copies per issue, 5 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $4 but less than $5.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 10 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $5 but less than $6.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, 3 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $5 but less than $6.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 copies but less than 100,000 copies per issue, 6 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $5 but less than $6.01 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 100,000 copies per issue, 12 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $6 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is less than 20,000 copies per issue, 5 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

For newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals whose subscription price is more than $6 per year, and whose circulation through the mails is more than 20,000 copies per year, 10 cents for each annual subscription circulated through the mails.

Drunkenness in Russia Said to Be Growing—British Workers Must Drink Beer, Says Food Chief.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JACOB E. MEEKER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 19, 1917.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I wish to insert, first, the following article taken from the New York Tribune of Thursday, May 17, 1917, in regard to the reported increase of drunkenness in Russia:

DRUNKENNESS IN RUSSIA SAID TO BE GROWING—SECRET DISTILLERIES ARE MAKING GREAT QUANTITIES OF VODKA.

PETROGRAD, May 2.

Prohibition of traffic in vodka, which went into effect at the beginning of the war, while reducing to a minimum the percentage of drunkenness in cities throughout the Empire, has met with less flattering results in the villages, according to reports recently received. In these rural communities secret distilleries have sprung up and a "new scourge" has taken the place of the vodka of other days. This is especially true of Siberian villages, says Ryetch. A Siberian deputy is quoted to the effect that the peasants, instead of bringing corn to the towns to sell, are engaged in buying the small stocks remaining in such towns for sale to secret distilleries of vodka at fancy prices, sometimes paying as high as 14 cents a pound.

"This communication," continues Ryetch, "is confirmed by the Siberian press. Nearly every village now has its own distillery. Consumption of this homemade product is increasing the number of hooligans in the villages and the latter are suffering in consequence. And this evil is not confined to Siberia. In the middle Provinces the same conditions exist." The Tambovsky Zemsky Vestnik says of these Provinces: "Homemade vodka is consumed in enormous quantities, in spite of its high cost. The peasants have plenty of money, and, with few distractions in the villages, drinking is on the increase." The latter article concludes with the significant observation: "Perhaps those who are afraid of an educated peasant are secretly condoning this drunkenness."

The advocates of governmental prohibition of the distillation of alcoholic liquors if they be sincere in their desire to minimize drunkenness should ask themselves this very practical question: "What sort of a spy system will be necessary to prevent such distillation of spirits should legal prohibition become a fact?" The second item I insert is from the New York Herald of Friday, May 18, 1917, headed "British workers must drink beer." This interview is given by Mr. Kennedy Jones, director of food economy of Great Britain, and is submitted for what it is worth from a man of such intimate knowledge of conditions there:

BRITISH WORKERS MUST DRINK BEER, SAYS FOOD CHIEF—"A PRACTICAL, SCIENTIFIC FACT," HE DECLARES, DEFENDING USE OF CEREALS.

LONDON, May 17, 1917.

Influential representations have been made to the ministry of food that the continuation of brewing in Great Britain is likely to make it more difficult to get increased export of cereals from America. Kennedy Jones, director of food economy, gave the Associated Press an authoritative statement in regard to the restrictions already imposed on brewing and the complexities of the problem. He said:

"We quite realize that misapprehension may exist in the United States regarding our beer consumption. That is only natural. We are daily receiving letters from numbers in this country who consider that they are absolved from the necessity of saving bread because other people drink beer and who demand that, as a first step in food economy, all brewing should cease.

"As things stand no more barley will be malted in this country except a small quantity for use as coloring matter. The last barley was malted in February. Therefore the only question is, Would there be a very valuable saving in food by mixing the malt which exists with flour and making it into bread rather than by using it for the brewing of beer? A strong body of scientific opinion holds that beer has its food value. Apart from that it is a fact that only a small percentage of malt—not more than 5 per cent—can be mixed with flour in bread making or it produces a sticky and unpalatable loaf.

"Whether the brewing of beer shall be stopped at once and the barley already malted used for mixing with flour is a question of policy, and hinges on the point whether the malt in bread or in beer will secure the most efficient prosecution of the war. Unlike America, beer has been for centuries a part of the daily diet of our working classes. The first duty and the first effort of those responsible for the ordering of public affairs is to secure a maximum output of work for the prosecution of the war from all workers. A great number of men engaged in very heavy manual labor—as for example, men working at blast furnaces—must drink considerable malty liquid. This is not only a practical fact, it is a scientific fact. The bulk of these men are in the habit of taking that liquid in the form of beer. The question is not whether cold tea would be better for them, but what would be the effect on the output of work by suddenly cutting off their supply of beer.

"It it be found advisable to stop beer altogether—upon which point there is a considerable difference of opinion—it would be simple common sense to allow the workers time to adapt themselves to the change gradually, by a gradual reduction of the supply, rather than by checking or stopping the brewing of beer at once. Also it is well to bear in mind that if the worker is not deriving part of his energy, as has been his habit, from beer, he may require more bread, so that practically no actual saving of bread could be effected.

"Moreover, we may well take a leaf out of Germany's book in this matter. That country—which again is unlike the United States, in that beer is part of its normal diet—is in the matter of food now scientifically organized with a view to supplying its workers with a maximum of energy for the prosecution of the war. South Germany is still brewing 35 per cent of its prewar quantity of beer against our 27½ per cent, yet no one would suggest that the food situation in Germany has not been serious for the last 12 months.

"Of course there may arrive the point at which it is considered necessary on review of all the circumstances, to stop all brewing, but until this point is reached, and in view of the drastic restrictions already imposed, it is scarcely fair to let the impression get abroad that we are blind to the considerations involved or determined to continue beer drinking regardless of its effect upon the war. It should be clearly understood that because of its relation to daily life and the output of munitions beer occupies a very different status in this country as compared with its relation to the life of the American people."

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE W. EDMONDS,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 19, 1917.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more to the dislike of the taxpayer than the annoyance occasioned by the multiplicity of taxes now in operation by municipal, State, and National Government, and it is now proposed by this bill, known as the war-revenue bill, to add to the burden.

The taxpayer does not object to paying his fair share of the necessary funds for the operations of the Government, but he does object to being placed under the necessity of preparing many reports and to collecting and returning numerous funds from different channels, entailing annoyances and expenses which bring him no return and consumes his time and attention which should be in the natural course of business applied to his customary employment.

In the bill proposed to us the committee has failed to recognize the unfairness of enlarging the different lines of taxation, particularly when they have in the lines of taxation already established the means of collecting sufficient funds for all the necessary portion of the increase of the public debt it should be considered proper to be raised at this time. These channels of income are now well established and workable, and an increase in the amount will not increase the collection expenses appreciably, which is of considerable advantage to the Government, and certainly will save the taxpayer the expense of the numerous Government employees necessary for the collection of the taxes proposed.

Any tax on what are now public necessities, such as are contained in several of the sections and which are passed on to the consumer as a tax, will be unpopular; they will continuously call to his attention the imposition of the tax and cause doubt in his mind as to how much he is really paying; he would far rather pay once or twice a lump sum and be relieved of the recounting made necessary by the numerous smaller sums.

Again, if these taxes are not passed on to the consumer as a direct charge, the absorption of them by the various activities they will pass through will lead to an increase in prices which, of course, will be liberal enough to cover all expenses. For instance, if the freight rate on a certain commodity should be $1.25 to a given point the tax would be 3.75 cents, the middle man would, of course, not advance his price to the consumer the exact sum but would raise his price an even amount, say, at least 5 cents or possibly 10 cents. The effect of taxes of this character would be to raise the cost of living, already high enough.

The burden placed on the corporations to collect these taxes, such as on electric lights, telephones, and advertising charges, and so forth, will result in reducing their earning capacity, and consequently the amount now paid as a corporation tax, these companies send out thousands of small bills annually to each of which the additional charge will have to be made.

It is undoubtedly unfair to the first-class mail that it should pay any increase of rate, and it is just as unfair to the service that the Government should continue to carry the second-class mail at such an enormous loss. A fairer system than the zone system could be evolved by making a pound charge for postage based upon the number of pieces in a pound, as the great cost of carrying this mail is in the actual delivery.

For the present, and until a thorough investigation can be made, I would advocate an increase per pound of at least 1 or 2 cents on the second-class matter, such increase to include all matter, excluding none for any reason whatever.

As drawn by the committee, the bill does not meet with my approval. I feel that the circumstances do not justify the continued annoyance to the taxpayers, as proposed in its numerous items, and I trust the House will return it to have it redrawn on larger and more liberal lines.

Resolutions Adopted by the Knox County Bar Association.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. OSCAR E. BLAND,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 19, 1917.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution adopted by the Knox County Bar Association in reference to the war with the Imperial German Government.

The resolution is as follows:

Mr. President, your committee heretofore appointed to prepare and submit resolutions expressing the attitude of the Knox County Bar Association in reference to the war which the Imperial German Government has begun against the Government of the United States of America by denying it the unmolested right to use the high seas for transportation of persons and property, by sinking our ships engaged in lawful pursuits, destroying the lives of our citizens and their properties without provocation or justification, calls upon every loyal American citizen to avenge the wrong, resent the uncalled-for attack, and defend at all hazard and with every resource at our command the lives and property of our people, their rights, the honor and dignity of our Nation. The attack made is a challenge to our patriotism, a deadly stroke at our liberties: Therefore be it

Resolved—

First. That we hereby declare our unwavering belief in the wholesome doctrine announced by President Wilson in his masterly presentation of our grievances and the unprovoked assaults on our national rights, the uncalled-for attack upon and destruction of American lives and property on the high seas, the common highway of all the world, the willful and intentional disregard and persistent violation of the principles of international law for safeguarding of persons and property by the Imperial German Government when he said in his recent message: "The world must be made safe for democracy; its peace must be planted upon the trusted foundations of political liberty." The maintenance of this doctrine requires that the rights of persons, property, and lawful commerce shall be upheld and free from piratical menace. We most earnestly indorse his courageous and patriotic stand for the preservation of American rights, both on land and sea, and the safeguarding of political liberty, and his determination to defend the lives and property of American citizens at home and abroad and repel all invasion of the same, whether by foreign or domestic foe.

We congratulate the National Congress on its prompt, liberal, and generous action in complying with the requests of the President for all necessary legislation and appropriations to prepare this country with both means and men and other resources to defend it against the attack which has been made on it without provocation or justification, and we pledge both the President and Congress our whole hearted cooperation and assistance in all measures required to sustain the Nation in the hour of its peril and prosecuting the defense of our citizens, our property, and our rights to a victorious termination, in order that American rights, life, property, and honor shall be preserved while engaged in lawful pursuits, and shall not be menaced or jeopardized at home or abroad. That Americans now are as loyal as to the cause of liberty as they were in 1776 and in 1861, and are determined that the principles then established by the sacrifice of life, property, and treasure "shall not perish from the earth," but shall live and be spread to all the peoples of the world, and we most ardently command the President in his patriotic stand for the preservation of these great American principles and his determination for their extension to other nations, the inspiration for a greater and better civilization.

Second. We most cordially indorse the patriotic and untiring efforts of Gov. James P. Goodrich to prepare Indiana for the performance of the full measure of her duty in the great conflict in which the Nation has now entered and pledge him our faithful cooperation in successfully consummating the great work he has undertaken in order that Indiana shall do in this as it has always done when the life of the Nation was in jeopardy or its honor and dignity assaulted. We believe it to be the duty of every loyal citizen of the State to assist him in every necessary and essential way to equip our State, so it can efficiently discharge every responsibility devolving upon it, whether by means, men, or other essentials, to the end that it can and may continue to occupy the position to which it has always been entitled in the sisterhood of States, in sustaining the Nations honor and defending the lives and property of the people, and thereby contributing its full measure to the upbuilding of a broader and more enduring civilization.

Third. We further believe it to be the duty of the members of this bar to look after and care for the business, without compensation, of any members of the bar who may respond to their country's call to do battle for it, and we recommend this be done in order that all such will be assured their business will not suffer because of their absence.

Respectfully submitted.

W. A. CULLOP.
J. P. L. WEEMS.
JAMES W. EMISON.

Business as Usual—Prosperity Ahead—War to Aid Business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 21, 1917.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe at this period in our history it will be rendering a service to the country to give publicity through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the interesting and valuable opinions of Messrs. J. Ogden Armour, of Chicago; Frank A. Vanderlip, of New York, and N. T. Folwell, of Philadelphia, on some of the questions affecting the interest of the American people. The high positions these gentlemen hold in the business world, the eminent success they have achieved, entitle them to be heard, and their wise advice the thoughtful consideration of those who are seeking light and are anxious to advance and promote the public good.

Mr. Armour is at the head of the greatest business plant of the kind in the world. Mr. Vanderlip represents the leading bank in the richest country in all the world. Mr. Folwell is president of the leading manufacturing club in the United States.

No better or more useful information has been presented in either branch of Congress to the American people than is carried in the following statements:

"BUSINESS AS USUAL."

[By Mr. Armour.]

CHICAGO, May 16.

Continuation of the prosperity of the country, in spite of the war, without any temporary depression, will follow the adoption of a "business-as-usual" program.

This is the opinion of J. Ogden Armour, Chicago meat packer and member of the advisory committee of the Council for National Defense.

"The prompt adoption by the American people of the 'business-as-usual' idea is going to enable this Nation to prosecute war without experiencing a temporary depression such as England and France have recently recovered from," Mr. Armour said, discussing the economic condition of the country.

"Modern war," he said, "requires the expenditure of huge sums of money. It means maximum employment and high wages for all workers. Other conditions peculiar to this war make it certain the Nation will enjoy a period of business and industrial activity the like of which has never been seen. This is assured, whether the war last several months or several years."

Speaking of the possibility that overcaution might result from war-economy suggestions, Mr. Armour said:

"Conditions are such that the people will soon see there is no occasion for them to become alarmed. They will have more money to spend than before. They will not find the things they want disappearing from the market.

"There is an abnormal demand for everything the workers of this country can grow or manufacture. There is work at high wages for every man and woman who wants work."

Of the billions to be lent to the allies, Mr. Armour said:

"It is a misnomer to call it a loan to our allies. We are primarily extending them credit. Instead of sending billions of dollars out of the country, the transaction means that billions of dollars will actually be freed for circulation in this country, through purchases of our products.

"In this connection remember the Government of the United States is a buyer for war purposes. The dollars of Uncle Sam have already begun to pour forth to stores, factories, and farms, to pay for the expense of mobilizing, drilling, equipping, and feeding the Army and Navy.

"Under civilian boards created by the President, this Nation is going ahead, fortified against delay and mistakes through the intelligent application of lessons learned in England and in France. This applies to industry as well as war.

"There is abundant evidence that we are profiting from the experience of Europe. Our President and his advisers will prevent such an industrial hitch as preceded the prosperous business conditions now prevailing in the British Isles and in France.

"I consider the present the most auspicious period, from the standpoint of national prosperity, in my memory. There is not one good reason why the business of this country should not proceed in its normal course. There is not one reason why people should fear for the future or should permit themselves to be swayed from the certainty that they are on a sound financial basis.

"The per capita wealth of Americans is greater than ever before—greater than that of any nation at any time in the past or present. Our national wealth is past the wildest dreams of a few years back.

"Labor is satisfactorily employed and at record wages. Every day the war lasts will find a greater demand for the labor and the brains of the wage and salary earners of the United States. Certainty of work and certainty of wages are the prime factors of prosperity. They make prosperity certain.

"Whether the war ends to-morrow or whether it lasts indefinitely, this much is certain: The United States, having possession of approximately 40 per cent of the world's supply of gold, the greatest natural resources and geographical isolation, is certain to suffer less than any other nation in the war or in the whole world.

"The Nation has been advised to economize on food. Economy means the intelligent use without waste. It does not call for self-denial Economy was recommended to stop the waste of the $700,000,000 worth of food which goes into the garbage pail each year.

"Patriotism should not seize upon parsimonious economy. There is no need for persons to cease purchasing. There is need only for the elimination of extravagances and waste. There is no reason for curtailment of the use of things ordinarily needed. There is need that everything be put to use.

"As patriots, it is our duty to stop the wastage of food. As patriots, it is equally important we do not stop the ordinary purchasing on which business and industry of the country are founded. Hysterical economy is as much a menace to the Nation as is prodigal waste.

"If I were asked to give a message to the American people it would be: Be strong in your faith that nature will reward the efforts being made to produce big crops, and cooperate with our President, Woodrow Wilson, in his efforts to keep the Nation composed and so organized as most efficiently to prosecute war.

"Be confident and live your normal lives as far as possible. Make business proceed as usual."

"PROSPERITY AHEAD."

[By Mr. Vanderlip.]

NEW YORK, May 18.

Different business but better business during the war is predicted by Frank A. Vanderlip, banker and member of the labor committee of the Council of National Defense's advisory commission.

Mr. Vanderlip said the war will call for readjustments, but not for diminution in volume of business; that times will be better than ever before, and that the people should be getting ready for top-speed production that will utilize every energy.

"The sooner the public gets over the idea that we want 'business as usual,' or can have 'business as usual' during this great war the better for all," he said. "We want to stop all unnecessary work and unnecessary expenditures short off and concentrate on the immense volume of work which has to be done. Business men should get rid of any foolish fears that economy will bring on a general paralysis of industry or trade.

"There is no danger of not having work for everybody; the trouble is that there is more work in sight than can possibly be done, and the question is whether we shall cut off luxuries or necessities. It is absurd under these conditions to talk of the danger of unemployment and to urge what they do not actually need in order to keep labor from unemployment or to maintain business as usual.

"How is labor to be had to make uniforms unless it is released from making other clothes; how are looms to be had for blankets unless released from something else; how is steel to be had for ships, tin cans, and agricultural implements unless other consumption is curtailed; how are women to be had for offices unless released elsewhere? And, finally, how are we to put $7,000,000,000 or $8,000,000,000 of purchasing power at the disposal of the Government unless we curtail our individual expenditures?

"The country should immediately awake to the fact that it has a great task in hand, and that it can not carry on a war like this with one hand and continue to do all the business it did before with the other.

"Most of the argument against economy assumes that the people who economize will hoard their money. That, of course, would be foolish, but if they lend their savings to the Government it will find its way directly back into circulation in providing for the Government's needs.

"These bond issues will necessitate more taxation in the future than in the past, but the person who practices self-denial now in order to buy a bond not only aids the Government, but provides an offset to future taxation on this account. The individual who takes his share of the bonds will pay in his taxes into his own pocket.

"Every community should be closely organized for subscriptions to these loans. Once the habit of saving to buy a bond is established it will not be abandoned when the war is over, but a million new springs of wealth will be developed to help on the development of industry and the progress of society in the future. Parents should buy for their children, and employers should join hands with their employees in the name of a common patriotism and to bring an end to the world's last great war."

"WAR TO AID BUSINESS."

[By Mr. Folwell.]

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.

Booming business in all lines of industry in this country for the next five years, regardless of the war against Germany, is predicted by Nathan T. Folwell, head of the firm of Folwell Bros. & Co. (Inc.) and president of the Manufacturers' Club.

Mr. Folwell declared yesterday that expenditure in this country of huge sums to be lent to our allies in the war for democracy will make it possible for the general advance in wages to keep pace with increased costs. Despite the high cost of living, he expressed the opinion that the entire country is entering into the most prosperous period in its entire history.

"Even a campaign of economy that is carried too far and that induces people temporarily to postpone buying can have no material effect upon business in this country," said Mr. Folwell. "With $7,000,000,000 to be spent in this country, every working person will get his or her share of it, and it is not the nature of Americans to hoard needlessly.

DEALERS BUYING STOCK.

"The best brains of the country's big retail business houses recognize this. They have foreseen a demand that will be absolutely without precedent, and they are now in the markets of the world laying in supplies to meet it.

"Dress goods, to cite but one commodity, are costing to-day about 100 per cent more than they did before the war. Goods being sold now for retailing in the fall are 25 per cent higher than the material now being disposed of over the counters of retail stores.

"But in spite of this condition, in the face of rising costs of living and a national campaign of economy, people are buying as freely as ever. If in some few lines there has been a slight let-up it is nothing to worry about. At the worst it is a temporary condition due to the fact that the people have become cautious and in some instances may be carrying the campaign against extravagance too far.

"America to-day is in for the greatest industrial boom in her history. There is no line of industry that will not be strengthened by the impetus of an expenditure of $7,000,000,000 in the country. Even the sums loaned to foreign nations out of this war fund must be spent here, and every dollar of it means increased prosperity for America.

WORK FOR EVERYONE.

"I am of the opinion that wage increases as a whole have kept pace fairly well with advances in other lines, so that the working man and woman to-day have more to spend than ever before. But considering the population as a whole, the most important feature of the situation that is confronting us is that it promises to eliminate nonemployment.

"There is to-day work for everyone who wants to work. As a Nation we are called on to make the greatest effort in our history, and it will be imperative for all to work. This can not mean anything but good business, bigger business than ever before in our history.

"Even farm labor, which has been receiving rather low pay, is to get better wages as a result of the campaign for more food. Prices are now at a point where it will be necessary for the farmer to spend more in wages for his labor. I believe every class of workers in the country will benefit through the increased prosperity that is certain to be ours within the next few years."

Letter From the Hydraulic Pressed Steel Co., of Cleveland, Ohio.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 18, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a letter from the Hydraulic Pressed Steel Co., of Cleveland, Ohio.

The letter is as follows:

THE HYDRAULIC PRESSED STEEL CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio, May 16, 1917.

Mr. H. I. EMERSON,
Representative from Ohio, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Here is a letter similar to the one I forwarded you last week from another one of our largest customers, a concern with an investment of approximately $10,000,000 in their business:

MAY 14, 1917.

The HYDRAULIC PRESSED STEEL CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN: Please hold up until further notice all shipments of frames to us. It is necessary for us to issue these instructions due to uncertain conditions throughout the country brought on by the heavy tax burdens and conscriptions. The demand for automobiles has fallen off, and it is necessary for us to hold up our production, and must therefore pass the word along to you.

We ask that you discontinue shipments of our product at once, this holdup to take immediate effect, and no further shipments to be made without our permission.

Yours, very truly, ———.

I personally am afraid that a 5 per cent tax on new automobile productions will kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. The Government might receive a larger income from automobile taxation if they would tax each automobile owner 1 or 2 per cent of a fair value of his car, and such a tax would not have the disastrous effect upon automobile production that the contemplated 5 per cent tax has already shown in the industry.

I can give you the names of 25 different automobile companies in confidence, if you wish them, whose production has fallen off in the last two months to an alarming degree.

Please do your utmost to help defeat the 5 per cent tax law as at present drawn.

Very truly, yours,

THE HYDRAULIC PRESSED STEEL COMPANY,
Per R. D. MOCK, Treasurer and Assistant Secretary.

Income-Tax Rates.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. EDMUND PLATT,
OF NEW YORK,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 22, 1917.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, it is clear that there are a good many Members of this great legislative body who ought to go back into the fourth grade of the public schools and learn a little elementary arithmetic. On Thursday last 26 Members of this House voted, in Committee of the Whole, for the Keating amendment to "conscript" all incomes above $150,000. The idea was not original with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING]. He got this brilliant scheme from Amos Pinchot who like himself was opposed to the war, opposed to an adequate plan for raising an army to prosecute it, and is opposed to a rational, workable plan for financing it. Take this wonderful plan to your boy or girl in the fourth grade and have it figured out for you how it would work, let us say, with an income of $1,000,000 returned for the calendar year 1917. If you start with a tax of 85 per cent on this income and collect $850,000 from it in June, 1918, what will be the income return of this individual for the calendar year 1918, the net income that is taxable, bearing in mind that under the law all taxes paid, State or National, are deducted? Any fourth-grade schoolboy can tell you offhand, but it does not seem to have occurred to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING], or to the astute gentlemen who voted with him, that you would have only $150,000 left on which a tax would be paid in June, 1919. What would be the effect of this brilliant financing on the revenues of the United States when the income-tax bills were due in June, 1919? You have stepped your millionaire's income way down into a lower class where you can tax it only at a much lower percentage. Simple enough to a fourth-class schoolboy; but would it not be a good idea to have the names of the Members of this House who voted for this great idea taken down and preserved on an honor roll for downright stupidity?

And what shall we say of the Lenroot amendment, so ardently and eloquently advocated by the able and astute gentleman from Wisconsin and by other able and astute gentlemen? Will that stand the test of the fourth-grade schoolboy? It is not so crassly stupid as the Keating amendment. It sounded very plausible indeed in the arguments presented, but it will be remembered that they were chiefly sentimental—"the rich man can afford to pay," and so forth. It was, in fact, so plausible that it carried a majority of the Members then present, and even for a time swept the chairman of the great Committee on Ways and Means, the eloquent gentleman from North Carolina, off his feet. He went so far as to say that he believed it ought to be adopted, but afterwards, to his credit, he saw the meaning of it and pulled himself together in time to vote against it. The Lenroot amendment raises the rates on the highest incomes to 65 per cent. With the progressive exemptions it will work out somewhat lower on whole incomes than that; so let us take it at 60 per cent and ask our fourth-grade youngster to apply it to an income of $1,000,000 and see how it works out over a period of two years. Sixty per cent of this income would be $600,000—quite a neat sum for the internal revenue—payable in June, 1918; but what of the next year? The net income returnable for the calendar year 1918 would be but $400,000, which again is taxable at a much lower rate, because it steps down into a lower class, and your revenues for 1919 from big incomes would be so much reduced that you would be forced to find some new sources of taxation to make up the losses. That being true, how can anybody vote for the Lenroot amendment who understands it? Did the gentleman from Wisconsin understand how it would work himself? I have carefully read his speech and have read the speeches of the other astute gentlemen—lawyers, most of them—who advocated its adoption, and I have found no indication that they knew anything about what they were talking about. Their speeches were almost wholly sentimental, with a few interjected guesses as to the revenue that could be raised by the 25 per cent increases of the supertaxes proposed. Apparently not one of them looked ahead to the year after next.

Now it ought to be obvious that there is a point beyond which you can not push income tax rates if you desire a steady revenue from this important source year after year, and if you want an increasing revenue you should put the rates low enough for the first year so that you can increase them the next year. That is what England did. It is not a matter of sentiment nor of any tenderness for the man with the big income, but a matter of cold, calculating common sense and science. Just exactly what the right figure is for the highest surtax I will not undertake to say, but I think that few students of taxation would put it above 30 to start with. The rate in England today in the highest surtax is 41¼ per cent, which amounts to only about 34 per cent, when all allowances are made for exemptions, on the largest incomes, and that has been reached only after several advances from year to year. If we are going to make this bill at all rational and conserve our incomes so that we can get as much or more for them another year, we must defeat the Lenroot amendment, and we probably ought to cut down somewhat the highest surtaxes in the bill. The bill itself goes to the limit of safety and probably beyond it, unless we are sure that the war is going to last only one year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as I can find out, this brilliant idea of "conscripting" incomes originated from an article in the New Republic of February 24, by Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, of Harvard, whose specialty is banking. He wrote one of the best monographs in the series of publications issued under the auspices of the National Monetary Commission, "The History of Crises," and is the author of many other studies in banking and finance. But none of those radicals who caught the words "conscripting incomes" from the title of his article in the New Republic seem to have read the article in full or to have grasped the idea he was driving at. His whole thesis was directed to the development of the idea of holding down war prices by taking away from the people as much as possible of their purchasing power, and by financing the war with the revenue so raised instead of financing it by selling bonds. He advocated a tax of 10 per cent on all incomes above $1,200. I do not see that in the Lenroot amendment or in the Keating amendment. Then he advocated, besides the increasing surtaxes, certain taxes on consumption, including a tax of 25 cents a gallon on gasoline. I do not see that in the Keating amendment or in the Lenroot amendment. Prof. Sprague did not undertake to work out his progressive surtaxes, which resulted in "conscripting" all incomes above $100,000 over a series of years, but he probably saw some of the difficulties, for he mentions the fact that great changes would have to be made in the administrative features, and he suggests that the taxes might be paid monthly instead of yearly—but this was chiefly for the purpose of taking steadily from the people their purchasing power, so that "war prosperity" would not cause them to pay high prices for things not really needed. His article was ingenious and interesting, but I doubt if any statesman would undertake seriously to carry out its ideas at the beginning of a war. The whole thing was predicated on the theory that bond issues create inflation by increasing the purchasing power of the people—a theory which he seems to admit at times not wholly sound—while taxation reduces purchasing power.

Mr. Chairman, I have not gone into the effect which the "conscripting" of incomes would have on the business development of the country, but everybody who has given any attention to the study of finance and economics knows that if you put your income tax rates so high as to stop reinvestment and the taking of business risks you will stop the development of industries. I have not undertaken to show that income returns would steadily be reduced if you put the rates too high, but everybody knows that they would be reduced, and that without any effort to conceal any returns, because many large incomes depend upon individual effort, which would certainly be diminished when the incentive for it was taken away. There is much else that might be said—with regard, for instance, to the support of the charities and educational institutions of the country—but I think I have said enough to show clearly that the Lenroot amendment should be eliminated from the bill.

War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CORDELL HULL,

OF TENNESSEE.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 22, 1917.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the greatest problem with which the Government of the United States has ever had to deal confronts it now. It is the tremendous task of devising the soundest and most effective methods of financing the present world war—financing not only our own Government but in substantial measure several of the leading Governments of Europe jointly prosecuting the war with us. A war, of course, may be financed by either or all of three methods—(1) by taxation, (2) by borrowing, and (3) by issuing paper money. For the present, at least, it is deemed wise to consider only the first two methods. The facts, conditions, and questions constituting material factors to be considered in formulating a broad and comprehensive policy of war finance are entirely too numerous to be referred to in the course of a short discussion of this subject. It is a conspicuous and outstanding fact, however, that the tremendous burden the United States is shouldering and the vast range of operations and activities it is undertaking, both in a financial and a military way—burdens and undertakings far beyond the dreams of even the last generation, and on a scale so colossal as not to admit of comparison as to scope and extent with similar operations by this Government in the past—will find us without tried or established precedents and will tax the wisdom and judgment of our ablest statesmen and financiers. We at times will have to embark on unchartered fiscal seas; we will have to conceive and adopt many new policies which have been but little tested by past experiences; we will have to launch many new movements in finance, commerce, and industry in the course of and following the war in our efforts to promote the general welfare. Great opportunities for constructive thought and action in every important line will be offered. I have the firm belief and the unwavering confidence, however, that the people of this generation, like the people of former generations, when confronted with a grave crisis, will rise to the occasion and meet every responsibility of citizenship, every problem of government, and every requirement of duty in whatsoever line engaged.

Perhaps no two persons will agree on all the important phases of a suitable system of war finance. Probably no individual, therefore, will be correct in all his views. In the course of the efforts of Congress and the executive department to ascertain and apply the fundamentals of finance, each person should have respect for the views of others. To determine the relative amount of money to be raised for war purposes by taxation and by bonds is the first question that arises. The second question now confronting Congress is how best to impose the amount of taxes deemed necessary to be laid at this time. With reference to the first question, I think no fixed rule can be applied to different countries or permanently to any one country, for the reason that many different conditions and considerations exist in each instance and in connection with each war that might arise.

The magnitude, as well as the probable duration of the war, are important factors; the probable cost of the war both to the home Government and the foreign Governments which it is helping to finance and the extent of its aid to them are necessary to consider; our general business and economic conditions and prospects, both national and international, should receive consideration; the amount of our prewar indebtedness and taxation, the country's resources, and our consequent ability to raise money from bonds and taxes is still another factor. The question of inflation also arises. At the outbreak of the European war the countries engaging in it held investments in foreign countries to the extent of about $30,000,000,000; Great Britain alone held about twenty billions of such securities. These immense foreign holdings placed such Governments as those of England and France in a strong position to maintain their international exchange rates and, by converting these securities, to float enormous amounts of bonds and otherwise negotiate loans to much greater advantage than they otherwise could possibly have hoped to do. Business conditions in these old countries were fixed and long established, with the result that the hazards and uncertainties of new developments of natural and other resources did not exist. Furthermore, they had large accumulations of surplus profits and earnings. The United States, on the other hand, being newer and more undeveloped as a country, constantly requires more or less new capital for the development and expansion of its financial, industrial, and commercial affairs. Besides, its diversified businesses require the use of a large portion of surplus profits and earnings.

The United States Government is issuing or preparing to issue from time to time bonds and Treasury certificates aggregating $7,000,000,000. I think this step is justifiable and sound. Bond issues are always necessary at the outbreak of a war, because money is needed quickly and in large amounts. The wisdom of the proposed loan of $3,000,000,000 to the allies is unassailable. Every citizen having surplus profits or earnings in amounts large or small is under the highest obligation of patriotism and duty to contribute to the success of the present and future bond proposals. Those who enlist as soldiers are expected to offer or hazard their lives, while those who purchase bonds are only requested to make a profitable loan of their money. The masses have more than $5,000,000,000 of deposits in savings banks and $100,000,000 in postal savings banks. The great majority of them have surpluses in banks subject to check. The banks of the country have a loaning power of over $10,000,000,000 at present. Comparing our present ability to float loans with the amount of bonds floated during the Civil War, this country is well able to handle a loan of at least $30,000,000,000.

When all taxes and existing money rates are considered the terms of this loan are slightly below the money market, but there will undoubtedly be an appreciation of the values of bonds now floated after the conclusion of the war. European Governments generally impose reasonable taxes on their bonds. I believe it will later be deemed better policy to place a fair tax rate upon our Government bonds. I realize that at present the fear of investors of possible high war taxation might constitute an impediment to the sale of taxed bonds. When the proposed $7,000,000,000 bonds are floated the country will have more than $20,000,000,000 of property exempt from all taxation. This includes near four billions of State, county, and municipal bonds. It has been demonstrated that the purchasers of bonds, tax free, avoid in a measure their full share of tax contributions to the Government, because the lower rate of interest does not make it up. The country will soon reach a stage at which it will be deemed good fiscal policy to impose probably a fixed and stable rate of taxation on all bonds. This, of course, should be done gradually in order not to upset or dislocate bonds security conditions. It would be preferable for the States to adopt uniform tax rates with respect to their bonds. If, however, they should fail to take this course, but should continue annually to turn over to the investing public tens and hundreds of millions of tax-free bonds, the Federal Government may feel itself forced again to grapple with the doubtful legal question as to its right to tax the bonds of the States and their subdivisions. I submitted some remarks April 17 on the bond question.

There has been discussion as to when the bonds issued to defray the expenses of the war should be paid off. Some persons suggest a short period; others 20 or 30 years. It would seem that the best interests of the country would require the wiping out of this bonded indebtedness as rapidly and at a date as early as the undertaking could be accomplished without tax levies unduly burdensome or oppressive. I think, therefore, that the period within which such indebtedness can be met would depend both on the amount contracted and the ability of the people to pay taxes to meet it. The serial bond method, which would require a fixed percentage of our bonded indebtedness to be paid off annually, could best be adopted after the war and when the aggregate amount of indebtedness is ascertained. The sinking-fund method, unless the law contains some very mandatory provisions, often results in delay and postponement of the payment of public indebtedness.

What amount of taxes should the Government impose for war purposes at the present stage? There is some difference of opinion among our ablest business men and financiers on this point. A consensus of view is, however, that as large an amount as can be levied without materially injuring or seriously handicapping any important phase of our commercial, financial, and business affairs would be justifiable. This, rather than arbitrary figures, should be the criterion. If all taxation in this country were judiciously and equitably imposed, the country could bear even a larger tax burden than that carried in the pending revenue bill. Unfortunately, our State and local tax systems are in many respects inequitable.

The proposed levy of $1,800,000,000 is in existing circumstances the maximum levy that should be made, in my judgment, formed after some investigation and deliberation. It is probably a little high. A large tax levy at present touching most classes of important business will both help and hurt the bond flotations now and hereafter proposed by the Government. Unless the tax levy should be made too great its ultimate effect will be materially to strengthen the power and ability of the Government to float its loans on satisfactory terms. England has raised a larger proportion of her war expenses from taxation than any other country, about 26 per cent, while France has thus raised less than 20 per cent, and Canada 16⅔ per cent. The fact that England was spending almost as much on her navy prior to the war as since, whereas the United States is required to make immense expenditures on the Navy for the first time, is important to keep in mind. The tax levies for preparedness contained in the revenue measures of September 8, 1916, and March 3, 1917, estimated to aggregate $425,000,000, and which have not yet been paid, are practically a part of our actual war levy now under consideration.

I append to my remarks an analysis and statement of the entire policy of England in financing the present war. Unfortunately, I have not the space to insert similar statements relative to the war finances of France and Germany, which I have before me.

After the recent declaration of war by Congress I expressed the earnest hope that the Ways and Means Committee would feel justified in devoting at least a month, and preferably six weeks, in the careful investigation, study, and preparation of a revenue bill of the magnitude of $1,800,000,000. In view of the fact that we may be entering a somewhat long war, too much careful investigation and consideration of the principles of sound taxation and all phases of each item proposed to be taxed and the formulation of an equitable and comprehensive initial revenue measure can not well be given. This is the one war measure that we need not rush. With a basis of taxation thus established on lines broad and sound, one story after another of taxation could be added, if necessary, as the war progresses and our revenue needs increased without disturbance of business or economic conditions and without the necessity of constantly readjusting or patching up our tax structure.

When future tax bills of importance and magnitude are to be prepared I shall favor reasonably brief hearings, not so much for those who have axes to grind in the way of seeking release as for persons who are high authorities on taxation and also persons who have a wide and practical knowledge of business conditions and can furnish unbiased business facts which would enable the committee to measure and apply rates fairly and equitably.

Another subject which I desire most strongly to emphasize at this preliminary stage is that of economy—sane, practical economy—not only on the part of the citizenship of the country but in every department, bureau, and division of the Federal, State, and local Governments. There has been a considerable economy cry going out over the country during the past few weeks for the benefit of the individual citizen, but I have detected but slight signs or symptoms of economy in connection with the ordinary expenditures of the Federal Government. I think the Government should set the example to the citizen; Congress should do its part; the different departmental heads should do their part. A systematic effort on the part of each branch should be to locate and restrict all expenditures for normal and internal purposes which are not actually necessary until the conclusion of the war. The Government is not in a good attitude to urge reasonable economy on the people until it first shows its good faith and intention by doing what every intelligent person knows can be done—curbing and restricting substantial amounts of present and proposed expenditures not urgent and not immediately related to the war.

While commissions, councils, and different kinds of joint organizations are being created and utilized for important purposes in connection with the war, I think a most important joint commission would be a commission on appropriations and expenditures to serve during the war and which could comprise suitable Members of the House and Senate, the Secretary of the Treasury, and any other suitable officials in the executive department.

Another consideration in the enactment of tax and other legislation affecting our economic conditions relates to the encouragement of our foreign commerce. It would be difficult to underestimate the importance to our internal growth and development in the future of a large foreign trade. Our international commerce has risen to near $8,000,000,000. It should receive such legitimate consideration to the extent that revenue and similar legislation affects it as will aid in increasing and extending it each year in the future. We should continue to sell far more than we buy. Such course on the part of a great producing country like the United States, together with the immense international credit this country will maintain, will place it in a wonderfully strong position during the trying period that will follow the war, as well as during the war.

The amount of revenue proposed in the pending measure, $1,800,000,000, which added to our Federal revenues provided for by existing laws aggregated near $3,000,000,000 raised and proposed to be raised by taxation for normal and war expenditures. This sum added to the tax revenues of the States, counties, and municipalities aggregates more than $4,500,000,000 of taxes now annually imposed or about to be imposed upon the American people for combined war and peace purposes.

The first problem confronting the committee in its work of framing this measure was to determine upon what lines or principles of taxation the new levy should be made. The committee wisely, in my judgment, decided that the chief portion of the new taxes should come off of wealth, luxuries, and pleasure. I am in the heartiest accord with these general principles which the committee adopted for its guidance, as I am with the committee in this general course of policy it has consistently pursued. It is not my purpose to discuss the various items contained in the bill, because elaborate discussion of them has already been had. I feel constrained, however, to express my individual disapproval of two or three fundamental features of this omnibus revenue measure. I do so with due deference to the views of my colleagues, realizing also that ample room exists for differences of opinion with respect to some phase of almost every item in the bill. My chief concern has been to see this tax measure drafted along the most equitable lines. We have heard and now hear constant complaint about high taxation. I have long been impressed with a fact which I can not here emphasize too strongly—the fact that the real and chief ground of complaint against past and present tax laws is not due to high taxation but to inequitable taxation. I unhesitatingly assert that if our Federal, State, and local tax laws were thoroughly equitable we would scarcely hear a murmur against excessive taxation. This is the chief ground of criticism I feel that I should offer with respect to two or three items in the bill before the House.

The income tax is the greatest engine of fiscal power which this country or England or any other first-class commercial country has in time of emergency. Its elasticity and abundant revenue-producing capacity make it the backbone of any country's system of taxation in time of war. This tax offers the largest source of revenue the country has. It is with some pride that I contemplate the fact that this tax in which I have taken a keen personal interest during my 10 years' incumbency here is now ready to bring to the Federal Treasury a billion dollars annually, and more when necessary, for the prosecution of the war against Germany. Frankly, I have seriously doubted the policy of this Government in its preliminary war-tax levy undertaking to make the higher supertax rates at beyond 33⅓ to 40 per cent. They have heretofore been around 15 per cent. The present House provision would jump them to more than 60 per cent. No country has ever tested the revenue effects of such an enormous jump in these top rates at one time. Two or three possible effects of such action which can not be forecasted may result. One effect would be to greatly reduce this top-tax yield the second year. The English Government has raised its income-tax rates three times since the outbreak of the war. The present rates in their effects now range from 11¼ per cent normal tax on the lower incomes to 42½ per cent supertax on the higher incomes. Her rates on incomes of $10,000, up to and including the middle class of incomes, are much higher than those now proposed in our bill. In developing income taxation in this country to its highest state of efficiency I think it would have been much wiser to have raised some of the rates more gradually, a course which the revenue needs of a somewhat protracted war would make entirely wise and justifiable. I should deeply regret to see a tax which possesses so many superior qualities as such crippled or partially broken down by rash, inconsiderate action. The question of not allowing deductions of income taxes paid the previous year arises when the rates are made real high. We should not by extreme high rates exhaust our biggest and most elastic source of revenue at the very beginning of the war.

When the normal tax on individuals and corporations was at a low rate, a slightly graduated tax on corporations holding stock in other corporations was deemed justifiable on account of the superior business advantages arising therefrom. This provision was intended to relate chiefly to holding companies. Now that it is proposed to raise this rate to 4 per cent, we can not justify the double taxation of corporations to the extent of the dividends derived from stock held in other corporations, especially those which are not holding companies. I therefore deplore the action of the House thus far in declining to relieve such dividends of double taxation in certain cases at least. This constitutes a gross and grievous inequity which should have no place in a law carrying high rates of taxes, and which can not be justified on any ground of sound or equitable taxation. It is my individual judgment that the exemptions should at present have been fixed at $1,500 for single persons and $2,000 for married persons. During this era of high prices and still higher cost of living the person who earns a small income of from $1,000 to $2,000 is obliged to expend nine-tenths or all of it on an average for the maintenance of his family and schooling of his children. Furthermore, it would be much wiser to impose certain war taxes on such subjects as tea, coffee, and sugar, every dollar of which would go into the Treasury, than to undertake to embrace small salaries and wages in the income-tax law at this stage. However, since the House has lowered these exemptions to $1,000 and $2,000 it is manifest that the provisions of the income-tax law providing for collection at the source should be stricken out except as to nonresidents and corporate interests, and provisions for information at the source substituted. Under the existing provisions the law has two alleged normal taxes, and has collection at the source applicable to less than 400,000 taxpayers to the exclusion of perhaps 2,000,000 of the smaller taxpayers. I do not know any good or logical ground on which to justify these provisions; I can only express my earnest hostility to them in their present form. When the original income-tax law was enacted it was deemed wise to insert the provision for collection at the source solely from the administrative standpoint of the Government. Without any concern or purpose on the part of Congress this provision of law put into operation certain individual contracts existing between corporations and their bondholders under the terms of which the corporation agreed to pay for the bondholders any taxes they might be required to retain out of interest due the bondholders and pay to the Government.

In my judgment, if the income-tax provisions of the pending measure should be modified and made equitable as I have heretofore suggested, and a further provision should be inserted which would only require the corporations to withhold such tax on a normal rate of 2 per cent, leaving the bondholders to take care of the remainder, we could, without any undue burden or serious complaint from any individual or corporation, impose a normal tax rate of either 5 per cent or 6 per cent on both. This would contemplate the allowance of abatements to the small individual taxpayers so as to reduce the rate of tax. Before leaving the subject of the income tax I desire to express the opinion that the large and other substantial income-tax payers have resorted to much less evasion thus far than those subject to any other law in any other country during its early stages.

I recently took some official figures which showed the aggregate amount of taxes a select number of corporations pay to the Federal Government, the States, counties, and municipalities, and computed the percentage which these taxes bore to the total annual net income of such corporations. I found that this percentage ranged from 2.01 to 4.79—a very small burden. A normal tax of 6 per cent on a corporation with a capital of $100,000, which earns 8 per cent thereon, would amount to less than one-half of 1 per cent on its capital and would leave a net income of more than 7½ per cent to the corporation. These figures but emphasize my statement heretofore made to the effect that thoroughly equitable taxation is most important and will always produce a much greater revenue yield with far less complaint. With the new high rates several important amendments should be made to the income-tax law.

During last summer when the preparedness program was being adopted I procured and carefully examined all the excess profits tax laws then in operation. The conclusion was clear that a prewar standard of profits provided for in a manner similar to the provisions in virtually all the European laws should be adopted in any law Congress might enact. In March last the Committee on Ways and Means, however, reported to the House a measure containing the so-called "capital invested" basis, which bill became a law on March 3. I earnestly opposed this particular provision in the bill, notwithstanding I had for many months strongly favored an excess profits tax law carrying stiff rates. I have constantly antagonized this "capital invested" provision, upon the unshaken belief that because of its inequitable and unworkable nature the law will be the source of general complaint and irritation and will probably fall short of the revenue yield predicted for it. The normal or peace profits of individuals and corporations can be properly and justly dealt with by a graduated income tax. The immense profits of an abnormal character derived almost directly from the war can well bear a substantial portion of our war expenses in return. By every rule of equitable and sound taxation, therefore, the Government should easily derive $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 of these excess war profits through the agency of an equitable excess profits law. An immense portion of the large corporations in this country are so organized and capitalized as not to earn much, if any, in excess of 8 per cent.

The proposed method places a premium on corporations having watered stock and to the same extent a penalty on those honestly capitalized. I could cite several pages of instances revealing the inequitable provisions of this "capital-invested" provision. In my opinion it would be impossible to administer with any accuracy or fairness all the provisions defining "capital invested." The net profits of corporations subject to the income tax for the year 1916 were about $8,100,000,000, while the average net profits of such corporations for the prewar period of three years could not have exceeded one-half this amount. A prewar standard of profits similar to that contained in the European laws, with suitable modifications to apply to business conditions in the United States, would afford the basis for an equitable law which, in my judgment, would raise a substantially larger amount of revenue with far less complaint or criticism. Corporate business conditions in the United States, the methods of organization and capitalization, are in many respects exceedingly intricate and complicated, while those of Canada are simplified very greatly in comparison. The so-called "capital-invested" basis might operate one way there and a very different way here. Canada only derived $12,500,000 from her law last year and only estimates $20,000,000 for the present fiscal year.

I trust that before it becomes a law this feature of our revenue bill may be radically improved. Why should not individuals be included?

The proposed increase of the estate-tax rates marks the third increase since the enactment of the estate-tax law on September 8, 1916. Virtually one-half of the amount of property passing annually by death comprises estates of less than $50,000. The estate-tax law, therefore, originally contemplated a tax applicable only to the larger estates passing by death. Under the present and proposed rates and classifications the estate tax will not yield a revenue greater than the estate tax of England during peace times. The English rates and classifications, however, are applied differently and with a view to getting larger revenue. The States, more than 40 of which now have inheritance-tax laws, have been deriving a little in excess of $30,000,000 from this source. Some of the States impose rates as high as 40 per cent on collaterals. The argument often advanced that the inheritance tax should belong to the States is really not applicable in time of war and not wholly applicable in time of peace. The total tax revenues of the States for the year 1913, not including counties and municipalities, were $307,000,000, whereas the Federal Government must now levy near $3,000,000,000 annually. The present Federal estate tax could, in my opinion, be extended and made more comprehensive in its application to certain estates which may now escape it, and a system of rates and classifications and exemptions devised and prescribed which would enable it to yield $200,000,000 annually without injury or injustice to any person. This should continue until the chief war burdens have been met. In the meantime the States could continue to avail themselves of even an increased revenue from this source. An amendment of the present law more clearly defining the status of curtesy and dower should be considered.

With respect to the different gross-receipts taxes carried in the revenue bill I have not sufficient knowledge of the facts pertaining to the expenses and the gross income of each class of business affected to offer an intelligent opinion. A gross-receipts tax is the easiest tax administered that can probably be imposed. It is extremely difficult and practically impossible, however, to apply a fixed rate to the gross receipts of business generally, because of the gross inequities and hardships that would result. The cost of production or expenses of one class of business may constitute 90 per cent of the gross receipts, whereas the cost of production or expenses of another will be 30 per cent, and so on. Some businesses have several turnovers during the year and others only one or two. The conclusion is clear that a substantial gross-receipts tax can not with any practicability be imposed on business generally without careful discrimination as to rates. The States have wrestled with this problem for many years, and the final outcome has been that about 30 States impose a gross-receipts tax in some form on public utilities. The taxation of this class of business is naturally more feasible because of the extensive information which public-utility commissions supervising them gather and furnish the State legislatures for guidance. The costs of operation and other necessary expenditures common to most public utilities have such a fixed ratio to their receipts or earnings as to make a tax levy reasonably fair. It is not contended, however, that even these gross-receipts taxes of the States are entirely equitable. I believe only Delaware and Louisiana undertake to impose a gross-receipts tax on business generally, and their rates are exceedingly small, the Delaware rate being a fraction of 1 per cent.

I feel constrained to record my most earnest opposition to the provision of the revenue bill which imposes horizontal rates of 10 per cent on both dutiable imports and those not dutiable. I regard this dragnet method of levying taxes as grossly unscientific, unsound, and unjustifiable even in time of war. This method is unprecedented, with the exception of the Canadian act imposing similar rates of 7½ per cent. Immediately after the war broke out even the high-protective tariff countries proceeded to remove many import duties and to create large free lists. Canada derived only $2,000,000 from the imposition of the flat 7½ per cent rate on her dutiable imports; she derived $19,000,000 from a like rate on her free imports.

On September 17, 1914, Germany suspended the customs duties on a large list of articles, including virtually all foodstuffs. On March 18, 1915, another German proclamation was issued suspending the customs duties on a large number of other articles. Austria-Hungary, France, Italy, Switzerland, and other countries hastened to take similar action.

The economic results of the proposed haphazard and flat tax of 10 per cent on both our dutiable and free imports will necessarily be disconcerting and productive of much injury. It will have the effect of jacking up our present plane of costs of production much higher than the present sound but already too high basis. Business conditions generally will be badly disarranged and confused under the operation of this provision. The high cost of living affords general complaint; price fixing is being urged; professed opposition to a consumption tax is loud, yet this customs proposal would do the unprecedented thing of taxing all foodstuffs coming through the customhouses 10 per cent; it would tax all raw materials which we do not even produce in this country 10 per cent; and so on through the long list of hitherto free imports, including coal and the necessities of life. The inevitable result would be to raise prices to a still higher and more artificial plane. I can see no consistency nor sound policy in trying to raise the prices of foodstuffs and all other articles of general use and universal consumption by levying this import tax and at the same time endeavoring to put into operation a price-fixing system in this country. Surely the judgment and experience of all the first-class commercial countries during the war as to this policy should be given weight by Congress in dealing with this subject. To analyze the effect of these proposed customs rates on the immense number of articles imported into this country would show many startling developments in a commercial way. From an economic standpoint this 10 per cent flat increase even for war purposes is almost monstrous.

In conclusion, it is my opinion that in the circumstances the Committee on Ways and Means did the best it could in the preparation of this bill, considering, too, the brief time consumed. The committee was practically unanimous in the general policy to be pursued. Each member, perhaps, was grievously disappointed at the inclusion or exclusion of certain items or subjects of taxation. The logic, in the present parliamentary situation, is that the membership of the House should, in my judgment, support the bill in the form in which it is found when a final vote is reached, with the paramount object of affording revenues as speedily as possible for the prosecution and maintenance of the present war. Desirable amendments will probably be made at future stages of the bill on its way to final enactment into law.

I have felt justified in offering objections to certain features at this time, not with a view of antagonizing the final passage of the bill through the House but in the hope that at a later stage, and, if necessary, at a later session of Congress, the defects complained of may be remedied. It is useless now to speculate or suggest as to substitute provisions for some of the tax items in the bill most complained of. The fact that many of us believe that the income and excess profits measures could be so amended and adjusted as to secure in a more equitable way a much greater amount of revenue than is now proposed, and that a limited number of select customhouse articles such as silk, rubber, coffee, tea, and sugar, along with a substantial excise tax on sugar, and readjusted estate tax rates, would have made it possible to dispense with the flat 10 per cent tariff tax and some of the more objectionable internal taxes is not now necessary to discuss. It will be found necessary in any event to consider a provision disallowing the deduction of income taxes paid during the preceding year in accordance with the English practice and also the true theory of the tax. It will doubtless be found desirable also to insert in the estate tax law a provision that the same estate passing more than once within a given number of years shall not, at least, be subject to the full tax the second time, now that the rates are materially raised. But I shall not elaborate further.

APPENDIX.

GREAT BRITAIN'S MEASURES FOR FINANCING THE WAR.

[Commercial Attaché Pierce C. Williams, Apr. 12.]

There are three ways of financing the war: (1) By taxation; (2) by borrowing; (3) by issuing paper money. All these methods have been employed by Great Britain during the present war, and in view of the importance of proper war finance to the United States at this time it may be of value to show what proportion of the total cost of the war Great Britain has been able to pay by taxation; what taxes have been the most productive; how, when, and at what rate of interest loans have been raised to pay the remainder of the cost.

First, as to taxation: In the last peace year, namely, the fiscal year ended March 31, 1914, the revenue of the British Government amounted to £198,242,000, derived chiefly from the following sources: Customs, £35,450,000, or 18 per cent; excise, £39,590,000, or 20 per cent; estate, etc., duties, £27,359,000, or 14 per cent; property and income tax, £47,249,000, or 24 per cent.

CHARACTER OF DUTIES AND TAXES BEFORE THE WAR.

Prior to the war import duties in the United Kingdom were collected on the following articles: Tobacco, tea, rum, brandy and other spirits, wines, currants, raisins, coffee, cocoa, chocolate, etc., sugar, glucose, etc., motor spirit (gasoline), and a few other articles.

Excise duties were collected on spirits and beer. In addition, there were some license duties and some unimportant taxes on railway profits and patent medicines.

The estate duty is an inheritance tax collected out of the estates of deceased persons.

The stamp tax applies to deeds, receipts, drafts, bills of exchange, contract notes, etc.

The property and income tax, until April, 1914, was levied on the following basis: Earned income, where the total income did not exceed £2,000 per annum, at 9d. in the pound; where the total income was between £2,000 and £3,000 per annum, at 1s. in the pound; unearned incomes, at 14d. in the pound. A supertax was levied on incomes of £5,000 a year of 6d. per pound on amounts by which incomes exceeded £3,000. An abatement of the tax on £10 of income for each child living and under 16 years of age was allowed in the case of incomes under £500 per annum.

INCOME-TAX PROVISIONS IN 1914 BUDGET.

By the finance act of 1914 (the regular budget passed by Parliament prior to the breaking out of the war), the general rate of income tax was fixed at 1s. 3d., but for incomes between £160 and £300 it was 1s. and for those between £300 and £500 it was 1s. 2d. If the total income did not exceed £2,500, the rate on the earned part of such income was: 9d., if the total income did not exceed £1,000; 10½d., if the total income did not exceed £1,500; 1s., if the total income did not exceed £2,000; 1s. 2d., if the total income did not exceed £2,500.

The relief in respect to children under 16 years of age was an abatement of tax on £20 of income for each such child. A supertax was levied on incomes above £3,000 at the following rates: For the first £500 of the excess above £2,500, 5d. in the pound; for the next £1,000 of the excess above £2,500, 7d. in the pound; for the next £1,000, 9d. in the pound; for the next £1,000, 11d. in the pound; for the next £1,000, 13d. in the pound; for the next £1,000, 15d. in the pound; for the remainder, 16d. in the pound.

The first war budget was introduced in November, 1914; the income and supertaxes mentioned above were doubled and the duties on beer and tea increased.

FISCAL CONDITIONS AFTER EIGHT MONTHS OF WAR—SECOND WAR BUDGET.

By the end of March 31, 1915, England had been at war eight months and the expenditure had increased £360,000,000, bringing the total for all purposes up to £498,359,980. The total revenue raised during the year ended March 31, 1915, was £226,694,000, an increase of £28,452,000 over the preceding year of peace. In other words, 46 per cent of the total cost was paid out of revenue. This increase was distributed as follows: Customs, £3,212,000; excise, £2,723,000; estate, etc., duties, £1,023,000; income tax, £22,150,000. It will be observed that the income and property tax was responsible for 75 per cent of the entire increase. The remarkable buoyancy of this tax has been demonstrated all through the war.

When, on May 1, 1915, the budget was presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Lloyd-George, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, it was based on 6 months more of warfare or, at the outside, not more than 12 months. Mr. Lloyd-George proposed no new taxes.

The second war budget was introduced by Mr. McKenna, Mr. Lloyd-George's successor, in September, 1915. The income tax and supertax were again increased, a tax of 50 per cent was imposed on war profits, and many indirect duties were imposed.

SOURCES OF REVENUE DURING FISCAL YEAR 1916.

When the time came to add up the bill for the 12 months ended March 31, 1916, it was found that the war had cost £1,559,158,377. The amount paid out of revenue was £336,766,824, or 22 per cent of the total cost. The bulk of the increase in revenue, as compared with the preceding year, came from the following taxes: Property and income tax, including supertax, increase of £58,921,000; customs, increase of £20,944,000; excise, increase of £18,897,000; estate, etc., duties, increase of £2,653,000. Here again one sees the income tax standing for more than one-half of the total increase in revenue. Customs duties and excise together represented only 36 per cent of the increase. The excess profits duty, which at the beginning was fixed at 50 per cent, brought in during this year only £140,000. It really did not get into full swing until the succeeding year.

In spite of the enormous increase in revenue, only one-fifth of the cost of the second year of war could be defrayed from taxation.

During the year ended March 31, 1916, the income tax stood at 2s. to 3s. 6d. in the pound and the supertax at 2s. 10d. on incomes of from £8,000 to £9,000; 3s. 2d. on incomes from £9,000 to £10,000; and 3s. 6d. on all exceeding £10,000 per annum.

TAX RATES INCREASED.

With the introduction of the war budget for the year commencing April 1, 1916, the taxes were further increased. The income tax was revised so that earned incomes up to £500 were to pay 2s. 3d. in the pound; those between £500 and £1,000 were to pay 2s. 6d. in the pound; and the tax was to be carried up by successive stages, the maximum being 5s. in the pound (or 25 per cent) for all earned incomes of £2,500 per annum. The supertax remained unchanged.

Excise taxes were increased as follows: Sugar, from 9s. 4d. to 14s. per hundredweight; cocoa, from 1½d. to 4½d. per pound; coffee and chicory, from 3d. to 4½d. per pound; tea, to 1s. per pound.

The excess profits tax was increased from 50 per cent to 60 per cent and the Government now takes all profits in excess of 20 per cent over normal gains made by "controlled establishments."

Other taxes were levied on amusements, railway tickets, matches, mineral waters and cider, motor cars, and motorcycles.

SECOND FULL YEAR UNDER WAR CONDITIONS.

The second year under war conditions ended on March 31, 1917. The cost had mounted steadily during the year, reaching the sum of £2,198,112,710 and exceeding the budget estimate by £240,000,000. The revenue amounted to £573,427,582, an increase of £71,000,000 over the estimate.

The increase in revenue over the year ended March 31, 1916, was £236,660,758, the principal sources showing the following changes: Excess-profits duty, increase of £139,920,000; property and income tax, including supertax, increase of £76,713,000; customs, increase of £10,955,000; excise, decrease of £4,830,000. In other words, 60 per cent of the increase came from the new excess-profits duty, which had not really got under way during the previous year, and over 32 per cent of the increase came from the income tax. Less than 5 per cent of the increase came from customs, and the excise revenue actually decreased, indicating that the tax was bearing so heavily on the articles affected that people reduced their consumption of them. Although the revenue collected was two and one-half times that collected in the last normal peace year, it paid for only one-fourth the cost of the war.

MONEY RAISED BY BORROWING.

To sum up: The total cost of the war from August 4, 1914, to March 31, 1917, was £4,277,006,538, of which £1,081,953,150, or about one-fourth, was paid from taxes. The remainder was obtained by borrowing, the net amount so obtained each year being as follows: Eight months ended March 31, 1915, £404,991,800; year ended March 31, 1916, £1,164,515,607; year ended March 31, 1917, £1,625,545,981; total, £3,195,053,388.

The record of the borrowing is as follows: Eight months ended March 31, 1915—Treasury bills, £64,150,000; 3 per cent exchequer bonds, 1920, £47,700,000; 3½ per cent war loan, 1925–1928, £296,000,000; total (disregarding credit balances), £407,850,000. The 3½ per cent loan was the first internal war loan and was issued in November, 1914, at 95. It therefore yielded 4.10 per cent.

Year ended March 31, 1916—Treasury bills, £488,818,000; 3½ per cent war loan, 1925–1928 (see above), £35,798,000; 4½ per cent war loan, 1925–1945, £586,639,000; American loan, £50,820,000; 5 per cent excise bonds, 1920, £153,689,000; other debt, £10,250,000; ways and means advances, £19,896,000; total, £1,345,910,064. (Note: £160,427,623 repaid to the Bank of England.) The 4½ per cent internal war loan offered in June, 1915, was issued at par. The previous 3½ per cent loan was accepted in exchange for this loan.

Year ended March 31, 1917—Five per cent exchequer bonds, 1919, £31,255,000; 5 per cent exchequer bonds, 1920, £83,038,000; 5 per cent exchequer bonds, 1921, £62,495,000; 6 per cent exchequer bonds, 1920, £160,951,000; war-expenditure certificates, £23,561,000; war-savings certificates, £72,750,000; other debt, £313,290,000; 4 per cent war loan, 1929–1942, and 5 per cent war loan, 1929–1947 (up to Mar. 10, 1917), £780,376,000; temporary advances, £197,630,000; total (disregarding credit balances), £1,725,346,000. The third internal war loan, issued in January, 1917, was a tremendous success. Altogether there were 8,000,000 subscribers. This loan was issued in two portions. One bore interest at 4 per cent, with an issue price of par, known as the "income tax compounded"; this portion was free of British taxation. The other portion bore interest at 5 per cent, was issued at 95, and these bonds were subject to tax. It is of interest to note that out of the vast total subscribed only a little more than £22,000,000 called for the tax exemption.

EXPANSION OF BANK CREDIT.

The effect of this borrowing is reflected in the expansion of bank credit. The statement of the Bank of England on April 4, 1917, as compared with April 8, 1914, gives one evidence of this inflation. Here are the figures:

	Apr. 8, 1914.	Apr. 4, 1917.
Liabilities:
Circulation	£29,471,000	£38,900,000
Government deposits	19,630,000	50,123,000
Other deposits	42,330,000	128,968,000
Assets:
Reserve notes and coin	25,000,000	34,234,000
Coin and bullion	36,000,000	54,690,000
Government securities	11,151,000	39,444,000
Other securities	43,500,000	123,307,000
Proportion of reserve to liabilities, per cent	40.34	19.12

A combined statement of the 28 joint-stock banks of the United Kingdom on June 30, 1916, shows the following increases as compared with June 30, 1914 (a month before war broke out):

Liabilities:
Deposits	£206,163,000
Assets:
Cash in hand and in the Bank of England	72,611,000
Investments	177,629,000

This enormous expansion in bank credit is responsible for part of the 70 per cent increase in prices of commodities.

ISSUE OF CURRENCY NOTES.

It was said at the beginning of this report that Great Britain has financed part of the cost of the war by the issuance of paper currency. The Bank of England can not issue notes except against gold, but the issue of currency notes may be increased without restriction. When war broke out, in order to meet the demand for small currency, the Government issued £10 and 10s. notes, and these are payable on demand in gold at the Bank of England. The issue of these notes has been increased at the rate of about £1,000,000 per week since war began. The increase in note circulation during the war is shown by the following statement:

	June 30, 1914.	Apr. 4, 1917.
Bank of England notes	£29,000,000	£38,900,000
Currency notes (gold cover, £28,500,000)		130,497,000
Notes of private and joint-stock banks	16,000,000	34,000,000
Total	45,000,000	203,397,000

Letter and Memorial on War Finance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 21, 1917.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit for the consideration of the Members of Congress the following letter and memorial on war finance, signed by the professors of Northwestern University, one of the great educational institutions of the country, located at Evanston, Ill., in my congressional district:

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY, COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS,
Evanston, Ill., May 17, 1917.

Congressman GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Under date of April 17 I sent you Northwestern's contribution to the memorial of American Economists to Congress regarding war finance. I desire again to urge upon you, as our Representative, the importance of Congress adhering to the program of taxation, as the chief reliance for financing the war. I am particularly in sympathy with the broadening of the income tax and of the democratic consequence which will follow from it. I think Congress should scrutinize very carefully the opinions of and the reasoning employed by business interests, which seek to diminish the importance of taxation.

The relation between borrowing and price inflation is unmistakable and the deferment of taxation is wasteful and inequitable. The chief sources of taxation which are available are excess profits, incomes, and inheritances. These should be fully utilized, and the taxes imposed upon them made to conform to the fundamental principles of equality in taxation, and to the economic consequences which will result. Indirect taxation in the form of licenses, customs duties, etc., should not be utilized further than is absolutely necessary. The consequences are regressive, and the burdens fall heaviest upon those least able to bear them. Direct taxation should be the norm, which all taxation approaches.

I sincerely hope that the "conscription" agitation will not be used as a device for sidetracking taxation in favor of loans. No single narrow program of direct taxation should be allowed to defeat the main proposition. Taxation is wise, may be made just, and is the only logical method for financing a large portion of the cost of the war. It will bring the necessary savings as no other scheme will. England's experience has demonstrated this fact, and the moment the other belligerent nations realize the impossibility of assessing a huge indemnity, they will appreciate this fact, too.

Business interests are making the claim that heavy taxation will "kill the goose that lays the golden egg." To the economist there is no basis for this opinion. Heavy taxation in England has not had this effect and there is no reason for believing that America's experience would be different.

I sincerely hope that you will be active in urging upon Congress the wisdom of using taxation rather than loans as the main reliance, and that you will use your influence to keep Congress from being stampeded by the baseless claims of certain business interests.

Very truly, yours,

HORACE SECRIST.

MEMORIAL OF AMERICAN ECONOMISTS TO CONGRESS REGARDING WAR FINANCE.

We, the undersigned, teachers of political economy, public finance, and political science in American universities and colleges, respectfully urge upon Congress to adopt the policy of taxation rather than that of bond issues as the principal means of financing the expenditures of our own country in the war on which it has embarked.

The taxation policy is practicable. It will prevent the price inflation which must result from large bond issues. It is demanded by social justice. It will increase the efficiency of the Nation in the conduct of the war.

The argument in support of these statements is briefly as follows:

THE TAXATION PLAN IS PRACTICABLE.

The taxation policy is practicable, because the current income of the people in any case must pay the war expenditures. The choice between bond issues and taxation is merely a choice whether the Government shall take income with a promise to repay those who furnish it or take income without such promise. The actual arms, munitions, and other equipment and supplies for use in the war, except to the small extent that they have been stored up in the past, must be produced now, during the war itself, not after the war, and moreover must be produced by our own people. The policy of borrowing within the country itself does not shift any part of the Nation's burden of war expenditures from the present to the future. All it does is to make possible a different distribution of the burden among individuals and social classes, to permit repayment to certain persons, who have contributed income during the war, by other persons after the war. If the people can support the war at all, they can do it on a cash basis. Borrowing creates nothing. Except by borrowing abroad, which we can not do, we can get nothing which we do not ourselves produce.

It may be necessary for a month or two at the outset to issue a limited amount of bonds, pending the collection of increased taxes, but beyond these, which might well be made repayable within a year, no necessity for bonds exists.

TAXATION PREVENTS PRICE INFLATION.

The taxation policy and no other will enable the country to escape the enormous evils of further inflation. The present high level of prices in Europe and America is primarily due to the war bonds and the paper money issued abroad. If the United States joins on a huge scale in this policy of borrowing, prices are bound to become far higher still.

Price inflation is harmful even in times of peace. During a war it is disastrous. It increases the cost of conducting the war. It postpones victory and thus adds to the war's toll of lives as well as to its money expenditures. By every bond issue the Government enhances the prices it must pay, and thus creates the need of more bonds. The policy works against itself.

Moreover, inflation of prices works injustice between different classes of society. The burden rests chiefly upon wage earners and salary receivers, whose pay never rises as fast as prices, and upon those who receive fixed or contractual incomes. The hardship which millions of our people are already suffering from the increased cost of living will be made many fold greater if the Government issues billions of dollars of bonds to finance the war.

The manner in which bond issues inflate prices may be briefly explained. The bond policy increases the amount of bank credit, which is equivalent in effect to an increase in the currency.

For example, if the Government takes $1,000 from a man in taxes, his credit or purchasing power is lessened to the same extent as the Government's is increased. On the other hand, if the Government borrows $1,000 from him, the quantity of purchasing power in existence is greatly increased. He now has a bond worth $1,000 on which he can and very often will borrow at the bank. Say he borrows $800; to lend him $800 the bank does not have to give up 800 actual dollars. Instead, it gives him a deposit account of $800 and, inasmuch as most of those who present checks do not ask for actual cash, but have their checks credited to their deposit accounts, the bank can keep this $800 in checks floating by setting aside, say, only $200 of actual cash. In other words, this bond-issue transaction has resulted in increasing the Government's credit by $1,000, in decreasing the man's credit by only $200 and in decreasing the bank's money by only $200; that is, there has been a net increase of credit currency (checking deposit accounts) of $600, in contrast with no net increase if taxes had been adopted instead of bonds.

If the man had given up his money in taxes, he would have ceased to compete with the Government and other buyers of commodities and labor to the extent of $1,000; but when the Government gives him a bond for his payment, he is still enabled to compete to the extent of $800. The purchasing power of society as a whole has increased by $600. This inevitably forces up prices.

The above illustrates the result of a bond issue that is taken by the public. As a matter of fact, if bonds are issued, a large part of them will be taken by banks. It is likely that the Federal reserve banks will buy these bonds wholesale by giving the Government checking accounts to the extent of the bonds. This causes immediate inflation to the full amount of the checking accounts thus created; that is, inflation to 100 per cent instead of to 60 per cent of the bond issue, as outlined in the illustration above.

As the Government draws checks on these bank accounts to meet its requirements, the banks will try to recoup themselves by retailing the bonds to the public. To the extent that they succeed the bonds get bonds get into the hands of the ultimate investor with the resulting inflation already described. In so far as the banks are unsuccessful in this distribution, they are almost certain to issue bank notes on the basis of bonds left in their hands, and these notes will cause inflation even worse than that due to the checking accounts of the public based on bond collateral.

JUSTICE DEMANDS THE TAX POLICY.

The policy of taxation for war expenditures is demanded by justice. Apart from the injustice arising from price inflation, the policy of paying for the war by bond issues gives property a preference over life; it deals unjustly as between citizen and citizen. The question of taxation versus bonds is not merely one of economics, it is one of morals, of right against wrong.

This war is a great social enterprise. The American people have undertaken it as a people. The future welfare of the country as a whole is involved; the future welfare of every citizen is involved. It is the duty, therefore, of every citizen to share in war's burdens to his utmost. For some the duty is to fight; for others to furnish money. For all the duty is without limit of amount. The citizen who contributes even his entire income, beyond what is necessary to subsistence itself, does less than the citizen who contributes himself to the Nation.

The man who goes to the front can not be paid back the life or the limb he may lose. The man who stays at home should contribute his just share of the money cost without expectation of repayment. That the soldier or sailor who gives himself to his country should, if he be so fortunate as to return, be taxed to pay interest and repay principal to him who has contributed the lesser thing—money—is a crying injustice. If conscription of men is just and right, conscription of income is the more so; conscription of both is just and right when the Nation's life and honor are at stake.

TAXATION WILL INCREASE WAR EFFICIENCY.

The policy of taxation for war expenditures will increase the efficiency of the Nation in the war. Its effect in keeping down the cost of the war has already been pointed out. Its effect on the spirit of the people is still more important. The general recognition of the justice of requiring everyone, according to his ability, to share the burdens of war, will bind the people together; the sense of injustice in the policy of borrowing will tend to drive them apart, to array class against class. Our soldiers and sailors will fight loyally in any case, but their spirit will be the more indomitable if they feel that every man who stays at home is serving the country to the utmost with his substance. An America in which every citizen without discrimination is called upon to do and to give all that he can, all that his powers permit, will be a united America, and as united America is bound to be victorious.

SUGGESTED FORMS OF TAXATION.

Without entering into details, concerning which opinions may differ, we recommend that among the tax measures to be adopted for the war period the following should be included:

(1) A tax which will take substantially all of special war profits.
(2) A material lowering of the present income-tax exemption.
(3) A drastic increase in the rates of the income tax, with a sharper progression in rates as incomes become larger.
(4) High consumption taxes on luxuries.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 22, 1917.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the fairest, most just, and most easily defended provision of this bill is the income-tax provision. A tax on incomes needs no defense. The just tax is levied on one's ability to pay. The income tax is a tax on excess earnings. It is a tax on the amount a citizen makes over and above the exemptions provided in the bill. I heartily favor this form of taxation.

I voted for the Sherley amendment to increase the tax from 1 to 2 per cent on incomes between $5,000 and $7,500. This increase would have been in addition to that levied under existing law. I voted for the Lenroot amendments raising the rate from 8 to 10 per cent upon incomes in excess of $40,000 up to $60,000, and raising the other rates in the bill by 25 per cent. I voted against the amendment seeking to raise the exemption from $1,000 to $1,500 on unmarried men and from $2,000 to $2,500 on married men. If an unmarried man has an income of $1,500 he would pay only 2 per cent on the $500, or the amount in excess of $1,000, which would be a tax of $10. It will be remembered that this is a war measure, and I have no patience with an unmarried man making $1,500 per year who is not willing to contribute $10 of that amount to the support of the Government which guarantees protection to him. Nor do I have sympathy with the head of a family, husband or wife, who earns $2,500 per year and who is unwilling to economize and give 2 per cent of the $500 in excess of $2,000, or a tax of $10.

I voted against the confiscation of the larger incomes, because I agree with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that while more money might be raised the first year in this way, I believe it would have a tendency to cause the very wealthy to protect themselves by investing their money in stocks or bonds or less hazardous business ventures. This would result in their making less money and the Government, therefore, would derive less from that kind of an income tax than from the one we have adopted. The suggestion has been made that business men would not withdraw capital from these large business enterprises for two reasons: First, that it would be to their interest to keep their business going in the hope that the war would soon end and that the tax then would be reduced; and second, that they would exert themselves to make as large profits as possible and turn them over to the Government out of pure patriotism. Two answers occur to me for the first suggestion. One is that business men can not foresee how long the present war is likely to last and how long the present revenue bill or one exacting more taxes will continue. This would discourage their continuance in business and have a tendency to make business men with large capital seek less hazardous investments with smaller and safer returns. The other answer is that business men would not develop and build up a new business from which incomes could be derived taxable under the provisions of this bill. Answering the suggestion that patriotism would cause the larger investors to continue in business for the purpose of earning incomes to give the Government, permit me to say that I have yet to hear of a single case where any citizen of this Republic, however public spirited, gave to the Government his check for a single cent of taxes in excess of the amount required by law; or, if he went in person to pay his taxes did not wait for the exact change to be handed to him.

I earnestly believe in the income-tax provisions of this bill. It has been stated that we will derive $1,030,000,000 by means of the income tax under them and other income-tax provisions under existing law. This amount will be materially increased because of the amendments added to the bill hereinabove referred to. I do not favor and did not vote for the retroactive provision in the bill. In my judgment, it is not scientific and is not justified. I believe all taxes should be prospective and not retroactive. It permits a citizen to figure with some degree of certainty upon investments. It would be as fair to collect double the amount of income tax for the past year as it is to collect one-third of the amount as provided in this bill, and I do not see any reason why it is not as fair to go back over a period of three years—or, for that matter, over any number of years—as it is to go back over the past year. The committee reporting the bill does not attempt to justify it for any reason, except that this is a war measure and the Government needs the money. About $110,000,000 will be collected by this provision. Inasmuch as last year's exemptions were $3,000 for an unmarried man and $4,000 for the head of a family, there is not the same criticism against it as we would have if the exemptions were lower, and a vote for it can much more easily be defended than for some of the other provisions in the bill. It at least complies with the sound principle of taxation by placing the burden upon people who are able to bear it.

The next division in the bill deals with the excess-profits tax. In addition to the 8 per cent collected, after exempting 8 per cent, a tax of 8 per cent additional is levied, so that under the present bill and existing law 16 per cent of the excess profits are gathered in by the taxgatherer. This tax may be defended on the ground that it is an easy way to get the money, but let me invite your attention to the fact that the taxgatherer has already been to this class of citizens under the income-tax provisions of this bill, under which all incomes over $1,000 per year are taxed. Now, a person with a few shares of stock may derive but a small income from it, much less than $1,000. Although exempt from the payment of an income tax, he is required under this provision to contribute taxes to the Government.

The next division in the bill deals with the tax on beverages. I do not have any difficulty in deciding for the provisions under this heading. I voted against striking them from the bill. To strike them from the bill would not give us prohibition. I favor prohibition, local, state, and national, and will vote for it at every opportunity. I do not believe we should continue the whisky traffic because of the revenue derived from it, but if I can not get prohibition I am willing to tax distilled spirits to the point of confiscation. If I can not get to vote for straight prohibition and whisky is permitted to be sold under the law and men are permitted to squander money belonging to their families, I am willing that part of this money should fall into the hands of the internal-revenue collector rather than into the pockets of the saloon keeper.

I do not have much difficulty with the next division of the bill dealing with the tax on cigars, tobacco, and cigarettes. Their use could be avoided. They have always been a source of revenue, and when our country is in peril I do not have any objection to an additional tax being collected on them.

My difficulties increase when we come to the fifth division of the bill, containing the provisions for a tax on facilities furnished by public utilities, and I take this occasion to invite attention to some of the objections. I am opposed to a tax of 3 per cent on transportation by rail or water; to the 10 per cent tax on transportation by express companies; to the tax of 10 per cent upon passenger fares; to the tax of 5 per cent on amount paid for electric power for domestic uses; to the 5 per cent tax on telephone service of subscribers; to the tax of 5 per cent for each dispatch or message or conversation over any telegraph or telephone line, where a charge of 15 cents or more is imposed. I am also opposed to the insurance taxes provided for under this division. All these taxes, of course, will be paid by the individual citizens paying for the service or facilities rendered.

Under the first division in the bill an income tax is provided for, with an exemption of $1,000 to a single person and $2,000 to the head of a family. Under the second division, if any investments are made, no matter how small, a tax is levied upon the dividends in excess of 8 per cent, although the holder of the stock may have an annual income much less than the $1,000 exempt; and it makes no difference how poor a person is, he is taxed under the several provisions of the excess profits section. My contention is that the tax is unjust if the person paying it is poor; and if he is wealthy, he has already paid twice by means of the income tax and the excess profits tax. I do not see how any of these provisions can be justified in principle. Certainly the only excuse that can be offered is that the money is needed to pay the expenses of the war. Instead of collecting money in this way and in various other ways provided in the bill I would prefer to lower the exemption in the income-tax division, beginning at first with a small per cent and gradually raising the amount, so that a much larger share might be collected.

Division 5 of this bill provides for a tax on manufactures, including automobiles, musical instruments, and a large number of similar items, as well as drugs and medicines. Some of these products I regard as luxuries and the same objections do not lie against a tax on them as to others. I do not see how we are going to defend all of these provisions of the bill. It is inconsistent to say that the poor man should be exempt $1,000 from the income tax if single or $2,000 if the head of a family, and tax all the medicines 5 per cent that he buys.

The provisions under division 7 are equally as inconsistent. I do not believe a man with a family earning an income under $2,000 per year when he takes his wife and children to a place of amusement should be required to pay 1 cent extra for each 10-cent ticket of admission, or a maximum of 5 cents at more expensive places of amusement.

Division 8 deals with war stamp taxes. All of them are annoying, and I do not favor any of them. I want to particularly call attention to the stamps required to be placed on notes to the amount of 2 cents on each $100 when made, or when the time for payment is extended. Of course the borrower pays this tax. He ought to be exempt, and I am opposed to the provision, because it is not only unjust to tax the poor and not tax according to one's ability to pay but it is annoying as well.

I do not have any objection to the tax collected under division 9. I think the amount collected is small and reasonable, and as a war tax it is entirely justified. It provides for a tax on estates and meets with my hearty approval. I think it would be better for this country if a larger per cent were collected from the largest estates. It would have a tendency to redistribute fortunes in our Nation. I shall be glad to support amendments giving even larger amounts of these estates to the Government, particularly in time of war.

The tax collector under division 10 secures 10 per cent ad valorem on all goods imported, in addition to existing duties. These duties can only be defended as a war measure. There should be a provision added to it providing that such duties should not continue longer than a stated period, say two years from the end of the fiscal year after the close of the war, or otherwise they will not be repealed for a generation.

I do not favor the tax upon coffee and tea provided in section 1001 of this bill. It is a tax upon the breakfast table of every poor man in the country. We exempted the poor under the income-tax provision, and the same thing should be done under every provision of this or any other revenue bill.

Division 12 of the bill attempts to collect a revenue through the Postal Service. I believe the Postal Service should be self-sustaining, and do not think it should be a means through which excess revenues should be derived. I think the question of postal rates should be carefully considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, charged with the duty of investigating the entire service, and that each part of the service should pay its fair proportionate share. I do not believe that a penalty should be placed upon the distribution of educational matter, although I would be perfectly willing to vote an increase in postal rates up to the amount the Government spends for carrying that part of magazines and periodicals devoted to advertising. I do not believe that our Government is called upon to transport advertising matter from which publishers derive large amounts at a loss and that this burden should be borne by the people. I am opposed to the increase of letter postage to 3 cents. I do not think the washerwoman should be compelled to place a 3-cent stamp upon a letter she sends to her boy in the Army unless it costs the Government this amount to carry it. I feel that the proper committee should thoroughly investigate this subject, and that no excess revenue should be derived from the Postal Service, but that the revenue secured in this manner should all be used to lessen instead of increase rates, increase the number of rural routes, and give the people additional mail facilities.

In this connection, I think it is only fair to say that I have not had a single protest from any newspaper published in my district, but every one, without exception, is loyally, enthusiastically and patriotically supporting the administration in its efforts to carry on this war to a successful conclusion and is willing to make all necessary sacrifices.

The press of the country is daily carrying through its columns information free which would cost the Government thousands of dollars if paid for as advertising matter and which the people depend upon. Column after column, with attractive headlines, is published upon every conceivable subject, including regulations with reference to registration for enlistment in the Army, the sale of liberty loan bonds, for the conservation of food supplies, the stimulation of agriculture, and innumerable other questions of the very deepest interest to the people of the Nation. The subscription for and circulation of newspapers should be encouraged in every possible way.

The answer in each instance, when a motion is made to strike out any of these provisions, is not that they are defensible, not that they are justified, but that the Government needs the money in order to properly carry on the war. In argument the Ways and Means Committee always asks what substitute is offered to supply the deficiency, and insists that the Government needs to raise $1,800,000,000 by this bill. In the first place, let me say no sufficient reason has been assigned why this amount should be raised, although I subscribe to the theory that a large part of the expenses of this war should be borne by the present generation.

It must be remembered that food prices are exceptionally high; that larger taxes are being assessed, and that additional burdens are being placed upon the people. At the same time families may be called upon to give some of their members to Army service, thus lessening their productive capacity. If, however, we agree that the full amount should be raised, as stated before, I would lower the exemptions and collect a larger part through the income tax. By doing so I would place the burden upon people able to bear it, lessen the expense of collecting it, and relieve the country from many annoyances.

We have engaged in a great war. We must all make sacrifices and endure hardships. We can not write a revenue bill satisfactory to all. This bill no doubt contains many compromises of opinion of members of the Ways and Means Committee and will contain many provisions to which all Members do not agree, but it will represent the best thought and judgment of the combined membership of both branches of Congress.

I voted for the resolution declaring that a state of war existed between the United States and Germany. I voted for the $7,000,000,000 bond issue with which to finance the war. I voted for the Army bill, and, while I do not agree with all the provisions of this bill, I am going to vote for it, because it provides for the raising of necessary revenue to carry this war to a successful conclusion.

Here Lies a Big Mistake.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HARRY C. WOODYARD,

OF WEST VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a leading editorial from the Huntington (W. Va.) Herald-Dispatch, not only one of the biggest and best daily newspapers in the district which I have the honor to represent but one of the largest and best newspapers published in the State of West Virginia. Its policy is of such high, idealistic, independent, and outspoken character, and it is edited throughout with such superior ability and sound judgment as to enable it to wield a widespread influence in its extensive field, and to enjoy the moral satisfaction and material prosperity which are bound to follow on the heels of such conscientious and commendable journalistic conduct. I make this explanation that my colleagues in this House and others who may read the RECORD may know the high standing of the Herald-Dispatch in West Virginia, and that great importance is to be attached to whatever it may say, especially as to conditions of public sentiment in West Virginia and to whatever other affairs there which may occasion observation and comment from it.

And I wish to add a few observations and comments of my own on this editorial, which I shall append to my remarks. The inspiration of this able article was the frustration by the President of the emphatically recorded wishes of the Congress that Col. Roosevelt should be sent to France at the head of a volunteer command, which he offered to raise at once, or in a commission slightly lower than the highest command. The action of the President was a dampening disappointment to the martial spirit of the country, decidedly discouraging to it, and at a time when it appeared greatly to need bolstering up, and the injection of vigor and enthusiasm into our people over the plans and purposes of this war in which we are engaged.

The Herald-Dispatch records with forcefulness and clarity the effect of that, to me, disastrous blunder on the thousands of people with whom it is in touch. These people, Mr. Speaker, are typical Americans, native born for far the greater part, with a high average of intelligence, and an inheritance of patriotism and fighting blood from ancestors who fought off the Indians from their new homes beyond the Alleghenies, who fought with Washington to establish this great Republic and with Grant to maintain it, and with Lee for an independent sovereignty in which many of them so devoutly believed at the time that they cheerfully offered up their lives and their worldly possessions that it might prevail. Such people are neither cowardly nor unpatriotic, but they are jealous of their rights, strong and outspoken in their beliefs. They can not be led nor driven against their hearts and their judgments and their intelligence.

Knowing these people as well as I do—I was born and reared among them, and I love and revere them beyond any poor words of mine to express—I feel sure that the Herald-Dispatch has accurately and conservatively reflected their thoughts and feelings. I will say, further, that I believe from investigations I have made that practically the same condition exists generally throughout the State among what I may term the rank and file of our citizens. I also believe, from what various Members of Congress have told me as to their own constituents, that much the same condition covers a far greater area of the country at large than is good for this enterprise of war upon which our Government has entered.

What is to be done in the face of a condition of this kind, I do not pretend to say, nor have I any suggestion to make. That something should be done is as plainly obvious to other people as it is to me. It would seem to call for action upon the part of an expert psychologist, or a commission or advisory committee of psychologists. It is the duty of the Government to arouse the people, to stir them up, to martial enthusiasm, but it is plain that it can not be done by bluntly going against their wishes and desires, withholding confidences from them, and autocratically crushing their sentiment as expressed by their Representatives in the National Congress. And that was what was done by a stroke of the pen and a few classic samples of pure, limpid, and unalloyed English.

Mr. Speaker, it is not the Roosevelt mistake, which stimulated the clear thinking and able writing of the editor of the Huntington Herald-Dispatch, that is the interesting part of the editorial in question to me. It is the outspoken, correlated observations accompanying it. It is the fact, too, that up till this time here is a powerful and influential newspaper in my district and in my State which has stood squarely by the President in everything he has asked for and done since the declaration of war. Never once has it indicated in its attitude toward the President and the war that it was and is a Republican journal. When war came all indications were that politics had been brushed aside and patriotism was the guiding star of the editorial bark. To some who disagreed with its position upon several questions its treatment of their views seemed intolerant and impatient but, in the main, just, I am glad to say. On the issue of volunteerism versus conscription it was vigorous and plausible in its advocacy of that method of raising an army, and it criticized my position as an advocate of the volunteer method frequently, forcefully, and, I may say, legitimately and with fairness.

In the circumstances, then, what it now says strikes me with peculiar interest as decidedly important. If that is the frame of the mind of the people in its locality, what, may we ask, are the plain people elsewhere thinking of? If there is any widespread dormancy of public sentiment, it is plain that the Government should know it and proceed accordingly without delay. If this thing is general, or if it prevails in spots, the President should know it—Congress should know it. There should be no hiding this condition of affairs, if it exists to any considerable extent, from the President of the United States. Any adviser of his who should withhold from the President knowledge of such a condition if it prevails anywhere is recreant in his duty to the very point of high treason.

It is because I believe that such a lethargic, disinterested, and dormant condition should be known by the President and by officials generally wherever it exists—that it should be inspected under the rays of "pitiless publicity"—that I have created the opportunity to spread the following excerpt upon the pages of the RECORD:

HERE LIES A BIG MISTAKE.

In making the rebuff to Col. Roosevelt's patriotic aspirations a matter of personal heraldry in which vindictiveness was not entirely hidden President Wilson committed a grave error. There may be, and doubtless there are, some good technical reasons to be urged against such an expedition as that which Col. Roosevelt proposed to lead.

But in weighing the good results to be derived from such a course against the worst that could possibly come of it the case is overwhelmingly in favor of the colonel's plan.

President Wilson and many more of the leading men at Washington do not seem to realize that there is something lacking—a vital something, an indispensable something—without which we will be able to cut but a slothful and sorry figure in the war. It is a fact, though President Wilson and his advisers may not know it, that the people are not interested in the war. That is to say, they do not feel that it is their war. They look upon it either as something removed from them or as something unwelcome obtruded across their way of life. To say it briefly and bluntly, the war is unpopular. There may be enthusiasm in Washington, where the glamour of uniforms and prescience of fat jobs to come permeate their atmosphere, and the President may be deceived by this enthusiasm. But that condition, if it exist, as it probably does, is local to Washington and to the few other centers where similar conditions prevail. It does not exist in the smaller cities nor in the towns and rural communities where the masses of the producing people of the Nation live.

Demonstrations of patriotic fervor are practically unknown outside the larger cities, where pageants have been spread for distinguished visitors from abroad. The people elsewhere are for the most part calmly loyal, and, as a rule, uncomplaining. But there is no enthusiasm. There were but two things that could have kindled in the hearts of the people the spark of patriotic fervor and enthusiasm. One of these was the creation of a volunteer army under Roosevelt. This possibility has been dispelled by presidential proclamation. The other remains. It is remote, and could come only after horrors of which we dare not even dream—an armed invasion of American soil by German enemies.

Next to an armed invasion the leadership of Roosevelt would have inspired the greatest degree of popular interest and enthusiasm. Next to an armed invasion it was the only thing at all calculated to arouse the spirit of the people.

Mr. Wilson and his cabinets, advisory and otherwise, will soon find the truth of what is here stated. There is a remarkable coldness toward the liberty bonds. This is not because the people as a rule do not know what the bonds are, nor that they do not know the bonds to be a good investment. It is because they have no feeling of personal interest in the war; because the war is not popular with them. They didn't want it, and now that it is here they look upon it not with patriotic fervor or enthusiasm, but with indifference or resentment.

The slap at Col. Roosevelt, however thoroughly it may have been justified from the standpoint of the military technician, will tend further to repress the noble rage of American patriotism.

If Mr. Wilson had reversed himself on this proposition, even at the expense of personal prejudice, and in defiance of the Army Staff if necessary, the country to-day would have been singing a far different tune. It would, we confess, have placed a popular figure in the limelight. It would have centered a large measure of public interest upon the personality of Theodore Roosevelt. But Wilson himself would have been looked upon as a broad-minded statesman, capable of doing a magnanimous act even to an acknowledged political foe, and the whole Nation would have felt that the grim spirit of war had been glorified by generous compact between two of the country's greatest leaders; that it is not the administration's war, not a war that is being conducted by a Democratic President, but the people's war, conducted upon a high and righteous plane far above the level of the littleness of partisan politics.

No matter how Mr. Wilson may feel about it; no matter how sincere or intelligently conceived his motives, many people, already indifferent to the war, have had their indifference embittered, and it is going to be henceforth much harder to rally the force of public opinion and secure the cooperation of all the elements of American citizenship than it would have been if this mistake had not been made.

The thrill of genuine enthusiasm is lacking. It is needed, how badly the next few weeks will tell. The President missed the only opportunity that has presented for obtaining that thrill.

There was a widespread and persistent sentiment in favor of sending Col. Roosevelt to France. This sentiment was spontaneous. It was not sectional, nor was it political. It was intelligent and determined. It had weighed the possible objections that might be interposed, and had dismissed them as insufficient to bar the magnificent adventure. There must be some keen appeal to the imagination of the people, something to enlist their admiration, something of the pomp and circumstance and glory of war as it used to be to sustain a nation such as ours, or it will not lend itself in full efficiency to the support of any war that does not thrust armed and bloodthirsty enemies through the very gates of our country to slay our people and burn our homes. The Roosevelt expedition was rich in possibilities for the creation of this sentiment.

It is a mistake—a costly one. But in charity we bury it, for our own part, and will continue to urge the people to support the Government, not only as a patriotic duty but as a necessity which involves our very existence.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID A. HOLLINGSWORTH,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, at the close of a week's debate on this bill by leaders on both sides of the House I believe it would be rendering a service to the country to include under leave to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following remarkable editorial in this morning's Washington Post, the leading independent journal of the Capital, from which so many Members draw inspiration:

KILL THE TAX BILL.

The tax bill framed by the House is an unnecessary load upon the people, who are suffering from extortionate food prices and the shock of disorganized business resulting from the entry of the United States into the war.

It is unnecessary to raise $1,800,000,000 by taxes during this year. It is unnecessary to violate the Constitution by trying to pass an ex post facto law. It is unnecessary to frighten industry by the prospect of crushing taxes, just at the time when industry must gather strength for the greatest expansion in its history if it is to help win the war.

It is utterly unnecessary to tax foodstuffs that are already overtaxed by unregulated and unhung food pirates.

If the United States were hard pressed by its creditors and its credit were in danger, there would be a necessity for heavy taxes. But the creditors of the United States are not asking for the small amount that may be due them. On the contrary, they are willing to buy more of the Government's bonds. The credit of the United States is higher than that of any other nation in the world. Its own people are ready to lend it billions of money on long time and at lower interest than is paid by any other government.

Instead of taxing the people unnecessarily at this time Congress should raise money by long-time bonds. With this threat of ruinous taxation out of the way the liberty bonds would go like hot cakes. A big blunder was made when the taxation bill was rushed into the House before the bonds were sold. Individuals and industries are frightened out of their wits. They will not buy bonds when they fear they may have to pay excessive taxes. They are wondering whether they will be able to remain in business. That is not the spirit that Congress should cultivate among the people. It should reassure them that the Government's financial burden will be distributed over a series of years; that no discriminating taxes will be levied; and that no section or industry is to be penalized or favored for any reason whatever.

The taxation bill in the House is a wet blanket upon Secretary McAdoo's campaign for the sale of the liberty bonds. As soon as possible the Senate should make known to the country that this bill will never pass. Then the people will take heart again. Wheels will begin to turn and plans will be made to expand industry to meet the needs of the Government for fighting the war. Then the bonds will be bought up by rich and poor.

Let the Senate give the country to understand that the war is to be fought for all time, the end being the triumph of our democracy against the strongest assault that could be made against it. Let the people know that the immense cost of the war will be borne by those receiving the benefit of victory, as well as by those who endure the burden and shed the blood needful for victory. As the benefit will run to posterity, let posterity pay part of the cost. It can not pay in blood, but it can pay part of the money cost. And since the greater and more populous and richer United States will be better able to pay its share, posterity will still be under a deep debt to the patriots of this day who pay more than money for victory.

This Nation can not fight this war out of current revenues increased by taxation. It must go into debt. The sooner this fact is understood the better. The debt should be apportioned to the taxpayers over at least 30 years. Fifty years would be better, since the taxpayers 50 years hence will be enjoying far greater benefits than those of the immediate future, who will inherit the blood tax as well as the money tax.

The Daylight-Saving Plan as a War Measure.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. BORLAND,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following data:

THE DAYLIGHT-SAVING PLAN AS A WAR MEASURE.

I.

The daylight-saving plan was adopted as a war measure by Great Britain, Germany, France, Italy, Austria, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Portugal, Australia, and Iceland.

The year 1916 was the first year of operation of the plan in all but the last two countries, which adopted the plan this year.

A committee of the House of Commons which made a preliminary study of the question in 1908 and 1909 reported favorably a daylight saving bill, stating the results would be:

"To promote the greater use of daylight for recreative purposes.

"To lessen the use of houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

"To facilitate the training of the territorial force.

"To benefit the physique, general health, and welfare of all classes of the community.

"To reduce the industrial, commercial, and domestic expenditure on artificial light.

"That the object of the bill, which is desirable and would benefit the community, can not be attained without legislation.

"And that an alteration of the clock of one hour in April and a similar alteration of one hour in September is the best mode of attaining the object of the bill."

II.

REASONS WHY DAYLIGHT SAVING WAS ADOPTED AS A WAR MEASURE.

(A) Economy: In consumption of coal, oil, gas, light, and so forth.

ENGLAND.

1. The savings in the use of artificial light and fuel to produce this in England were estimated as $2,500,000 for the summer months alone. (Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, vol. 82, no. 39, p. 304.)

2. Mr. Hanbury Thomas, of the Seffield United Gas Co., has suggested that a general estimate for the whole country can be arrived at from the figures of actual saving in coal given in the replies from those undertakings who use coal and no other fuel on the following plan: The amount of coal stated by such undertaking—28 in number—to have been saved as a direct result of summer time works out in the aggregate at 1.449 per cent of the total annual quantity carbonized by them. The total quantity of coal used by all gas undertakings in the United Kingdom in 1915 was, in round figures, 18,000,000 tons. Reckoning 1.449 per cent of those figures, therefore, the saving in coal affected by gas undertakings in the United Kingdom as a result of the 4½ months of summer time may be put at about 260,000 tons.

Further, applying the same percentage to the total annual sum spent by consumers on gas—reckoned on the total annual sales of gas undertakings at 3 shillings per 1,000 cubic feet—the saving in expenditures to consumers works out at about £475,000.

These estimates can not of course be regarded as anything but conjectural, but they represent the best that can be done with the figures and are not perhaps very far wide of the mark.

(Report summer-time committee, England, February, 1917, page 12.)

3. The parliamentary committee heard from over 80 municipal electrical light undertakings, from 50 to 60 private companies, and from 11 electric power companies.

The estimates of the reduction in consumption of electric light vary very widely, from 1.25 per cent, in one case, to 55 per cent.

The returns of the power companies give a mean reduction of 20 per cent for lighting purposes.

Thirty-eight private companies furnished figures giving an estimate of reduction varying from 10 to 41 per cent, the mean for the 38 being 23 per cent.

Sixty-four municipal undertakings give a mean reduction of 18.3 per cent in units used for lighting.

(Report summer-time committee, England, February, 1917, page 10.)

4. According to E. Houghton Fry, secretary of committee for regulation of petroleum supplies the economy affected by the daylight-saving act in consumption of illuminating oils in England was 2¼ per cent of the consumption for the year; that is, about 11,500 tons.

This seems to be a very modest proportion, but it should be remembered that 11,500 tons represent two journeys by an oil tanker, which would occupy approximately four months, and this saving therefore can by no means be regarded as negligible. In fact, owing to the shortage that is at present being experienced in these vessels the result is a very welcome one.

5. The following data are taken from the report, association of chamber of commerce, United Kingdom, on the summer-time act of 1916. These statements are significant in view of the large amount of daylight which England ordinarily has.

All the chambers report that the operation of the act has resulted in a considerable saving in artificial light. The saving has been somewhat reduced by the fact that overtime has been worked in all centers, while the lighting restriction has probably increased it. Notwithstanding these factors the chambers are of the opinion that there has been considerable saving. In a few cases figures have been given as follows:

Belfast: Resulted in very appreciable saving of artificial light. This has been proved by decreased revenue of municipal-lighting authorities. In Belfast the consumption of gas was less by 5½ per cent than in the same months of 1915, while in electricity there was a saving of 2 per cent.

Blackburn: Decrease in gas consumption in Blackburn 8.19 per cent, as compared with similar period in previous years. This is equal to a saving in coal of 1,710 tons. Consumption of electricity decreased by 20 per cent, or 25 per cent in the case of large shops.

Edinburgh: Saving in city of Edinburgh considerably exceeded £10,000.

The following savings are given:

(a) Large printing establishment, working all night, 13½ per cent.

(b) Large hotel, 9 per cent.

(c) Another large hotel, 6 per cent.

(d) Consumption of gas reduced by 8 per cent, equal in money to over £6,000.

(e) Electric light used, decrease by 3 per cent, though this to some extent may have been due to police regulations.

Manchester: The act did result in a saving of the consumption of gas in Manchester. The decrease between 6 p. m. and 1 a. m. amounted to 134,000,000 cubic feet, equal to 2 per cent, on the annual consumption, or equivalent to 11,000 tons of coal. In residential districts the electric light used was decreased by about 15 per cent on a previous year.

Newport: Saving estimated at from 15 to 25 per cent.

Nottingham: The saving is put at 10 to 15 per cent.

Oldham: Returns by corporation showed good reduction in quantity of gas and electricity used.

Portsmouth: The saving is put at 25 per cent.

6. Mr. Herbert Samuel in the House of Commons May 8, 1916, said:

The Government would not have dreamt of favoring this measure or of inviting the House to consider it unless it had reason to think that it was essentially advantageous for war purposes.

The question of our coal supply is one which is giving us serious concern.

We are casting about in every direction for means to increase our coal supplies, and when a proposal is made which we believe, and indeed are convinced, would lead to a large economy of certainly many hundreds of thousands of tons of coal in the course of a year, we can not regard that as a matter of indifference.

7. The question was first brought to notice by the expert committee appointed to advise the Government on the disposal of the coal output.

This central committee for the disposal of coal unanimously passed a resolution urging the Government to adopt the daylight saving plan in order to conserve the coal resources of the nation.

8. The board of trade found it necessary to urge upon all gas and electric light companies a reduction in their consumption of coal.

9. The railway executive committee managing the railways on behalf of the Government favored the proposal. (Parliamentary Debates, House of Commons, May 8, 1916, p. 345.)

FRANCE.

[From summary, report of M. Mallavalle (Deputy) on behalf "Commission de l'Enseignment et des Beaux Arts" on bill for renewal of summer time in 1917 and subsequent years.]

1. The committee record two sets of estimates of the total saving in coal for the whole country as follows:

(1) The total quantity of coal consumed by gas undertakings in France annually being put at 5,000,000 tons and by electrical undertakings at 2,000,000—7,000,000 tons in all—an economy of 10 per cent on this amount—which the committee think it fair to take as result of summer time—gives about 60,000 tons over one month, 200,000 tons over three and one-half months—length of summer-time period in France in 1916—360,000 tons over six months, 410,000 tons over seven months.

If a 15 per cent economy is reckoned the savings are estimated at about 87,500 tons over one month, 306,000 tons over three and one-half months, 525,000 tons over six months, 612,000 tons over seven months.

Reckoning a mean between these two calculations, the saving over six months is put at 442,500 tons and over seven months at 511,000 tons, representing a saving in cost (estimating £1,750,000) and 51,000,000 (£2,030,000), respectively. "Chiffres moyens qui pourraient approcher davantage de la vérité."

2. The director of inventions affecting the national defense, after studying figures of output of gas during the periods preceding and following the introduction of summer time and the restoration of normal time, concluded that the saving in coal or gaslight might be put at 1 kilogram—somewhat over 2 pounds—per person, or 1 ton for each 1,000 persons per month.

There are said to be 18,000,000 persons in France "eclaires par le gaz," so that the economy of coal on this basis would amount to 18,000 tons per month, or more than 200,000 over the whole year.

The figure for electricity undertakings is estimated as 100,000, giving a total of 300,000 tons—30,000,000 francs or £1,190,000—for gas and electricity combined. Half this amount would be saved for the summer-time period.

3. At the Calais Docks there was an increase in unloading capacity of 250 tons each day of summer.

4. At Marseille it was found possible to deal with an extra quantity of goods estimated at between 12,000 and 31,000 tons from July to September—2¼ per cent to 4 per cent of the total tonnage unloaded.

GERMANY.

The municipal gas works at Berlin reported a decrease during May and June, 1916, of 508,500 cubic meters, in spite of the fact that 18,000 new gas meters were put up during the first six months of 1916, and the records from January to April showed an increase of 2,400,000 cubic meters output of gas as compared with 1915.

The other countries of Europe are investigating the results of last year's operation of the daylight-saving plan. (Report English Commission, p. 17.)

III.

DAYLIGHT SAVING AS A WAR MEASURE IN THE UNITED STATES.

(A) THE FOOD PROBLEM.

1. This country is facing a very serious food problem the solution of which, in part at least, lies in increased, intensive cultivation of the soil. All agricultural operations must cease at sunset.

2. The daylight-saving plan offers opportunity to over 20,000,000 workers engaged in trade, transportation, and other pursuits outside the field of agriculture for an extra hour of daylight after their workday is over for work on the land.

Prof. Y. N. Carver, Harvard University, and former Chief of the Rural Organization Service of the United States Government, says:

It would be a great help to the movement for the increase of the production of food if workingmen had an extra hour of daylight in the evening for work in their gardens. An hour's work a day in a garden, if wisely directed, will produce an amazing amount of food.

I believe this to be of the utmost importance. Unless something unforeseen happens, the world is going to experience the greatest food shortage within the next year that it has known since the Napoleonic wars. The chances are that there will be many hungry people in our large cities before another winter is over, not because there is not enough work for them to do, not because money wages will not be high, but because food will be hard to get at any price. Anything which will enable workingmen to produce a part of their own food is, therefore, of the utmost importance.

3. The national emergency food-garden commission is inspiring and aiding the planting of 1,000,000 food gardens in cities, towns, and villages. The product of these gardens will supply food valued at $250,000,000. (See American Forestry, April, 1917.) Daylight saving will give tremendous impetus to this movement through the additional daylight hour it offers workers and others.

(B) CONSERVATION OF COAL AND OTHER MATERIAL RESOURCES.

1. There is no doubt but what this country will achieve the savings that the European nations have experienced.

(a) Robert L. Brunet, of the Rhode Island committee on public safety, estimated that Providence will save $60,000 yearly in lighting and fuel, and the country would save $40,000,000 annually.

(b) The special committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce estimates that the country would save $100,000,000 annually in the use of artificial light, on basis of plan for operation entire year.

(c) Cleveland saved $200,000 during the first six months' operation of the plan.

(C) INCREASED EFFICIENCY OF WORKERS.

1. In the summer a cool hour of the morning will be substituted for a warm one of the afternoon. The strength of the workers will thereby be better conserved.

2. There will be less danger from accident.

(a) Artificial light will not be necessary at the end of the workday.

(b) It is a well-known fact that industrial accidents occur most frequently in the late afternoon, the time when fatigue is great and efficiency low. An hour of this period will be shifted to the morning period.

The executive council of the American Federation of Labor recently passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, That we urge the inauguration of a "daylight-saving" project for the conservation of time and opportunity for great leisure and open-air exercise for the masses of the people, and we insist that in order that the change may be beneficial it must have its general application throughout the United States. We will gratefully receive from and actively give to any groups the fullest support in the attainment of the "daylight-saving" project so long as it shall be utilized for the purpose herein declared.

It is the sincere hope that the movement to inaugurate the "daylight saving" may be entirely successful and it will be our pleasure to contribute whatever may be in our power to that end.

(D) HEALTH, MORALS, AND SOCIAL WELFARE.

Workers will be able to spend more time outdoors after the workday is over, owing to the additional hour of daylight.

(a) More work in gardens.

(b) Better use of recreational facilities.

(c) Lessened eyestrain for workers due to use of artificial light.

(d) Increase in health of workers and their families.

(e) The "rush" hour will come during daylight and lessen the risk of accident.

W. T. Sedgwick, professor of public health, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and member Advisory Board, Hygienic Laboratory, United States Public Health Service, says:

I am strongly in favor of the daylight-saving movement both for reasons of thrift and economy and because of its importance for the public health.

By increasing the period of sleep in darkness, it would tend to promote rest and diminish fatigue, since that sleep is best which falls in darkness and quietness. And by increasing by an hour a day the daylight time available for play and pleasure it would tend to promote outdoor life and exercise, both greatly needed in our increasingly sedentary modern life.

The adoption of the daylight-saving plan is being urged as a war measure by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, representing over 800 trade and commercial bodies. Many other associations are urging immediate action.

The advisory commission to the National Council of Defense passed a resolution indorsing the plan.

Action on the plan as a war measure is urged by Massachusetts Committee on Public Safety, Maine Committee on Public Safety, Vermont Committee on Public Safety, New Hampshire Committee on Public Safety, Rhode Island Committee on Public Safety, and Connecticut Committee on Public Safety.

Many cities, towns, organizations, and individuals throughout the country are urging immediate action.

The Army Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, now that the Army bill, containing selective conscription, has finally passed, we shall have the two systems, volunteer and conscription—draft—in full operation, side by side. In the Navy and in the Marine Corps the volunteer system prevails exclusively. In the National Guard and Regular Army the volunteer system prevails, except that if the required number is not obtained the draft will be applied to fill these organizations up to the required strength. There does not seem to be any question of principle involved, but only one of expediency. Most people now concede that there is a universal obligation to render military service resting upon all able-bodied men when the country's vital needs require it. But they are not agreed upon the wisdom or expediency of resorting to this extreme measure before the necessity for doing so has appeared. Many of us believed that we should first give those willing to go a chance to do so, and that under the volunteer system we could get all the men required and more than we could use. After the bill passed the House and was pending in the Senate, I received a letter from the editor of The Record, Mr. L. Benshoof, of Detroit, Minn., inquiring as to my reasons for my votes and attitude on the main provisions of the bill, to which I replied, in substance, as follows:

In order to understand the questions presented in the consideration of the Army bill it should be recalled that under existing law the President is authorized to increase our military forces to about 1,000,000 men, first, by utilizing the volunteer enlistment system, and, second, by draft if necessary. The bill proposed by the War Department contemplated raising, first, half a million, and then such additional forces as to bring the total strength up to about 2,000,000 men by selective conscription. It was not a question of universal liability to military service at all. The bill presented by the War Department proposed to select from the male citizens of the country every person between the ages of 19 and 25 years, and then exempt certain members of that class physically defective or who had religious scruples against war, and so forth. The male population between the ages of 19 and 25 years is estimated at 7,000,000, 42 per cent of which would be exempt from one cause or another, so there would remain about 4,000,000 between the ages mentioned from whom to select the additional forces of 1,000,000 men.

That the burden of raising this army should fall exclusively upon the young men between the ages of 19 and 25 years seemed unfair. Why a young man of the age of 19 or 20, who can not vote, should be compelled to serve in the Army at $15 per month when those of 26 or over should be exempted and privileged to enjoy their earnings of four or five times that of the conscript was never explained. Universal military service has always been understood to embrace all able-bodied men of military age. While we recognize the right of conscription as a last resort, it has never in this or any other English-speaking country been considered the best method of raising an army. Every war in which we have ever engaged, from the Revolutionary War to the present time, has been fought by volunteers. The 5,000,000 or more men raised by England, now in the field, are volunteers, and it was only when necessity seemed to require that conscription should be resorted to that it was adopted to raise the additional forces now in training. Canada, Australia, and New Zealand have raised their forces by the volunteer system. The Army bill, while in Committee of the Whole, was so amended as to raise the age of conscripts so as to embrace all between the ages of 21 and 40 years and the pay of the enlisted man was raised from $15 to $30 per month. After these amendments had been agreed to, although I believed that by the volunteer system we could have raised the forces more quickly and gotten better men, I yielded my judgment to the judgment of the majority and voted for the bill.

The arguments for conscription in preference to the volunteer system are based upon theory and not upon experience. Let us hope that it will be a success; but I believed, and now believe, that it would have been safer and wiser to have followed the light of experience of the past. In spite of the military critics, the wars we have waged in the past brought us victory and glory, and the mistakes they point out were not due to the volunteer system but to sending men into action before they were trained and disciplined in the arts of war. Had they been drafted men their failure would probably have been worse. That, at least, is the opinion of Gen. SHERWOOD, a Representative from Ohio in this Congress, who rose from a private to a brigadier general in the Civil War, and who fought in 43 battles of that war, and who had command of both volunteers and drafted men. Here are extracts from his very able speech on this subject, delivered in this House April 26, 1917, to wit:

"Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat says that the volunteer system was a failure during the Civil War. I deny it. History proves that that is not so. I claim that the conscript system during the war was a failure, and I am going to prove it before I take my seat. I have here an official report that will be presented for the first time on this floor of the draft riots throughout this country during the Civil War. And I am going to print it in the RECORD for the benefit of the "conscript fathers" on this floor [applause] and throw some enlightenment on this question.

"The advocates of conscription seem to lose sight of the fact that the vital question of the hour is not what is the most equitable way to raise an army, but the vital question is what is the best and speediest way to raise the most reliable and efficient army. There is no doubt the volunteer always is and always has been and always will be a better soldier than the so-called slacker. [Applause.] Another grave mistake the devotees of conscription make, and that is that conscription takes the rich and the poor all alike. As the family is the unit of society, let us see. I have recently been reading a very valuable pamphlet by Prof. George Nasmyth, a noted writer on sociology, author of a book on social progress, and another valuable book—'A Study of Force as a Factor in Human Relations.' This pamphlet deals with the question of universal military training or conscription, whichever you may call it. The argument for universal military service is that it treats the rich and the poor alike. This argument is not sound. Let me quote from Prof. Nasmyth a paragraph that goes to the root of the whole question:

"Does universal military service involve equal sacrifice on the part of rich and poor alike? If both are killed, of course both have made the last great sacrifice. But for the families of the two men the difference is very great. For the family of the poor man the loss of the bread-winner means that the widow must go out to work; that the children must be deprived of an opportunity for education. For the rich man, on the contrary, no such sacrifice on the part of his family is involved. His wife is not compelled to go out and work; his children are not deprived of the opportunity of receiving a liberal education.

"To that poor woman and her children life is a burden without hope.

"As all our wars have been successful, all fought by volunteers, I am for the volunteer system for raising a patriotic and effective army. As forcing unwilling men into the Army, even to fight for the life of the Republic, resulted in riots and rebellion and bloodshed, and was a conceded failure in our greatest and longest enduring war, I am opposed to conscription now. The statement, so often repeated on this floor, that the volunteer system is a failure rests solely upon the assertions of those who have had no experience in war and who have presented no argument to sustain their statements. When I state that the draft system has always proved a disastrous failure in this country I do not propose to rest the statement on mere assertion. I am going to prove it.

"During our great Civil War, which was fought on both sides almost exclusively by volunteers, we had in the armies of the Union from 1861 to 1865, 2,212,742 soldiers. Of this number, notwithstanding the drafts, covering a period of almost two years, less than 62,000 drafted men ever got in battle array at the front. [Applause.] The talk heard so often on this floor that an unwilling soldier, forced into the Army against his will and against his convictions, will make as serviceable or as valuable a soldier as a volunteer, who offers his services because of an all-prevailing sense of duty to his country or his country's cause, is not only absurd but absolutely foolish. During my four years' service in the Civil War I was never sick and never off duty, hence I was always at the front of observation. [Applause.] I was a member of three regiments and had as much experience, I believe, with both volunteers and drafted men as any ex-soldier now living. During the Atlanta campaign of 110 days, every day under fire, I had sent to my regiment 72 drafted men from northwestern Ohio, but of that 72 men only 2 proved of any value, only 2 out of the 72. [Laughter.] And you can not find a surviving soldier of the Civil War to-day in any part of the United States who will admit that he was forced into the Army as a drafted man.

"I could give you more proofs of the failure of conscription in the time that tried men's souls, and women's souls, too. These are memories of trial and travail burnt into my soul—indelibly as long as life and memory shall last."

There is a moral and psychological foundation for giving as much play to the will and individual choice as possible.

Modern war is not only a struggle on the battle field, but a contest of all the industrial, intellectual, and economic forces of a nation. The efforts of those on the farm, in the factory, forest, or mine, the chemist in his laboratory, the scientist in his study, are all as necessary as those of the soldiers in the field, but it is the task of the soldier that involves a direct risk of human life. It has always been customary when extremely dangerous tasks confront, either in peace or war, to call for volunteers. No one desires to bear the responsibility for the death of a fellow human being if it can be avoided.

When it was desired to block the channel of Santiago Bay so as to bottle up Cervera's fleet by sinking the collier Merrimac right under the Spanish guns, it seemed to be a task involving certain death of those engaged, and they called for volunteers, and Hobson and his heroic comrades came forth.

When Sir Ernest Shackleton and his crew of 52 were marooned last year on Elephant Island, facing starvation in 60 days unless word for help could be sent in an open boat across the Antarctic Sea 800 miles, he called for volunteers, and every man offered himself, although the chance of life seemed to be as 1 in 100. He chose five of the best sailormen to go with him, and he added, in telling the story, "it was a sort of selective draft, you know." The successful rescue of the explorers touched the heart of the world and will be an incentive to heroic effort in time to come. The idea of compulsion takes away the glory and incentive to such effort, both in peace and war. Let us hope, therefore, that when the new system of selective draft is put into effect we can overlook this aspect of the case, and that all the patriotic young men registered and fit for service will offer themselves willingly, so that all chosen can truly be called volunteers, to fight and to die, if need be, for our country's cause and that "government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

The Revenue Bill—Is It a Legislative Joke?—Taxing Business Out of Business—Why Not Go After Money Where It Is Instead of Looking For It Where It Won't Be?—Can We Never Be Consistent?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress is making history every day. Beautiful history! If the epoch we are living in were not so deeply serious, if the issues confronting us were not so ghastly and tragic, one might almost be tempted as the days go by and one proposition after another is introduced—each a little more absurd than the one preceding it—I repeat if the issue were not so tragic—one might almost be tempted to remark in the language of vaudeville, "it is to laugh!"

But the days for laughter or even smiles are over and we will soon be confronted by a situation that will compel even the most frivolous to pause in his frivolity. Grave events in the history of mankind are impending, and while we are wasting precious time, splitting hairs over trivialities the mills of God are grinding, and—

Tho' the mills of God grind slowly,
Yet they grind exceeding small;
Tho' with patience He stands waiting,
With exactness grinds He all.

There is a heavy, heavy responsibility resting on us all in these days, and the sooner we get away from the dreary, foolish vagaries that are filling each idle hour we spend and awake to a realization of what we are up against, the better it will be for the country; aye, the world; the better for our constituents, and I am of the opinion that it will also be better for our relatively unimportant selves.

The various distinguished members of the Ways and Means Committee have finished apologizing for the revenue bill, various other Members have been offering all kinds of amendments, and still other Members have introduced propositions for the raising of more revenue and the conservation of our resources.

In the meantime, judging by the reports in the press the big loan is being subscribed to in a manner just about as leisurely as the manner in which Congress is passing war measures, and all kinds of publicity campaigns are being suggested to make the people cough up for the Liberty Loan.

The optimistic members of the Ways and Means Committee have figured out almost to a penny what a lot of money the bill is going to produce, but if the various sections are examined carefully and their ultimate effect on business considered, I am afraid a time of disappointment is at hand, and there will be a deficit in many cases where a revenue is expected.

A learned judge once said, "The power to tax is the power to destroy," and I am very much inclined to believe that in the process of taxation we are proposing we are going to tax a lot of our industries out of business and kill the goose that lays the golden egg. It is not my intention to go into a detailed analysis of the bill, or the various amendments and other propositions. What is the use? We will patch up some kind of a bill and the Senate will pull it to pieces, snip some corners from our patches, add a few choice patches of their own, and then it will go to conference and after a weary wait a bill will be passed and the public will have to put up or shut up.

And in cases where the revenue promises and probably would produce a substantial revenue there have already been introduced in both Houses of Congress measures and resolutions that would lop off a goodly part of the possible revenue.

Several propositions are now pending in Congress which give the President certain extraordinary powers—powers that never before in the history of mankind were conferred upon the head of a nation by the legislative body thereof. I very much doubt the constitutionality of the proposed legislation, but, as we all know, in war times right gives way to might. Among the powers to be given the President by this proposed legislation is that of either prohibiting entirely, or at least partially, the use of any cereals for the manufacture of malt or spirituous liquors. In other words, as a war measure, he can declare the whole country "bone dry" without the consent of the individual States or of the people living in these States. Every thinking man will understand at a glance the absurdity of such a proposition, and I have sufficient faith in the common sense of President Woodrow Wilson not to believe that he would exercise such power even if the prohibitionists in and out of Congress should succeed in giving him such power. Outside of some insignificant local successes our prohibition friends have not been very successful of recent dates.

Congress, through the Committee on Rules, and also through the Committee on the Judiciary, has halted the prohibition amendment to the Constitution; and the Committee on Ways and Means, in formulating a bill by means of which it is hoped to raise a large part of the cost of the war in which we are now engaged, has almost doubled the tax now paid on malt and alcoholic liquors. And in doing so the committee felt that it would have the patriotic cooperation of the American brewers and distillers. Instead of protesting against any increase in the Federal taxes now paid by the distillers, they themselves made the suggestion that during the war their taxes should be doubled. I have before me a letter written by the president of the Distillers' Securities Corporation, of New York, dated May 2, 1917, in which he says:

On behalf of the Distillers' Securities Corporation I desire to submit the following facts, which have been collated after very careful investigation. These facts are submitted for the purpose of enabling the Congress of the United States to determine what tax should during the continuance of the war be levied upon spirits, alcohol, and whisky, all embraced in the general term "distilled spirits." This is the first time that this company has undertaken to present its views in connection with the pending tax question. No committee and no attorney and no agent and no person has had any authority to speak for this company or to present its views. We do not know that any such representation has been made, but in order to clear the atmosphere we make this statement so that our views shall not be confused with any ideas or arguments heretofore presented.

This company owns or controls distilleries located in Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, and elsewhere. The capacity of its distilleries is nearly 50 per cent of the total grain distillery capacity of the United States. As it is the duty of everyone in the United States to render every possible service to our Government, we are prepared and anxious to contribute our share. In accordance with this determination we, on February 7, 1917, tendered to the Government the use of all our distillery facilities for war purposes.

The present internal-revenue tax is $1.10 per proof gallon on all distilled spirits used for beverage purposes. The total tax collected from this source during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, was $148,565,963.45.

We are in favor of increasing during the period that the present war continues the tax from $1.10 to $2.20 per proof gallon. This increase of $1.10 per proof gallon over the present tax will, upon the basis of last year's withdrawals, yield to the Government during the present fiscal year $148,565,963.45 in excess of the revenue derived from this industry during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, or a total of $293,131,926.90.

Now, this may be regarded as a very patriotic and generous offer. I am not aware that the brewers have made a similar offer to the Government, but I do know, as the Representative, in part, of a city wherein the brewing business is one of the chief industries, that the brewers have not protested against the tax on beer being raised from $1.50 to $2.50 a barrel, as I understand is the intention of the Committee on Ways and Means. This increase of $1.25 a barrel will give to the Government the sum of $500,000,000 at least, including the increase revenue from distilled spirits. Now, half a billion dollars annually is a sum that is beyond the comprehension of the average professional prohibitionist, and it is nearly one-third of the amount we must raise annually by taxation for the prosecution of the war. Are the prohibitionists willing to guarantee to raise this sum by some other way of taxation if the President should comply with their wishes and prohibit the manufacture of distilled and malt beverages during the period of the war? I admit that as long as this manufacture is going on men will drink, and if the manufacture is stopped some of them, even professional prohibitionists, will manufacture whisky or some alcoholic product under that name—will make it themselves and not pay one cent to the Government.

Let me remind my friends the professional prohibitionists that the prohibition of the manufacture of alcohol—and as long as alcohol is produced alcoholic liquors will be consumed—would nullify all of our preparations for war and would make this country as helpless as a newborn baby. No smokeless powder can be made without alcohol, and every time one of our big guns speaks at least 50 pounds of alcohol are destroyed. This fact alone shows the absurdity of the demand of the prohibitionists. Of course, they will say that it is not the intention to stop the manufacture of alcohol for industrial or scientific purposes. Of course not; but, as far as I am concerned, I would not have a professional prohibitionist about any plant manufacturing alcohol.

Our prohibition friends favor the suggestion to give the President the power to prohibit the use of cereals for the manufacture of spirituous and malt liquors on two grounds. One is that thereby alcohol would be kept from our soldiers in the field and the other is that thereby a possible shortage of breadstuffs in the country may be averted. That sounds all right, but it is not. By a ukase of the late Czar the Russian soldier may have been deprived of his vodka, although I believe that their officers still get more than they can carry comfortably and safely; but we all know that Tommy Atkins get his drink of something decidedly stronger than water, and a French soldier without his wine would be like a German soldier without his beer or an American soldier without his gun. Now, there is no immediate danger that our boys will come in contact with the compulsory sober Russians, but they are very apt to come in contact with the English and the French, and, like true comrades, they will "drink from the same canteen." Even if we grant the absurd claim that prohibition is necessary for the protection of our soldiers, why should the people be affected thereby who are not soldiers? Even if we raise an army of 2,000,000 men, it would contain not 2 per cent of the population of the country, and why should 98 per cent be deprived of something they have been accustomed to in order to prevent 2 per cent from getting it? That part of the question is not only absurd but ridiculous. Now, as to a possible shortage of breadstuffs in this country. Some of our prohibition friends are not only sincere and conscientious, but they state their case in an admirable manner and compel even the attention of those who differ with them. One of these men is Mr. Clinton N. Howard, of Rochester, N. Y., who is now on a lecture tour against the saloon and in favor of prohibition, under the auspices of an organization known as the International Bureau of Reform. I am afraid that much of the good Mr. Howard can do is lost by reason of the company he keeps in his lecture tour.

I have read with much interest the speech he delivered here in Washington on April 15, in which he advocated very earnestly prohibition as a war measure. Of course he quoted statistics by the ton, but, unfortunately for his argument, his statistics were all exaggerated and wrong. For instance, Mr. Howard said that 110,000,000 bushels of grain were used annually in the production of whisky and beer; that this quantity of grain made 2,000,000,000 gallons of beer and 140,000,000 gallons of whisky; and that if this grain had been ground into flour and baked into bread, it would have furnished a loaf of bread every day in the year for 15,000,000 families. If Mr. Howard, in the interest of truth, had consulted the official reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and if he knew that between 40 and 60 per cent of all the grain used by the distiller and the brewer is returned to the farmer—especially to the dairy farmer—in the shape of the most nutritious feed for cattle, he might have modified his statements. Now, let us have the correct statistics on the materials used for distilled spirits, based on the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. For the year 1916 the amount of grain used consisted of the following:

	Bushels.
Corn	32,009,542
Rye	3,116,612
Malt	4,480,588
Wheat	3,373
Barley	148
Oats	9,807
Other materials	68,882
Total	39,688,952
	Gallons.
With an estimated yield of 4.63 would give	183,759,847.76
Molasses used in distillation	152,142,232.00
With an estimated yield of .753, resulting in	114,563,110.69

Of the 39,688,952 bushels of grain used in distilling, at a low calculation, over 30 per cent, or over 15,000,000 bushels are conserved in the shape of valuable feed for cattle. The fiscal year 1916 was an abnormal one in the distilling industry. The total production of spirits was over 249,000,000 gallons. Of this over 84,000,000 gallons were used in the making of ammunition in this country and 37,000,000 gallons were exported for use in making ammunition abroad. The total amount of grain in 1915 used in distillation was only 14,259,842 bushels. In 1914 the figures were 21,315,699 bushels.

Now, for the brewers. They used in the same year for brewing 48,000,000 bushels of barley, 15,000,000 bushels of corn grits, and 2,000,000 bushels of rice. Total 65,000,000 bushels. Of this quantity, 57,142,657 bushels were recovered for utilization as dairy feed and horse rations. This leaves but a loss of a little less than 8,000,000 bushels of grain in the brewing business, and the financial loss is more than made up by the value of the cattle feed which is far greater than that of the raw grain. Now, compare these official figures with those of Mr. NORTON, and it will be seen that Mr. NORTON, in the interest of prohibition, and I presume in the interest of truth, exaggerates to the tune of eighty-seven and one-half million bushels.

Brewers and distillers used together 104,688,952 bushels of grain. Of these 57,142,657 bushels were recovered by the brewers and about 15,000,000 bushels by the distillers, not accounting for the grain used for the manufacture of alcohol for the ammunition makers. This makes a total of 72,142,657 bushels recovered at a greater value and a combined consumption of 32,546,295 bushels of grain by the brewers and distillers. Mr. NORTON, however, claims the consumption of 110,000,000 bushels of grain by the brewing and distilling interests and does not appear to be worried at all by the little discrepancy of eighty-seven and one-half millions. And so it is with all the statistics our prohibition friends bring forward to bolster up their case.

The brewers used but 1.382 per cent of the total grain crop of 1916, and the distillers only about eight-tenths of 1 per cent, making no allowance whatever for the grain recovered as feed.

Now, consider what grain is principally used by the brewers and then figure out the correctness of the claim of the prohibitionists that the grain used by the brewers and distillers would furnish bread for 15,000,000 people for a whole year. Of the 65,000,000 bushels of grain used by the brewers not a single kernel was wheat, but 48,000,000 bushels were barley. Who has ever heard of barley as a breadstuff in the United States? A little barley is used in soups, but the quantity used in this way is infinitesimal. However, the brewers used 15,000,000 bushels of corn and the distillers used 32,000,000 bushels of corn, together with a little over 3,000,000 bushels of rye and 145 bushels of wheat. Now, out of the products of these 50,000,000 bushels of breadstuffs the Government of the United States is to derive the sum of $500,000,000 in taxation. I think that they are the highest-priced breadstuffs the world has ever seen, and the Government of the United States would be almost criminally foolish to reject such an income from such a small commodity.

If I am opposed to prohibition in times of peace on the ground that it interferes with the personal liberty of the citizen and should never be enacted unless approved by a referendum vote of the people, I am equally opposed to prohibition in war times, not only for the same reason but for the additional reason that it would close a source of revenue the Government is now more in need of than ever before. As to the proposition to give the President the power to prohibit the use of cereals in the manufacture of beer and liquors, I do not hesitate to say that I will not vote for it and will combat it with all my strength. I do not believe in giving the President any more power than is given him by the Constitution. Congress has gone too far in this direction already, and if we continue that way we may as well turn over the whole Government—executive, legislative, and judicial—to the President and say good-by to the American Republic.

I will insert here several telegrams bearing on this subject, which contain valuable information stated briefly and concisely:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 1½, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM J. CARY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

We respectfully ask that you consider carefully the effect that the proposed legislation contemplating the withdrawal of grains from the manufacture of malt beverages would have if made effective. It would be diametrically opposed to the interests of dairymen and would restrict the production of milk and increase the cost of same to the consumer. At this and future times the production of milk should be encouraged, and if brewers' dried grains and malt sprouts are eliminated it would certainly decrease economic milk production, as brewers' dried grains and malt sprouts are rich in protein. Over 900,000,000 pounds of dried grains and 100,000,000 pounds of malt sprouts are produced, or in all about 1,000,000,000 pounds are produced and fed annually in the United States. This represents the by-product of the brewing industries. We therefore respectfully urge the full consideration to this question, which vitally affects the interests of every milk producer and consumer.

PENN GRAIN & FEED CO., Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW YORK, May 1½, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM J. CARY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

In considering withdrawal of the use of grains from manufacture of malt beverages we urge that you examine carefully the effect upon the dairy industry by discontinued usage of dried brewers' grains and other by-products. Over 12,000 cars of dried brewers' grains are fed annually to dairy cattle in the Eastern States where the grains are manufactured, and about 13,000 additional cars of grain are manufactured and used annually as cattle food in the remainder of the United States. These grains are rich in protein, which the eastern farmers can not grow, but which are essential to economic milk production.

WALKER GORDON LABORATORY CO.,
Milk Producers, Plainsboro, N. J.

NEW YORK, May 1½, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM J. CARY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

The proposed legislation contemplating the withdrawal of the use of grains from malt beverages if made effective, will be diametrically opposed to the interests of the dairymen and stock raisers in this crisis. The production of milk should be encouraged, and if brewers' dried grains and malt sprouts are eliminated a grain rich in protein and essential to economic milk production will be removed and a shortage in dairy feed experienced. About 450,000 tons of dried brewers' grains and 50,000 tons of malt sprouts are produced annually in the United States, representing the by-products of the brewing industry; and we respectfully urge the greatest consideration to this question, which vitally affects the interest of every milk producer.

FARMERS' FEED CO. OF NEW YORK.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate what I have contended since this session of Congress began. We will need money, and lots of it. We will need it quickly, and we will keep on needing it as long as the war lasts. There is but one place to get cash, and that is the place where the cash exists. You are going to draft manhood wherever you find it available. Now, be consistent, and draft cash where it is most available, and adopt the resolution I introduced on April 4, 1917, and which I will append to my remarks:

Joint resolution to prevent the possibility of private profit being made out of war.

Resolved, etc., That the following measures be taken to prevent the possibility of private profit being made out of war:

First. A graduated income tax levied by Congress upon all annual incomes above $5,000, which shall amount to conscription of all incomes in excess of $100,000 a year.

Second. Immediate conscription by the Government of all railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and their operation by the Government for public service without private profit.

Third. Immediate conscription by the Government of all natural resources, including mines and oil wells, and their operation under the Bureau of Mines without profit.

Fourth. The Government shall deal with the workers in any conscripted industry through the organizations formed by the workers, with due safeguards for the right of unorganized workers. This will protect both the Government and the workers.

Fifth. Immediate conscription and operation by the Government of all food storage warehouses for the service of the American people, and the passing of a law making speculation in food supplies an act of treason under the Articles of War.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. LOUIS C. CRAMTON,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, while the revenue bill, which has to-day passed the House, was pending in Committee of the Whole, I moved to strike out section 502, because of its imperfections. In my remarks at that time, on page 2618 of the RECORD of May 19, I pointed out those imperfections. Since then I have given the matter further consideration, and suggest to those in charge of the measure the following amendment, which, I believe, will correct the defects, obviate endless controversy in the operation of section 502, recognize in the law itself the exemption which the courts will assure State or local governments, and avoid exempting many public officers from the tax when the circumstances are such that they should not be exempted.

The following is the suggested amendment:

Strike out—

SEC. 502. That no tax shall be imposed under section 500 upon any payment received for services rendered to officers or employees of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, in the course of their official business.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 502. That no tax shall be imposed under section 500 upon any payment received for services rendered to the United States, or to any State or political subdivision thereof, or to officers or employees of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, in the course of their official business: Provided, That such exemption from tax upon payments for such services rendered to such officers or employees shall only be allowed in the event there is presented by such officer or employee, at the time of such payment, a certificate issued by the Federal, State, or local government, as the case may be, of which he is an officer or employee, identifying him as such and certifying that the service in question as required in the discharge of his official duties and that the expense thereof is to be borne by such Federal, State, or local government.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM F. WALDOW,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I realize the fact that this revenue bill, which provides for raising the vast sum of over $2,000,000,000 of revenue, is a war measure, and war demands a sacrifice or it should demand a sacrifice from every individual who has had the protection and all the privileges of a free country, and I feel certain that every American is ready to perform his part and is ready to accept his share of this sacrifice and will cheerfully bear his just portion of this burden necessary for the operations of the Government. No patriotic man is unwilling to contribute to the Government and contribute generously. But to do so he must have something to contribute. Tax his business to the verge of bankruptcy, demand contribution from industries that border on confiscation, and nothing but destruction can follow, and destruction of business and of industry means destruction of sources of Government incomes. We should insist at this time upon the reestablishment of a respectable protective tariff, which will not only be invaluable after the war, but would immediately produce hundreds of millions of dollars for the war treasury. This bill will produce little, if any, immediate revenue.

Our Nation's experience in the past reveals the fact that taxes levied upon the people in times of war are not always repealed in times of peace. In fact, an extra war tax of about a hundred million dollars was raised for the purpose of carrying on the Spanish-American War, and while some items in this bill were repealed there was very little decrease in the amount of revenue collected several years after peace had been declared. In view of this fact, I believe we want to use our very best methods and our very best judgment in spreading this tax in such a way so if necessity arises we will not be called upon to repeal many of its provisions.

My personal regard for all of the members of the Ways and Means Committee is the very highest. I admire and admit their ability. I am certain of their integrity and I do not believe there is a single member of that powerful committee who would attempt to support or ask his follow colleagues to support and pass this bill unless he himself felt certain that it was a fair and wise measure and would spread this taxation in a just and equitable manner throughout our Nation.

Having this deep personal regard for the members of that committee, I regret my inability to support this bill in its present form. I have many reasons which seem to justify my position for casting my vote against this bill. When we consider the sluggish, uncertain business conditions which prevail in almost every section of this country, these same conditions having been brought about largely by the lack of man power and a sufficient amount of help not being available in the past few years, not only in our large cities with their many large and various manufacturing industries; when you take into consideration our intention to add to this shortage of man power by raising an army of a million men, and added to that million men an immense amount of labor needed to provide for all of the necessities of that immense army, we need not wonder at our business men being at sea, particularly when the general impression that prevails throughout this Nation is an opinion that the Government is going to conscript and select all available and necessary labor for various enterprises that are needed for the carrying on of this war.

What I have said about the shortage of man power in our manufacturing industries is also true in regard to the agricultural districts; in fact, the farmer is in more trouble than the manufacturer. There is no doubt in my mind but what the farmer is anxious and ready to plant every available inch of ground on his farm, but he has many handicaps to contend with. He is confronted with a nation-wide shortage of seed, and owing to the unusual short and poor crops of last year many farmers find themselves without sufficient funds to purchase the few available seeds at the high price asked for this seed. Added to this is a question, in his mind, will he have sufficient help to harvest a large crop if he has the good fortune to sow a large tract of land.

Now, gentlemen, considering from a business viewpoint this feeling of depression and uncertainty which prevails throughout our land, I believe it unwise to attempt to raise this vast amount of revenue by taxation at this time. This war is not fought merely for present-day peace but for a peace which will extend for the years throughout to come. I am in favor of this generation paying for this war, and we can do so. I know that the various departments have asked for a revenue bill that will raise $2,200,000,000 to prepare this country for carrying on this war, but it is only proper and just to allow the people an opportunity to prepare to pay for it. Part of this vast sum can be and should be raised by bonds. I desire to give the individual an opportunity to familiarize himself with this new condition of affairs that has suddenly been thrust upon us. I want him to have an opportunity to readjust his former mode of living and his former way of thinking and spending. I want to give the business man an opportunity to complete some of his contracts entered upon under conditions of peace. I want him to pay his share of this burden, and I know he is ready to do so. Right now, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend and congratulate many of the big business men of my district for their patriotism, many of them having expressed a willingness; yes, even a desire to give the United States all of their profits during the period of this war, but they protest, and they are justified in protesting against the enactment of laws that will confiscate and bankrupt them, and I am certain if this bill in its present form becomes a law it will decrease instead of increasing revenues in many of its provisions.

There is no question in my mind that it will demoralize many manufacturing industries and be the means of bankrupting many of them, causing a loss of revenue from manufacturing plants who under a fair moderate tax would be able to pay an excess profits tax, and many of their officers and other workmen would pay an income tax. If this bill becomes a law, it will be the means of closing many manufactories and forcing many men out of employment. You will not only lose an immense amount of revenue but will inflict a hardship and an injustice upon the workingman in every phase of his life. This is also true of our farmers, who will be unable to find markets for their products if you destroy and demoralize business in general. I believe the section containing the retroactive tax is unconstitutional. I believe taxing the gross receipts of any industry not only unjust but in this case discriminating. Many of the articles you propose to tax are taxed four or five times before reaching the consumer. In fact, the passage of this bill will do more toward increasing the high cost of living with less chance of earning a living than any other one thing I know of.

After reading this bill, section after section, item by item, and after a long careful study of every individual item, I most heartily agree with your chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in his statement "that he will have to close his eyes in voting for certain sections of it," and also agree with him that the best excuse he can find for presenting this bill in its present form for our consideration is the excuse, "We need the money." I do not believe we need it bad enough at this time to sidetrack all fairness and justice. I do not believe it just to single out individual industries and impose and duplicate over and over again a tax that can not fail to destroy and ruin by virtue of its immense burden any industry so taxed. I can not imagine this Congress passing a law so truly un-American. I will not have to close my eyes in voting against it.

Message of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to All Christian People of the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JACOB E. MEEKER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 25, 1917.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I wish to insert herewith a part of a message of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to all the Christian people of the Nation. This message was drafted at a special session of the council held at Washington May 7. It should be read, pondered, and heeded by every man, woman, and child in our Nation. The message is as follows:

We enter the war without haste or passion, not for private or national gain, with no hatred or bitterness against those with whom we contend.

No man can foresee the issue of the struggle. It will call for all the strength and heroism of which the Nation is capable. What is the mission of the church in this hour of crisis and danger? It is to bring all that is done or planned in the Nation's name to the test of the mind of Christ.

That mind upon one point we do not all interpret alike. With sincere conviction some of us believe that it is forbidden the disciple of Christ to engage in war under any circumstances. Most of us believe that the love of all men which Christ enjoins demands that we defend with all the power given us the sacred rights of humanity. But we are all as one in loyalty to our country and in steadfast and wholehearted devotion to her service.

As members of the Church of Christ the hour lays upon us special duties.

To purge our own hearts clean of arrogance and unselfishness.

To steady and inspire the Nation.

To keep ever before the eyes of ourselves and of our allies the ends for which we fight.

To hold our own Nation true to its professed aims of justice, liberty, and brotherhood.

To testify to our fellow Christians in every land, most of all to those from whom for the time we are estranged, our consciousness of unbroken unity in Christ.

To unite in the fellowship of service multitudes who love their enemies and are ready to join with them in rebuilding the waste places as soon as peace shall come.

To be diligent in works of relief and mercy, not forgetting those ministries of the spirit, to which as Christians we are especially committed.

To keep alive the spirit of prayer, that in these times of strain and sorrow, men may be sustained by the consciousness of the presence and power of God.

To hearten those who go to the front, and to comfort their loved ones at home.

To care for the welfare of our young men in the Army and Navy, that they may be fortified in character and made strong to resist temptation.

To be vigilant against every attempt to arouse the spirit of vengeance and unjust suspicion toward those of foreign birth or sympathies.

To protect the rights of conscience against every attempt to invade them.

To maintain our Christian institutions and activities unimpaired, that the soul of our Nation may be nourished and renewed through the worship and service of Almighty God.

To guard the gains of education and of social progress and economic freedom, won at so great a cost, and to make full use of the occasion to set them still further forward, even by and through the war.

To keep the open mind and the forward look, that the lessons learned in war may not be forgotten when comes that just and sacred peace for which we pray.

Above all, to call men everywhere to new obedience to the will of our Father, God, who in Christ has given Himself in supreme self-sacrifice for the redemption of the world, and who invited us to share with Him His ministry of reconciliation.

To such service we would summon our fellow Christians of every name. In this spirit we would dedicate ourselves and all that we have to the Nation's cause. With this hope we would join hands with all men of good will of every land and race to rebuild on this war-ridden and desolated earth the commonwealth of mankind, and make of the kingdom of the world the kingdom of the Christ.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am submitting herewith a patriotic editorial taken from the Times-Democrat, a daily paper published at Muskogee, Okla., in my district, advocating that everyone should do something in this emergency in support of the Government and recognizing that a successful war can not be conducted without the payment of special taxes. The editorial is entitled "Pay your war tax and don't whine," and is as follows:

PAY YOUR WAR TAX AND DON'T WHINE.

The Times-Democrat does not like to hear opposition talk from this industry or that on proposed war taxes.

It may be a hardship on some industries, but what if it is?

This is war!

And war means sacrifice.

Your sacrifice may come in the form of a tax.

If so, pay it and don't whine. Certainly no man is unwilling to make some sacrifice. It may be true that some industries, some individuals, may have to pay more in proportion than others. But what if you do?

The man who gets killed on the firing line pays more than the man who does not get killed yet what would happen if there should be objection from one division of soldiers to going to a dangerous point because some other division was not ordered to an equally dangerous position?

Every man must be a soldier in this war, whether he is on the battle fields or manning an industry. This is no time to shirk or cavil.

President Wilson, Congress, and the Council of National Defense are doing what seems to be best to protect the citizens of this country. They may make some mistakes, but that is neither for you nor I to say when duty calls and the command is given. If we do not follow intelligently and willingly what must the inevitable result be? It is proposed that newspapers bear their share in the war by paying increased postage rates. There is no way to pass this tax along to the reader.

Whatever that tax is, the Times-Democrat is going to pay it, just as long as its revenues are enough to make the payment, and it's going to be the first money paid. And if this war situation should demand and the tax is doubled, still this newspaper proposes to pay without a word.

For this is war.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 25, 1917.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, this revenue bill, according to estimates, will raise $1,800,000,000, or about one-third of the estimated expenditures for Government purposes to June 30, 1918. Financial authorities in the House say the Nation's credit will be injured and bonds at present interest rates will become a drug on the market unless this proportion of our expenditures can be raised by direct tax. That is based on the past experience of our own and all other Governments. The tax is to carry on the war in which we are now engaged. The bill comes to us unanimously supported by every member of the committee, 23 in number, and I can not agree with those who say that they will vote against the only revenue bill because of some items or provisions it contains.

Men honestly disagreed on the resolution committing our country to enter the European war. A casualty list of over 40,000,000 men and a mortality loss of 7,000,000 through battle and sickness is only one chapter taken from the most frightful conflict of all history—a war in which at one time it seemed possible this country might eventually become the agency in bringing about an honorable and lasting peace for the world. We are now engaged in that war with every Government resource and every citizen pledged to its winning. Again, men honestly differed not as to the size of our Army but over the question of volunteers or conscription alone for an army of 1,000,000 men. Congress decided against the volunteer system in favor of conscription, and that is now the law. On the $7,000,000,000 appropriation for war purposes we unanimously agreed to expend that amount of money. With this record of legislation covering the war and armies and money pledged to the war, I can not understand how any man will vote against the only revenue bill before us with which to meet these obligations, imperfect though the bill may be.

I have voted for many specific and I believe worthy amendments which were defeated. However, it must be remembered that every owner of a shop, office, farm, or home must pay taxes on his property whether he be prosperous or not, and that thousands of fathers and mothers would give down to the last dollar if thereby a safe return could be secured for some member of their family called to the front, even though the service is voluntary. "All our resources" have been pledged by the President, and that means every man and every dollar. War means sacrifice, and when we say certain ones shall fight our battles we also say that every dollar, if need be, will be given to maintain our armies at the front. I wish this bill could be changed in some particulars, but it is the only revenue bill before us, has the unanimous support of the committee, and if the motion to recommit for needed amendments fails, I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the leave to print I attach hereto resolutions adopted by the public-defense organizations of my home county, wherein is set forth in patriotic terms the loyal support of that people to the successful prosecution of the war, and I am sure the resolutions speak the sentiments of all the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent:

Whereas the greater part of the civilized world is now engaged in the throes of war in which all of the devices of destruction which have been produced by modern inventive genius and scientific research are being employed; and

Whereas our Government and our people, rather than to resort to arms, have long and patiently suffered indignities, including the murder of our citizens, ruthlessly imposed upon us by the German autocratic and military government in its endeavor to extend its power over peoples enjoying representative government; and

Whereas said German Government and its allies, acting under its dominating influence, have, during almost three years, stubbornly refused to respect the appeals of neutrals to observe the laws of nations and have ruthlessly destroyed the property and lives of neutrals, including those of this Nation, and have carried on their barbarous acts to such an extent that we, as a self-respecting and liberty-loving people, could no longer endure the same, and by reason thereof our President and Congress have, in obedience to the conscience and will of our people, been obliged to declare that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany; and

Whereas the war into which we have been drawn evidently is to be a final test of whether or not the people of the various nations may set up and maintain for themselves governments of the people, for the people, and by the people, which governments shall derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, or whether they shall be obliged to submit to the dictates and commands of an autocratic and military government, at the head of which sits a monarch with an inherited crown and with inherited authority to drive his subjects into war for the purpose of extending his sceptral power over other realms; and

Whereas our President, by proclamation, has appealed to all our citizens to meet the ultimate tests of democracy, and to prove to the world that a government by the people is worthy to exist: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the citizens of St. Croix County in public assembly, That we respond to the President's appeal, as becomes free men, who love our institutions and hope for the happiness and general welfare of future generations; that we recognize the principle of universal responsibility and therefore assume our full share of the burdens to secure the future peace and tranquillity of the world;

Resolved further, That there be, and is hereby, organized the St. Croix Council of Defense, the aims and purposes of which are as follows:

To assist and cooperate with the Government of the United States and the government of the State of Wisconsin, and with all civil and military officers and agents thereof for the purpose of securing to the public the safety and aiding in the prosecution of the present war; to do all acts necessary and proper for the protection of life and property; to aid in securing the most efficient development and application of the agricultural, industrial, military, and civil resources of our country and each community thereof to the end that the same may strengthen the defense of the Nation and aid in the successful prosecution of the war; to develop among all of the people of the county and among the various lines of industry therein a spirit of mutual cooperation and helpfulness, so that all will contribute of their time and talents in aiding in any line of industry as far as such aid is needed; to foster and inspire patriotism and loyalty; to promote the maximum production of food products; to give aid and comfort to those dependent upon men of this country who are serving, or may hereafter be called to serve, in the military and naval forces of the State and Nation; and generally to do from time to time what shall be necessary to protect and promote the interests and welfare of our beloved country, the United States of America;

Resolved further, That the direction and management of the affairs and purposes of this council shall be vested in a general committee of 12 citizens of the county, who shall meet and organize at the earliest possible date and elect from their own members a president, vice president, and an executive committee of five, and also elect a secretary and treasurer, and such other officers as necessity may require. Said general committee shall also have power to appoint such subcommittees from citizens of the county as may be necessary for carrying on the work of this council, and the organization of each municipality in the county, and may prescribe the power and duties of such subcommittees.

Resolved further, That we urge our people to bear constantly in mind that our Nation, together with its allies, is now engaged in a war, the final issues of which shall determine whether might or right shall rule. Before the strife is ended we may be called upon to endure hardships and make sacrifices greater than we now realize, and possibly greater than any Nation has ever known before. Whatever of trial or sacrifice awaits us we must stand as a united people, upholding every branch of government and aiding each other in the discharge of every duty. We face the trials ahead of us with a firm resolve to do our full, patriotic duty, upholding our President and ready for any sacrifice.

We therefore call upon all people of this county, without regard to political affiliations or religious faith, to indorse the principles for which this council of defense is organized and to consider themselves as active members thereof, and to contribute of their time, talent, and substance in furtherance of its objects and purposes as may be requested of them from time to time by the executive committee.

Respectfully submitted.

An Indefensible Abuse.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM E. COX,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 25, 1917.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following editorial from the Muncie Evening Press:

AN INDEFENSIBLE ABUSE.

The flat second-class postal rate of 1 cent per pound, regardless of the cost of the service to the Government, both actual and comparative, is absolutely dishonest, and the newspapers which are objecting to the zone system of postal-rate revision or are attempting to perpetuate the flat second-class rate in any form are engaged in a course both unpatriotic and unjust.

The flat second-class postage rate—1 cent per pound, whether for local delivery, local delivery plus a rail haul, or local delivery plus a much longer rail haul, all of which must be paid for by the Government in proportion to the railway mileage, is a discriminatory rate which subsidizes the metropolitan paper and magazine against the local paper. It is a practice which, if engaged in by a common carrier, would be prosecuted by the Government as a criminal example of discrimination. The existence of such a discriminatory flat rate, and the effort in Congress to continue it either in whole or in part, is evidence of an undue influence over Congress and public opinion by the big papers and magazines, and of the use of that power for selfish purposes.

The second-class postage rate is 1 cent a pound. The local newspaper delivered through any office having rural or city delivery is charged 1 cent per pound for the distribution of the paper by the rural carriers of the office or by box or window delivery. City carriers are not permitted to distribute dailies in the city of origin at the second-class rate. For instance, they may distribute a Chicago or Indianapolis paper to Muncie addresses, mailed at Indianapolis at 1 cent per pound, but they may not distribute a Muncie paper, mailed at the Muncie office, at that rate.

A daily paper mailed at Chicago is hauled from the Chicago office to the railway station, hauled by rail nearly 200 miles from Chicago to Muncie, a service for which the Government must pay at a weight and mileage rate, hauled from the station in Muncie to the local post office and from the Muncie office distributed over the city or rural routes or put in local post-office boxes for the same price per pound charged a local paper delivered at the Muncie office for local distribution, with this discrimination against the local paper, that it is not permitted to mail a paper to any Muncie address at the second-class rate. This latter rule may be necessary to prevent papers from using the post office for local delivery, but if such delivery be denied the local paper at the second-class rate, it should be denied the outside paper. Yet the most radical step in the direction of a fair second-class postal rate is a proposal in House resolution 4280 that a 2-cent flat rate shall apply to all papers within the first and second zone. This would not end the abuse whereby Chicago and Indianapolis papers are subsidized out of the Government Treasury in competition with the local publications. It would only intensify the discrimination against the local papers.

Why should the Government utilize the postal rates in an effort to crush out the local papers as compared with the metropolitan papers and magazines, as it has been doing for years? Is it explained by the space given some of the statesmen who fight in the trenches for these abuses—and this includes most of those who are always posing in the limelight as the people's special friends at Washington and are always getting free reading notices in the magazines, the agricultural periodicals, and in the metropolitan press?

Not as a war measure but as a measure of common honesty the discriminating flat postage rate whereby the Government pours $80,000,000 per year into the coffers of great publishing interests in payment for personal and political press-agency work, thus enabling them to compete unfairly with the local newspapers of the country, should be terminated, and if it be not terminated the local papers should get together and retire the politicians who stand in the way. These great magazines and papers compete directly with the local papers. In national advertising they sell their circulation in the territory to which they get such easy access by the subsidy route in unfair competition with the local publisher. They put their publications out below white-paper cost to the detriment of local publishing interests. Thus Congress contributes to the centralization process in trade, industry, and even in public opinion, which is one of the most dangerous tendencies in American life. They help kill the local distributing centers, and coupled with an inequitable parcel-post rate established in the interests of the mail-order concerns they build up the already swollen financial and commercial influence of the big centers of population. And they do this by taking money out of the people's pockets and putting it in the pockets of the publishers who, in exchange for this graft, portray them as people's friends and humanity's apostles.

For Free Speech—Petition to Congress Opposing the Espionage Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 24, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a copy of the petition that has been sent me to-day, signed by nearly 5,000 citizens of the State of Ohio, opposing the espionage bill and in favor of free speech. I believe this expresses the sentiment of a large majority of the people of the United States:

FOR FREE SPEECH—PETITION TO CONGRESS OPPOSING THE ESPIONAGE BILL.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners earnestly and respectfully ask the Congress not to pass any censorship act that shall extend beyond the military and naval news of value to the enemy.

The whole country is engaged in the war and the whole country should be permitted to know the truth about the war.

It is always dangerous in a republic to withhold from the people full knowledge of their affairs or to deprive the press of the right freely to express public opinion.

The censorship provision of the espionage bill now pending in Congress is an assault upon the very foundation of our free institutions—freedom of thought and speech.

It is un American, because it tends to put in full effect for the first time in the life of this Republic regulations for the suppression of news and free public discussion, a suppression practiced only under monarchies and autocracies.

It is undemocratic, in that it violates the principle enunciated by Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, who declared that government without laws would be better than government without a free press.

It is unrepublican, in that it violates the principle of Abraham Lincoln, who said that it was better that public officials should be criticized unjustly than that they should not be criticized at all.

It is unpatriotic, in that it violates the spirit if not the letter of our Constitution, which provides that "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech or of the press."

We therefore urge that Congress shall take no step to withhold from the people that full information of the progress and conduct of the war which is necessary for their proper enlightenment or to deny to the people their fundamental American liberties of free speech, free publication, and a free expression of opinion.

Concealment of military plans and operations during their execution is always necessary; but concealment of the result of those operations, of failures or reverses or past mistakes, or of incompetence or dishonesty is inexcusable in a republic, where the people govern and must know the truth in order to govern wisely and well.

The Conscription of Men and of Wealth.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ROYAL C. JOHNSON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 26, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the war-revenue bill by inserting an article recently written by Otto H. Kahn, of New York, and published in the New York Times of May 21, 1917.

I do not desire to insert this article because I agree with Mr. Kahn's arguments or conclusions, but many of my constituents do agree with him, and I believe that as his particular revenue plan has not yet been presented to Congress, it should be brought to the attention of this body. The article is as follows:

THE CONSCRIPTION OF MEN AND OF WEALTH.

[By Otto H. Kahn.]

[This article was written before the recommendations of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives were reported.]

In a time of patriotic exaltation and of universal obligation and readiness to make great sacrifices to bring a most just and righteous war to a successful conclusion, the voice of sober argument and matter of fact considerations is apt to grate upon the ears of the people. That voice is all the less likely to be popular when the arguments it puts forth may easily lend themselves to the interpretation of being actuated by solicitous care for selfish interests.

The writer is fully aware that by publishing the following observations he is exposing himself to that interpretation and to criticism of and attack upon his motives; yet, seeing that certain measures now under consideration threaten to take shape in a way which, from his practical business experience and after mature deliberation, he is bound to regard as faulty and as, indeed, harmful to the country, he believes it to be right and proper to contribute his views to the public discussion of the subject for whatever they may be worth.

I can only hope, then, that in what I am going to say I shall be given credit for endeavoring to speak conscientiously and to the best of my knowledge and judgment from the point of view of the welfare of the entire country and not of the welfare merely of the well-to-do. I shall address myself to the practical aspect and to a few phases only of the question and shall not attempt to enter into the economic theories and the broader and deeper considerations involved.

I shall assume in my argument that what Congress is seeking to accomplish is to impose taxes soundly, effectively, and scientifically, with the desire to disturb the country's trade and commerce as little as possible and to avoid as much as may be the evils of financial dislocation. I shall assume that it is not the purpose and intent of Congress, under the guise of the necessities of the war situation, to embrace the doctrines of socialism. Our present economic system, our present method of wealth distribution may or may not stand in need of change; the fact remains that Congress has no mandate to effect a fundamental change. The consequence of such a change would be so immensely far-reaching that no Government has the right to sanction steps to bring it about until the subject has been fully discussed before the people in all its bearings and the people have pronounced judgment through a presidential or other election.

I will first state what in my opinion ought not to be done:

(1) I take it that not many words need be used to expose the fallacy of the argument, heard even in the halls of Congress: "If men are to be conscripted, wealth also must be conscripted."

Men will be conscripted to the extent that it is wise and just and needful. So, and no other, should wealth and the country's resources in general be conscripted.

And are not the children of the well-to-do conscripted equally with the children of the poor? Indeed, the proportion of the sons of the well-to-do on the actual fighting line is bound to be a predominating one, because vast numbers of wage workers in the industries and on the farms will necessarily have to be retained at their accustomed vocations in order to maintain the output of our factories and farms.

(2) There appears to prevail among not a few people the strange delusion that America's entrance into the war was fomented by moneyed men, in part, at least, from the motive and for the purpose of gain. Were there any such men no public condemnation of them could be too severe, no punishment would be adequate. I am absolutely certain that no such hideous and dastardly calculation found lodgment in the brain of any American, rich or poor.

Moreover, is it not perfectly manifest that any rich man in his senses must have known that his selfish interest was best promoted by the continuance of the conditions of the last three years in which America furnished funds and supplies to Europe at huge profits, while our entering the war was bound to diminish those profits very largely—indeed, to entirely eliminate some of them—to interfere with business activity in many lines and to compel the imposition of heavy taxes on wealth? It is to the credit of our rich men that, though fully realizing the extent of the monetary loss and sacrifices which war between this country and Germany must necessarily bring to them, there were but very few of them who supported the peace-at-any-price party or favored the avoidance of America entering into the war when it had become plain that our participation in that war could not be avoided with honor and with a due regard for our duty to our own country, or to the cause of right and liberty throughout the world.

Yet, somehow, the pacifists seem to have singled out the rich as mainly responsible for the war. It may be due, consciously or unconsciously, to a resulting feeling of resentment that the proposal to confiscate during the war all incomes beyond a certain figure is actively promoted by leading pacifists—a proposal based upon ignorance of, or disregard for, the laws of economics, teachings of history, and practical considerations. If any such scheme were to be adopted, the consequences to the country at large would be far more serious than to the victims of the proposed confiscation.

Capital would go into hiding. It might even take wing to other countries, for instance to the country at our very door, Canada, where there is no Federal income tax at all and hardly any State income tax. It would certainly cease flowing into constructive use and would instead confine itself largely to municipal, State, and Federal tax-exempt securities. Enterprise would be seriously hampered and in some respects brought to a standstill entirely. Many thousands of workmen would be thrown out of employment. Many businesses and shops would close.

There would ensue, as a natural consequence and without any conscious determination, a Nation-wide strike of constructive activity and enterprise in commerce and finance, because men will not look upon it as a "square deal" if they are to take all the risk and responsibility, all the hard work and ceaseless strain and care of business effort, while the Government would needlessly take from them an unduly large share of the fruit of their labor, let alone all of it except an arbitrarily fixed sum.

I say "needlessly" because were it really needed business men would willingly sacrifice their entire income for the country's cause. They would work for patriotism, without any recompense whatever, just as hard and harder than they do for gain or for ambition, if the occasion required it.

But of course everyone knows that nothing remotely approaching such drastic taxation is required in this country.

It is absolutely right to proclaim and to enforce by legislation that no man, as far as it is possible to prevent it, shall make money out of a war in which his country is engaged, but there is all the difference in the world between this just and moral doctrine and between the unjust and immoral doctrine that no man must be permitted to have more than an arbitrarily fixed income during a war.

If $100,000 or any fixed sum is the limit of what may be permissible income during war time, why not by and by a lesser sum? If the principle is once admitted, where will its application stop, even in time of peace? Why is not the proposed plan, or anything in the nature of that plan, simply license for the unsuccessful to despoil the successful? History shows more than one instance of where this road inevitably leads when once entered upon.

And who are our successful men? The vast majority of them are self-made men who started at the bottom of the ladder. It is trite to say that inequality of endowment, and therefore inequality of results in human beings, as well as in inanimate things, is a law of nature. The capacity for creating, organizing, leading, etc., in short, the possession of those qualities of brain and disposition which beget success, is rare. It is in the interest of the community, while carefully guarding and fostering the rights, the opportunities, and the well-being of all of its members, to give liberal incentives to men possessing those gifts to put them to active and intensive use. It is hardly open to doubt that, generally speaking, the work of able men, engaged in serious and legitimate business (I am not speaking of gamblers and parasites), while naturally benefiting them, benefits the community a great deal more.

The income of hospitals, institutions of learning and of art, and many other altruistic enterprises depends largely upon the voluntary taxation, aggregating a great many millions annually, to which those men in America who have attained financial success have always willingly submitted themselves—more so, probably, than in any other country. Who is to take care of all of those institutions if extreme taxation compels the rich to cease their contributions?

(3) The arguments above set forth apply equally to the proposal of levying an income tax rising to an excessively high level, as, for instance, the suggested tax of 50 per cent on incomes over $500,000. There, again, the test should be whether so radical a tax is wise and required by the necessities of the country.

The nations in Europe have been fighting for nearly three years and have been under an infinitely greater financial strain than our country is or will be, yet none of these nations has resorted to extreme taxation of income. Even in Great Britain, whose financial burden is the heaviest of all, whose debt is many times the total of ours and who has loaned about $5,000,000,000 to her allies, the income tax on maximum incomes is to-day no more than approximately 40 per cent. In the last budget, introduced a couple of weeks ago, the British chancellor of the exchequer declined to consider an increase in the income-tax rate, because of the damaging effect which such increase would have on the country's business.

In France and Germany the burden laid on incomes is much lower than in England. In Canada, where war loans have been raised equivalent on the basis of comparative population to what would be more than $10,000,000,000 for America, no Federal income tax exists at all.

I doubt whether this latter fact is generally known in this country and whether its significance is receiving the measure of serious consideration which it deserves. I understand that it is the deliberate policy of the Dominion Government not to impose an income tax, in order to attract capital to Canada. There can be little question that if our income taxation is fixed at unduly and unnecessarily high rates, while Canada has no or only a very moderate income tax, men of enterprise will seek that country and there will be a large outflow to it of capital—a development which can not be without effect upon our own prosperity, resources, and economic power.

The financial dislocation, the discouragement, and the apprehension caused by unduly heavy taxation of incomes will not only act as a drag on enterprise and constructive activity, but it will make it exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, for corporations to sell securities and thus to obtain funds to conduct their business—especially also as investors will be fearful that high rates of taxation once established will not easily be reduced to normal levels, even when the present emergency is passed.

Extravagance, log-rolling, the unwise and inefficient expenditure of money by governmental bodies are among the besetting sins of democracy; the formula once found, the machinery once employed for the raising of huge revenues, are apt to make the way of wasteful governmental spending all too temptingly easy. It must not be forgotten that taxation must necessarily by that much diminish the surplus income fund of the individual and that both theoretically and actually the spending of money by the Government can not and does not have the same effect upon the country's prosperity and enterprise as productive use of his surplus funds by the individual.

The sentimental, and thereby the actual, effect of extreme taxation will not be confined to the relatively small number of people in possession of very large incomes. The disturbance and fear caused by the contemplation of an excessively high ratio of taxation, even when applied to a relatively few, is bound to spread to those also of more moderate incomes. Capital is proverbially timid. It will not take risks, except in the expectation of commensurate reward, and if it sees the danger of its reward being unduly infringed upon by taxation, it will anticipate that menace by withdrawing from the field of constructive investment to the greatest extent possible and find means to avoid the extreme rigor of taxation.

So much is this the case that I incline to the belief that a maximum taxation of, say, 33⅓ per cent would produce as great a revenue as a maximum taxation of 50 per cent, if not a greater one.

The flood of securities which would be coming for sale in order to escape extreme income taxation would create a grave condition of demoralization in the investment markets of the country, with the resulting inevitable effect upon the country's general business.

(4) The tax recently enacted by Congress imposing a burden of 8 per cent on business profits over and above 8 per cent on the capital employed, regardless of whether such profits have any relation to war conditions or not, is unscientific and unsound (Incidentally it is a strange provision of that law that it applies only to copartnerships and corporations, while an individual engaged in business, however profitable, is not taxed.) The law should be repealed, or rather modified, instead of the rate being augmented as is proposed.

It is unquestionably right and in accordance with both good morals and good economics to prevent, as far as possible, the enrichment of business and business men through the calamity of war. But the recently enacted and now contemplated so-called excess profits tax does not accomplish that. It taxes not merely the exceptional profit, i. e., the war profit. It lays a burden not on business due to war, but on all business. It does this at a time when it is more than ever necessary that energy, enterprise, efficiency, the commercial and financial brain and work power of the Nation be stimulated to their utmost in order to make good, so far as possible, the waste and destruction which goes with war. Any scheme of taxation which imposes an unnecessary burden upon commercial enterprise and thereby handicaps the Nation in its business activities—especially in world competition with other nations—is unsound and bound to be gravely detrimental, both to the business man and still more to the wageworker; in fact, to every element of the population.

It is worth noting that England, the conduct of whose finances, based upon the experience of many generations as the leading financial power, has always been a model for other nations to follow, has imposed an excess profits tax on business during the war merely to the extent that such profits are attributable to the war, i. e., to the extent that they exceed the profits of normal years.

In principle, direct taxation of business activities should be avoided as much as possible. Apart from a war-profit excess tax, business profits should be taxed in the main not through an impost on business itself, but through the income tax on the individual beneficiaries. Care should be taken lest the wealthy man least entitled to preferential consideration, i. e., he who neither works nor takes business risks or business responsibilities, be favored as against the man who puts his brains, his capacities, and his money to constructive use in active business.

(5) It seems to me so manifest as to hardly require argument that a retroactive income tax, such as has been suggested, is wrong both in morals and in economics.

If the foregoing reasoning is correct, these conclusions would seem to follow:

1. There ought to be a substantial and progressive increase in the rate of income taxation during the war, together with a lowering of the existing limit of income-tax exemption. I believe that in practice the best result would be obtained if the maximum rate of taxation were not to exceed, say, 33⅓ per cent, certainly for the first year of the war. A higher rate would not, in my opinion, yield a higher aggregate of revenue to the Government, while at the same time, if only for sentimental reasons, and even though only applied to very large incomes, it would be apt to cause financial dislocation and retard business activity and enterprise.

It would seem advisable that such portion of a person's income as is devoted to charitable purposes should be, if not entirely free from income tax, at least subject to a reduced tax only, so as to counteract the tendency which experience has shown to follow in the wake of heavy taxation, of greatly diminishing charitable contributions.

2. There ought to be an excess profit tax, which might well be at a higher rate than the present 8 per cent, or even the proposed 16 per cent, but it should only be applicable to the extent that business profits exceed the profits of, say, a five-year average period before the war, and thus may justly be held to be attributable to war conditions. An offset which might be fixed at, say, 10 per cent per annum ought to be allowed on all new capital invested in business since the beginning of the war.

3. There are very numerous forms of taxes—stamp taxes, etc., such as, for instance, a 2-cent tax on checks—which, while they would mainly fall on the well to do, would be in no way burdensome and would produce a very large aggregate of revenue. What seems to me in principle a very sensible tax has been suggested, namely, a tax on sales (i. e., each single sale) of all kinds of merchandise, excepting foodstuffs and probably raw material, of 1 cent for each dollar or greater part thereof, exempting sales of less than, say, $5. This tax, which should be paid by the purchaser, would produce a very large revenue. It would be more widely distributed than almost any other form of taxation and would be felt but very little. It would be easily and cheaply collected and would begin to accrue much sooner than most other taxes.

4. I am not convinced that the total amount which needs to be spent or which, as a matter of fact, can be spent in the course of the year requires so huge a sum to be raised by taxation as our legislators appear to contemplate. The policy of raising a large portion of war expenditures by taxation is wise and sound. But to be iconoclastic in applying that policy, to make that portion so large as to chill the spirit and lame the enterprise of the country, is neither good politics nor good economics. The present has its rights as well as the future. Sacrifices should be reasonably averaged.

5. In determining upon the scheme and detail of taxation it should be borne in mind that the intent of taxation is not punitive; neither is it to apply practical socialism under the guise of war finance. Congress might well ponder the advice recently cabled here by one of the leading financial writers in England: "You should go slow in your tax plans. Too violent a financial dislocation would be caused unless taxation is most judiciously and scientifically apportioned." The desire to place the financial burden incident to war preponderantly upon the wealthy is just and right, but even in doing things from entirely praiseworthy motives it is well to remember the old French saying that virtue is apt to be more dangerous than vice, because it is not subject to the restraint of conscience.

The Working of Income Taxation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDMUND PLATT,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 25, 1917.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I find since the passage of the revenue bill that many people do not understand the way income taxes work out—they seem to be confused by the fact that the payment for taxation on the income of the current year is paid next year. They seem to think of an income as a fixed amount, susceptible of a fairly stable assessment, like real estate, and taxable each year at a fixed rate. But an income is a fluctuating amount, and under our law it includes, for individuals, profits on sales of land, on speculation of any kind, or from business. A man's income one year may be twice what it was the year before, dependent upon his activities or his success in those activities. In determining net income, of course, all taxes paid are deducted. Certainly the Government could not fairly tax as net income a sum it had already subtracted from that income. So if you tax an income of $100,000 50 per cent, taking half of it, there is only $50,000 left, and the next payment will be on $50,000, and, because of the graduation of rates, at a lower rate, let us say, at 30 per cent. Now, 30 per cent of $50,000 is $15,000, a big and dangerous decrease of revenue. The third year, supposing returns from business or investments to remain constant, the $15,000 of tax subtracted from $100,000 will leave $85,000 for taxation, and the revenues will be partly restored, but this is a very unscientific and unsatisfactory way to raise revenue, shifting up and down without any relation to actual needs, to say nothing of the certainty that the high initial rate would discourage effort, cut off reinvestment, and lower returns. The scientific way is to start with rates not above 25 per cent, raise them the next year to about 33⅓ per cent, at which you will obtain a fairly constant flow of revenue and without discouraging effort—$25,000 from $100,000 leaves $75,000, and 33⅓ per cent of that is again $25,000, which subtracted from $100,000 leaves again $75,000. If effort has been stimulated instead of being retarded, an increase to 40 per cent might be justified the third year, but that would be about the limit of safety as spread over a whole income, though perhaps not quite the limit of the highest surtax.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, on April 6, immediately upon the convening of the present session of Congress and upon the passage of the resolution declaring that a state of war existed with Germany, recognizing that a very large amount of revenue in addition to that heretofore collected would be necessary to pay the expenses of this war, ex-Gov. Haskell, of Oklahoma, wrote a letter submitting his views as to how the additional revenue should be raised, a copy of which I am herewith submitting for the consideration of Congress and the country. It is as follows:

APRIL 6, 1917.

Mr. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The recent address of the President to Congress was such as to win the enthusiastic support of many who had heretofore been passive only. I was especially pleased at the distinction drawn between the mass of the German people on the one hand and the governing element of the German Empire on the other, and I congratulate our country on the patriotic, democratic sentiment of our President.

The conditions require enlarging the revenues of the Government, and I merely express a thought to you, although I presume that it has or at least will receive consideration by those in authority; but our Government must have a much larger revenue, and I submit that a percentage levy on the gross earnings of all the interstate transportation and transmission companies—as large as Government necessities may require; no matter how large—is worthy of consideration as being the means to this important end from every standpoint.

First. It would be equitable, as your income would be derived from the commerce of the country, and the items of commerce the most prosperous would be the items paying the greater share of the revenue, and no item of transportation or transmission could possibly avoid its proportionate share of every other similar item. There would be no tax dodgers. When the corporation or individual buys his railroad ticket, pays his freight bill, or express bill, or his sleeping-car fare, or for his telegram or long-distance telephone communication he would pay his revenue to the Government. Such a tax would be absolutely equal in proportion and would fall heaviest, of course on the most active items of commerce stimulated by abnormal prosperity and profits.

Second. It would be automatic in that it would collect itself, free from the necessity of the Government creating and maintaining a vast force of skilled accountants and collectors not only to make the collections from those who honestly report their obligations to the Government but to search for those who evade payment. The Government would be at practically no expense at all, as all this class of reports are already made at short intervals to some Government department or commission for other governmental purposes. It would simply require, based on an act of Congress making the levy, that when this periodical report is made by such transportation or transmission company that such report be accompanied with a check covering the established per cent due to the Government, and thus find its way into the United States Treasury with no expense except the slight addition in the Treasury Department resulting from bookkeeping. Of course, this would necessitate an increase to be authorized by the proper governmental authorities in the rates to be charged the public for such transportation and transmission service, but something of that kind is doubtless contemplated already in order to give these companies an equitable income to meet the demands of increased cost of service, higher wages, etc. Therefore when these boards have figured the increase in charges that these companies are entitled to have for their own treasury, add 20 per cent, or whatever other sum the Government needs for its revenue, and this percentage of these gross earnings will be a governmental revenue, to be paid over to the Government by each of these companies with their periodical earnings report. Thus, assuming that in the beginning each large acquisition of money will be through the medium of a temporary or long-time Government bond issue, you immediately begin raising the current interest fund for such bonds and the amortization fund for all such bonds or notes.

Third. While these companies will do the collecting of this Government fund, you have not burdened them with a single cent of additional expense. It will cost them no more to sell a sleeping-bar berth for $2.50 than it does to sell it for $2, or to sell a telegram privilege for 60 cents than it does to sell it for 50 cents, or to write a waybill for a ton of freight at $2 than it does now to write it at the rate of $1.50 per ton The Government gets these monthly reports in some of its departments of the gross earnings of such corporations just the same as it does now for other purposes. It will simply mean, in addition to getting these monthly reports, getting a check from the corporation for the proper percentage of the gross earnings so shown. Thus, nobody has been able to dodge taxes and there is practically not one cent of expense to the Government in making the collection. Again, you will not wait months, or possibly one year, before the income begins to be realized, but if such a law is passed in April the June report and each succeeding month's will bring in such an amount as the Government has called for.

Fourth. The law should provide that the President may suspend its operations at such time in the future as in his judgment it is no longer required, or may decrease the percentage, and of course at that time the boards and commissions having charge of rate making would see to it that the rates for this transmission and transportation service were proportionately decreased.

Mr. Tumulty, in the vast demands upon your time, none of us have a right to expect to divert your attention even to the point of what some might expect as courteous; therefore give this as much or as little thought as you think it is worth. If there is a grain of good sense in it, in your judgment, get it to headquarters. If you don't so find it throw it into the waste basket and forget the whole business; but the merit of it is an absolute equality on the commerce of the whole country according to the prosperity enjoyed by the different classes of people.

Its immediate results, its automatic self-collecting character, and, again, from the very nature of it, nobody objects to, because it is not a direct payment and accompanied by an inquisitorial process which is really the cause of more criticism than the amount of money the individual would actually pay, and it relieves the objection so many people have to buying and licking revenue stamps and putting them on all sorts of contracts, papers, etc.

Sincerely, yours,

C. N. HASKELL.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM L. IGOE,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 26, 1917.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert in the RECORD, under the permission granted, an editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of May 9, 1917, containing a portion of an address by the Rev. John A. McClorey, S. J., of St. Louis University. The editorial is as follows:

TO THE WOMEN OF ST. LOUIS.

In a talk to Catholic mothers at the Convent of the Little Helpers, Father John A. McClorey, S. J., of St. Louis University, made a stirring appeal to mothers to prove their devotion to their country by sending their sons to war. The address touches the heart of loyalty; it thrills the pulses of patriotism; it presents vividly that glorious vision of loving sacrifice which every American should be eager to make for the country. Moreover, it is an example of moving eloquence, elevated in thought, apt and forceful in expression. In order that it might have wider distribution, Father McClorey, by request, has sent that part of his address relating to the duty and privilege of American mothers to the Post-Dispatch for publication.

"DULCE ET DECORUM EST PRO PATRIA MORI.

"Now is the hour of testing. A crisis is at hand in your lives. Peace has gone. War is here. Your souls must change with this change; for better or for worse. Middling virtue which can get by unchallenged in time of peace can not survive in time of war. It must either expand into heroism or sink into baseness. The alternative presents itself to many of you now. It is an inspiring alternative, fraught with the grand possibility of patriotic self-sacrifice. It is a fear-compelling alternative, carrying with it the other possibility of failure to rise to the occasion. You have the choice. Will you be worthy of the women of the Revolution and Civil War, who gave their sons, husbands, brothers, and lovers, weeping yet smiling through their tears, broken-hearted yet grand-hearted, grieving to lose a man, yet proud of gaining a soldier?

"The women of Europe are gazing at you. Will you measure up to their heroic proportions? Their patriotic sufferings have been a splendor to your eyes. Will you radiate back to them a like splendor? The answer to this question rests with you.

"It has become a truism that the blood of martyrs must moisten the roots of Faith before fruit can glow upon the tree of Religion. Is not the same true of the blood of soldiers, of the roots of a nation and the fruit of a genuine national greatness? The blood at the root gives the glow to the fruit. Suffering and greatness have seldom, if ever, been mutually dissevered either in the individual or the State.

"For instance, will not our imperfect sense of nationality be made perfect by the trials of this war? Will not doubtful loyalty be made to blush, repent, and transform itself radiantly?

"In religion, martyrdom is not a slaughter but a triumph. In the State, patriotism unto the shedding of blood is not a calamity but an apotheosis. The mother of the seven Machabee martyrs urged them to encounter death for their palms. Will any of our mothers hold back their sons from glory?

"Let tenderness yield to magnanimity. You are a mother. But so is Columbia, and she has rights to the son as well as you. She has been in labor with us all that we might see the light of liberty; and what pangs! Do we owe her no return? We have been living on the fat of her land; some of us proscribed from our own land beyond the sea. Shall we have received without being willing to give?

"Besides, a dead backer of his country is a greater comfort to his mother than a live slacker. The one is a glorious memory for her, the other an inglorious reality.

"And what is there in the average life of a man, with its 'to-morrow and to-morrow and to-morrow creeping in its petty pace from day to day, often full of sound and fury signifying nothing'—what is there that should make a mother prefer it for her son to the splendor of a youthful military death for country? On the one hand she sees only a career of labor, amusement, trouble, grief, perhaps wrongdoing, ending in decrepit old age; on the other hand an heroic oblation upon which 'the gods themselves throw incense.'

"Were this a war of conquest, you well might hesitate; but it is a war of honor and self-defense. We have a right to course the seas. To maintain that right we ought to be willing to die. A barrier has been raised to obstruct us We shall break through it, or at least be broken in the attempt. Our honor requires this much of us. Our fellow countrymen have been sunk; they cry to us for reparation from the deep. More of them will run the same risk; they ask Columbia to clear a path. And are we so secure at home from foreign aggression? Germany is by no means a conquered nation. We may soon become one at her hands, if we sleep on. She has held England, France, and Russia for nearly three years. Let us not exaggerate the importance of the late allied successes. And the submarine! And the possible defection of Russia; at least her disorganized condition! And Germany's united persistency! We must take the initiative now or probably rue our negligence later. If England had waked up in time, prospects would be better. Let us learn from her that safety lies in immediate action.

"We are paying a debt of gratitude to France, the land of Lafayette. We are fighting to restore heroic Belgium and Poland. We may hope that Ireland will profit by our arms. In a word, the lessening of human suffering, the restoration and conservation of smaller States, the course of popular governments, our own rights, honor, and safety are the motives of our entrance into the war. For this we have the solemn statement of our President. His word lends weight to the personal views of the case which we may have entertained. He has issued the call to arms. His authority is from God. We are safe in obeying. We are in the wrong if we do not. The President is weighted with a terrific responsibility; let us lessen its pressure by our loyalty. He prefers loyalty even to success. Your church urges you, your archbishops encourage you, your own sense of honor urges you.

"Do not say, 'War is terrible.' Lost honor is worse. Do not say, 'How can we fight if we can not eat?' For the President has promised to whip food robbers into line. These ghouls who follow in the wake of war to plunder the brave will feel the iron hand of government. Therefore give your sons. Nineteen hundred years ago One died for you. When He marched to the battle field of Calvary, His mother, though broken hearted, did not say, 'Stay with me.' Your son goes to-day, probably to die for his country. Can you summon enough courage to say, 'Go'?"

Training Camp for Colored Officers.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MURRAY HULBERT,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 26, 1917.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following correspondence in regard to training camps for colored officers:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 8, 1917.

Hon. NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: My understanding is that—

(a) Fourteen training camps are to be opened on May 14, to provide officers for the Army to be organized under the selective-draft bill now pending in conference.

(b) No officers are to be commissioned unless they receive training in one of these 14 camps.

(c) The War Department has stated that it is impracticable to admit negroes to the 14 established camps.

Representing a constituency nearly one-third of whose population are members of the Negro race, to whom the right of franchise is not denied, may I inquire:

(1) Whether the negro is expected to furnish his proportionate quota in this Army?

(2) Whether recognition will not be given to the principle that competent and intelligent negroes should have the opportunity to lead troops of their own race?

One thousand negro college students and graduates have already pledged themselves to enter such a training camp immediately.

In addition, men in the medical profession desire to qualify for service in the Medical Corps, and there are other competent men ready to qualify for other specialized corps provided for.

When your attention was called to H. R. 17183, introduced in the last Congress, to prevent the enlistment of negroes in the military service of the United States, you expressed yourself with respect thereto in part as follows:

"Any such bill would receive the disapproval and adverse recommendation of this department.

"Those who are familiar with the history of our country, from the armies organized by George Washington in the American Revolution down to the present day, know that brave and often conspicuously gallant service has been rendered by the colored troops. In the most recent instance, at Carrizal, in Mexico, these colored troops conducted themselves with the greatest intrepidity and reflected nothing but honor upon the uniform they wore."

I submit that the records of negro officers and troops warrant the provision for negro officers to lead negro troops, and beg to inquire whether some provision can not be made for their reception at one of the 14 training camps already provided for, or, if that be impracticable, if you will not by order establish an additional training camp for colored citizens who desire to obtain commissions in the Officers' Reserve Corps?

Very truly, yours,

MURRAY HULBERT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, May 15, 1917.

Hon. MURRAY HULBERT,
House of Representatives:

The question of the organization of training camps for negro candidates for the Officers' Reserve Corps is now under consideration.

The number and location of these camps will be announced as soon as decision is reached.

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

(Memorandum.)

The following letter to the Chief of Staff Departments of the Army gives a brief outline of the provisions made for training camps for colored citizens:

"1. You are advised that training camps for colored citizens will be established at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, under section 54, national-defense act, and the regulations prescribed for present training camps, except as modified herein and hereafter. The camp is under the control of the department commander, Central Department, who will prepare and conduct the same. The total attendance will be 1,250, of whom 250 will be noncommissioned officers of colored regiments of the Regular Army, to be sent on detached-service status, and 1,000 citizens, either enlisted under section 54, national-defense act, for three months beginning June 18, with agreement to accept appointment tendered, or members of National Guard, whose status will be as in the case of National Guardsmen now in training camps.

"2. The contingents of citizens and National Guardsmen from the various departments is as follows: Northeastern Department, 40; Eastern Department, 240; Southeastern Department, 430; Central Department, 195; Southern Department, 75 plus contingent from Twenty-fourth Infantry, 84, and Tenth Cavalry, 57; Western Department, 20.

"3. As far as consistent with the character of applicants, it is desired that men selected shall be not less than 30 years of age. Local distribution as between various States and cities and between citizens and National Guardsmen is left to the discretion of department commanders. From all applicants department commanders will select their contingent so that definite notice to proceed to the training camps may be given the selected men not later than June 9. The training camps will be ready to receive the noncommissioned officers of the Regular Army June 5, and all others June 15. The course of instruction begins June 18."

In addition to the contingents mentioned above 84 men will be sent from the Twenty-fifth Infantry in Hawaii and 25 men from the Ninth Cavalry in the Philippines.

Applications should be addressed to the commanding generals of departments as follows: Northeastern Department, Boston, Mass.; Eastern Department, Governors Island, N. Y.; Southeastern Department, Charleston, S. C.; Southern Department, Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; Central Department, Chicago, Ill.; Western Department, San Francisco, Cal.

The contingent from each department will be as follows: Northeastern, 40; Eastern, 240; Southeastern, 430; Central, 195; Southern, 75; Western, 20. The remaining 250 will be noncommissioned officers from regiments as indicated above.

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

MAY 23, 1917.

War-Revenue Measure.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. S. D. FESS,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 26, 1917.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, this measure clearly reveals the crisis before us as viewed by the committee. It contains features condemned by everybody, defended by nobody, but demanded, we are told, by the exigencies of a war that must be ended in the shortest possible time, with the least possible loss of life and treasure.

The proponents of this measure remind us that we have conscripted the young men, the flower of the present generation, and we must not hesitate to place the necessary burden upon the business of the country.

This statement has much force. There is not a Member in the House who will withhold his indorsement of that principle. But effectiveness at the front must depend largely upon the effectiveness at home. The danger confronting us is that in our attempt to provide the revenue we may dry up our resources by laws that will prevent raising money. We must guard against that sort of law that so greatly penalizes wealth that it ceases to produce. John Marshall made a famous statement when he said, "The power to tax is the power to destroy." While that has become a truism, we do not seem here to regard it with much force.

In this bill we propose to place a 5 per cent tax on gross sales of a long list of articles. This proposal is based on the proposition that the business is not only profitable but can afford a 5 per cent tax.

The most patent fact in this proposal is that only the large business can survive it, which probably would make up 10 per cent of the business if all businesses are considered, while the 90 per cent which are small businesses may be absorbed by the few large concerns. This possibility of itself is dangerous. This tendency to concentrate into the hands of a few the business of any particular line is to be avoided if possible.

A tax too high will not only destroy business but will defeat revenue as well. That danger lurks in this proposed measure. No gross-sales tax should be levied without allowing at least an exemption of a small profit before the tax is to be applied.

This bill has one very dangerous feature in it, not defensible on any principle of taxation. I refer to the retroactive feature in which is added one-third of the income tax of last year. The unscientific character of the measure is revealed by the committee's explanation of the adoption of this un-American principle. We were told that when the bill was finished it was found that the estimates fell short $110.000,000 required by the Treasury Department. Not knowing what else to do, the committee decided to go back to last year and lay an additional tax of one-third or 33⅓ per cent of last year's income.

It is not the amount of this burden that I object to, but it is the vitally dangerous precedent proposed. If we can go back one year, why not two, or five? So far as the principle is concerned, retroaction is not limited to a 12-month period. If we can go back to apply it to incomes, why not to all other sources or forms of taxation?

Mr. Speaker, this step is so dangerous that I am sure it will go out of the bill; if not by vote of this body, it will at the other end of the Capitol. The frightful possible consequences under the strain of war are seen in this sort of proposals. We attempt to justify acts wholly unjustifiable, and offer a defense for our defenseless positions in the cry of war.

Another most dangerous item of this bill, vital to our national thought, is the proposal to sectionalize our reading matter by the proposed zone system.

I agree with the committee that magazines should be required to pay more postage to cover an equitable charge for the vast advertising matter that goes through the mails. No one will hesitate to make that change if proposed upon an equitable and practical basis.

If we could separate the reading from the advertising matter so that we could pro rate the cost and compel profitable advertising to pay its share of transportation, I should gladly support it. But I am seriously opposed to applying the zone basis to our reading matter. It is our present system to which we owe our great national periodicals, which while edited in one place circulate throughout the entire Union. The greatest single value of this feature is the nationalization of our people. It is the sure proof against a dangerous provincialism inevitable if we adopt a zone system which makes a piece of mail matter cost eight times in one section what it costs in another. The simple result will be a restrictive circulation and a hurtful loss of a great nationalizing force among our people.

Upon the present basis our publishing houses have made their contracts, some of them extending two or three years ahead. Here we now propose by the vote of this House to ignore all contractual rights and wipe out of existence hundreds of publishing houses, built up under the laws now existing, without the slightest regard for obligations authorized.

The very threat of this legislation has already forced many receiverships. I just received the following letter from a distinguished judge of my own district which explains itself. Continuing, the judge said:

This afternoon I appointed a receiver of a heretofore prosperous publishing house, who base their petition for a receiver largely upon the threatened increase of the postal rates, which will practically exhaust any profits they have heretofore made. Publishers have been greatly burdened by the increase in the cost of white paper until the burden has almost reached the breaking point with many meritorious publications, and if Congress, in addition to those, imposed a greatly increased postal rate it will mean the ruin of many publications that have heretofore been able to bear the burden of the increased cost of the raw materials. Magazines are dependent upon their advertising for their support, the comparatively small income that is derived from circulation being insignificant in comparison to the income from advertisements, and if the burden of the circulation is increased the narrow margins of profits in many publications will be entirely wiped out. The big magazines no doubt can bear this burden, but those having a comparatively small subscription price can not bear it. A great many people seem to think that because second-class mail matter does not pay for itself and the expense of it is carried by the surplus derived from first-class mail matter that if the rate for the first-class mail is increased that for second-class should be increased also, but the burden of first-class mail matter is more widely distributed and will be of less consequence than that borne by the publications. This city has many publications that will suffer immeasurably from a burdensome increase in this postal rate. Trusting that you will realize the seriousness of this matter and be able to check it in a measure, I am,

Yours, very truly,

FRANK W. GEIGER.

Scores of letters have come to my desk from men who are willing to share the burdens of the war.

One of the largest publishing houses of the country is located at Springfield, in my own district, a city of 60,000 people, one-tenth of whom are in one way of another connected with the firm. I have been urged to place before the Congress the effects of this proposed legislation on this firm alone. I am told that it is simply impossible to meet the requirements of this proposed legislation. This firm offers the Government for the period of the war its entire profits. I know the people of this firm, and when they say to me that they would be willing to give the Government their profits entire, but pray that the business be not destroyed, I know it is the spirit of patriotism, such as will compel a father and mother to give their sons.

It is no answer to ridicule this offer by saying, "Oh, yes; they offer their profits, but we offer our sons," because many business people also offer their sons in addition to their profit.

Their ability to support the Government will not be increased by a destruction of property. Every sane man knows it will be destroyed so far as revenue is concerned if legislation creating an additional expenditure of over three-fourths of a billion dollars a year is enacted. Such legislation will defeat its proposed ends.

While we propose to exempt certain classes of publications not run for profit, we do include hundreds of periodicals privately edited, and some of them privately owned but rendering most valuable service. I have a letter from one of the country's best editors in the educational field, in which he says:

I hesitate to trouble you in these days when we are all worn out with troubles of so many kinds. Permit me to say, however, that I do hope you can do something to have the proposed increase in postal rates so modified as to omit educational journals. I need not say to you that with the price of paper as it is at present, and with the increased cost of everything that enters into the make-up of an educational journal, practically all the profits have been used up. A number of educational journals have been compelled to stop publication. I am going to do everything in my power to continue the publication of this journal, whatever happens It is on its sixty-sixth year, and has never missed a monthly issue since it began. It does seem to me that something ought to be done to make some distinction between small educational papers and the big magazines which carry millions of dollars' worth of advertising. If second-class rates has to be increased, can not something be done to relieve the situation with educational journals, whose revenues are limited even under the best conditions? I am sure that you will do all you can to help in this.

I have another letter from the managing editor of one of the greatest religious publications in the country, but, unhappily, not included by the wording of this bill in the exempted classes. The editor, who happens to be a personal friend of mine, and who would not write me unless he felt it a serious matter, continues as follows:

I feel it necessary to trouble you with a communication in regard to the proposed increase of postage on periodicals. Our own paper would be wiped out of existence by it. The Christian Endeavor World is the international organ of Christian Endeavor societies, having a constituency in this country of nearly 3,000,000. It is not run for profit, and during the past 10 years we have been barely able to pay our expenses, never having a surplus, and usually having a very large deficit. The increased cost of paper means to us an additional expense of $25,000 a year, to meet which we have increased the price of the paper all it will stand, and perhaps more than it will stand. On top of this comes the proposal of an increase in postage that will, we fear, make it necessary for our paper to cease publication.

The proposed advance in postal rates for periodicals, coming at this juncture, will certainly defeat its own ends, destroying in many cases the source of postal revenues, so that the great loss to general intelligence and to the promotion of religious and philanthropic causes will be brought about without any profit to the Government at all.

Very respectfully,

AMOS R. WELLS.

To destroy this character of publication is little short of wicked.

I have urged the committee to accept an amendment which would exempt this character of journal. I offered such an amendment, but it was modified in such a way I fear it will not exempt such valuable publications.

Mr. Speaker, I can not believe that the country will indorse such proposed legislation, notwithstanding the arguments of the committee. I would prefer to place the burdens upon the excess profits basis. England took two or three years preceding the war to average the profits of business. Then on that average as a basis she levied at first 50 per cent of the excess profits above the average. In 1916 she raised it to 60 per cent. This year she raised it to 80 per cent.

This tax has not greatly disturbed business in England because normal profits were first assured.

That would seem to me to be a sane proposal. But we here propose to lay the tax on sales whether profitable or not. We have no assurance whatever against business disintegration.

I voted to increase the rates on incomes for the reason that if we do not go too high we will secure needed revenue and will not seriously disturb business. However, there is danger that we may defeat our ends by too high rate. That period is not reached in this bill on incomes, in my opinion at least.

All will agree the customs tax is unscientific, but this administration will not allow itself to be embarrassed by a tariff discussion. The Underwood bill must not be in any form modified.

Millions of revenue could be raised by tariff duties if it were not for the Democratic opposition to protective duties.

Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to recommit this bill to the Ways and Means Committee. It ought to be rewritten and brought back here with the retroactive feature omitted, the gross-sales tax feature eliminated, the postal provisions rewritten, and the customs tax made scientific, as well as many items omitted should be inserted.

If the House refuses to recommit the bill, and it is presented with those features in it, I am left to the alternative of either voting for it or against a bill to raise revenue to prosecute the war, since all such measures must originate in this House. Of course I can not vote against prosecuting the war, and in case the House refuses to recommit I will have no other recourse than to join members of the committee, and with them shut my eyes and swallow the dose. But when I do it I am quite sure it is done only to satisfy the constitutional requirements, so that the Senate may take it, rewrite and draft it, and send it back to us in a form that we may all support.

This is one of the very greatest dangers of our times. Under the pressure of war we will be asked to do unheard-of things. The Congress must beware of that danger. We must not be carried off our feet by an intolerant as well as unthinking press demanding enactment of laws without due consideration. We will best render public service when every measure proposed is scanned under the light of constitutional sanction. The fashion now is to ignore the powers of the Constitution to accept the laws of necessity. This will face us constantly, and I here warn my colleagues and the country of this danger. The highest type of a statesman is not ratifying mere Executive orders or granting departmental requests, but it lies in a deliberate consideration of every measure here proposed, from whatever source, so as to conserve the future as well as provide for the immediate present.

Age Limits in the Army Plan.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARVIN JONES,

OF TEXAS.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 26, 1917.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if we are to have the system of selective drafting I do not believe the minimum and maximum age limits should be 19 and 25 years. It is neither right nor just to place the entire burden of facing fire upon the young men of this country. It may be fair as between the young men who were born in those fatal years, 1892 to 1898, inasmuch as it summons all of them as liable to the call to the colors. But is it fair to them? It takes the man who is 24 and leaves the man who is 26, though they are both young men. The age limits as designated take in a body a vast number of young men who are in the prime and bloom of life and exempts the others, when there are many strong men of all ages who should assume their fair share of the duties of citizenship.

I am persuaded that if this method is used men should be chosen at all ages, ranging from the average time when men enter the business world to the average time when they begin to slow up in their activity. I therefore favor the selection to cover the ages 21 to 45 instead of 19 to 25.

Young men form an essential part of the productive force of this country—different phases of work from the older perhaps, but essential, nevertheless. There are few industries, whether the factory, the field, or the farm, that do not use men of practically all active ages, each doing a particular line of work. It is estimated that there are some 20,000,000 men in this country between 21 and 45 years of age. If such is true, only about 1 in 20 would be necessary to constitute an army of 1,000,000 men. Scattered over these ages the industries would not be severely crippled, nor would any particular line of productive force be depleted. Whereas if any particular ages are taken out in a body, some portions of the work would suffer. If an army making a charge in the old-fashioned way lost 1 man in 20 scattered over its entire front, the ranks could close up in more or less perfect order; but if the entire loss were sustained at one place the lines would be broken and confusion would result. Likewise where men of different ages are doing different lines of work in the same industry a distributed loss would not materially cripple, but otherwise where you take them out in a body having certain parts of the work accomplished.

If selection we must have, I believe some fair method should be devised, such as that by which our jurors are selected, so that a man would have his even chance to go or to stay. Then no one could complain. Any other process would give rise to favoritism and consequent dissatisfaction and complaint. But if everyone is placed upon an equal basis, no one can complain.

I do not believe young men should fight the battles of all men, but that all men should have a part in the honors and the burdens, share and share alike. From 19 to 25 is just as important as any other period of a man's life. It is the beginning, the formative period. In the crucial make-up of these terrible times there is no place for a slacker or quitter. If we are going to preach democracy, let us live it and enforce it.

The Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY W. WATSON,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, May 26, 1917.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the members of the Ways and Means Committee were constrained in a very short period to prepare the most critical bill of all legislation to meet the exigency of the times.

It is only natural that the citizens of our country, after a century of international peace, should be disturbed, yet fail to realize that the United States is now at war with one of the strongest nations of the world, and that our people will be conscripted to fill the foreign trenches in order to maintain the principles of our Government.

The American people do not realize the seriousness of the hour, nor are they imbued with the meaning of war. They have not reflected on the revenue required to meet its expenses, their responsibility, the taxes to be levied—potent questions which now confront them.

It is impossible to frame a revenue bill to meet the applause of all men in their various professional, commercial, and industrial pursuits.

Taxes should be distributed in equal proportion, relative to the wealth of each individual, and no person exempted save the indigent.

Patriotism is as pronounced in the cabin as it is in the palace. Every wage earner will do his part and pay his share of the taxes to preserve the tradition of his home and the honor of his country as truly and patriotically as the one who employs him, but I do not believe that the United States should place an additional burden upon their sources of information.

I am therefore not in accord with the postal rates reported in this bill. They should be amended in order that newspapers in time of war may be transmitted through the mails to their subscribers in whatever part of the United States or its Territories they may be domiciled without increased postage.

It is the duty of a government to assist rather than to retard the distribution of news to its subjects wherever they may be.

The President of the United States publishes the State proclamations through the newspapers, and they in turn impart them to the public—in many cases the only source of information open for many of our people.

The newspaper arouses patriotism in the hearts of those where it is dormant and imparts to the world thoughts of a higher and a nobler condition for mankind.

Publishing houses should be taxed in harmony with all of the industries of our country but not be compelled to pay excessive toll where others do not. A cheap postal rate effectuates spreading of knowledge to the people, strengthening their intellectual energy, enlightening those beyond the realms of news, and unifies the policies of the Government.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM W. HASTINGS,
OF OKLAHOMA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I want to invite attention to the following editorial from the Phoenix, a daily paper published at Muskogee, Okla., in my district. It is entitled "A discreditable spectacle," and criticizes in a highly patriotic manner the persons, companies, and corporations attempting to evade payment of their pro rata share of the expenses of this war. It strongly advocates the payment of a large part of these expenses by taxation rather than leaving them to be paid by posterity. I commend the editorial to the country, and particularly to the newspaper fraternity in Washington. It is as follows:

A DISCREDITABLE SPECTACLE.

While we have reasons so many and so great for being proud of our country, one exhibition at Washington fills us all with shame and anger.

This is the descent upon the National Capital of a horde of interests and individuals, all bent upon having themselves partially or wholly exempted from the provisions of the new tax law.

There is as fierce a struggle to avoid paying the cost of the war as there is on the battle field to win it.

And the very men who have been howling for months about the need of preparedness and who sent telegrams to Senators and Representatives to vote billions for the war are now vociferously and angrily and threateningly demanding that the people shall pay the bill.

It is like nothing so much as the bad old days when a new tariff act was in preparation and dozens of lobbies were pulling this way and that to secure special exemptions on special increases of duties for the financial advantages of this or that greedy interest.

The main lines of the financial policy that ought to be pursued, that must be followed if we are not to disgrace ourselves, are as simple and plain as they could well be. We should give to the war unstintedly whatever sum is needed.

To spare now would be to lose incalculably later. We should, as far as possible, pay these costs as we go.

The "posterity" argument is a mean and mercenary lie. Posterity will have its own charges to meet, and we have no right to pledge the property of those who can not speak for themselves beyond a reasonable limit.

The bulk of the money should be raised from taxes on incomes above a reasonable minimum and upon all profits of business in excess of a certain rate on capital already invested, as represented by securities already issued.

Then the balance should be distributed as widely as possible over all activities and the whole body of the people.

This is substantially what has been proposed.

Let the whiners, those who seek exemption at the cost of their neighbors, be treated as if they were military deserters.

For that, in effect, is what they are.

Revenue Bill—Rates of Postage on Newspapers and Periodicals—A New Plan.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. HALVOR STEENERSON,
OF MINNESOTA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 28, 1917.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the revenue bill I said that I had a plan to adjust postage rates on newspapers and periodicals on circulation. Since then I have prepared a new bill on this subject, which is as follows:

That the rates of postage on newspapers and other periodicals admitted to the mail as second-class matter shall hereafter be as follows: "On all mail circulation not exceeding 20,000 copies, 1½ cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 20,000 and not exceeding 100,000 copies, 2 cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 100,000 and not exceeding 200,000 copies, 2½ cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 200,000 and not exceeding 300,000 copies, 3 cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 300,000 and not exceeding 400,000 copies, 3½ cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 400,000 and not exceeding 500,000 copies, 4 cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 500,000 and not exceeding 600,000 copies, 4½ cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 600,000 and not exceeding 700,000 copies, 5 cents per pound; on all mail circulation of more than 700,000 and not exceeding 800,000 copies, 5½ cents per pound; and on all mail circulation of more than 800,000 copies, 6 cents per pound: Provided, That the rate of postage on daily newspapers, when the same are deposited in a letter-carrier office for delivery by its carriers, shall be the same as now provided by law: Provided further, That nothing herein shall affect existing law as to free circulation and existing rates on second-class mail matter within the county of publication.

"SEC. 2. That hereafter advertising catalogues and similar publications shall be classified as third-class mail matter and pay postage as such."

My plan, while it contemplates a flat rate to every section of the country and thus overcomes the objections to the zone plan, adjusts the rates of postage to cost of service even more closely than any zone rate yet proposed, and is much more easily administered. The circulation of every paper is known and the proposed rate can readily be ascertained. It is free from discrimination, for everyone is charged the same rate for the same amount of circulation. It is based upon the wholesale principle reversed. The wholesale plan is to charge less per unit when quantity sold is large; that is, where business is done for profit. But where business is done either at a loss or without profit this rule is properly reversed. The Government is and has been doing this second-class mail business at a loss. No one claims anything else. The Hughes commission found it cost 5½ cents per pound. I contend that since those figures were gathered the cost has gone down and that it does not now exceed 4 cents. When I propose to carry every newspaper and periodical of a circulation less than 20,000 copies for 1½ cents per pound I propose to charge the large paper the same rate on its first 20,000 copies. Seeing this work is done at a loss, no one should complain if we limit him to the same quantity. The paper with small circulation is the one which, as a rule, is carried the shortest distance, and the paper with the largest circulation, having subscribers in every city, county, village, and hamlet in the land, is carried the farthest. I submit, therefore, that these rates will be adjusted more closely to cost of service than any zone system yet proposed.

The paper with a mail circulation of 800,000 copies can not complain that 6 cents is more than it costs, because on their whole shipment they only will pay an average of 3¾ cents, which does not exceed the actual cost of the service.

It is the purpose of this plan to reduce the loss on this class of mail to a minimum, or make it self-sustaining, and to place the increased rates on the shoulders that can bear them. The paper or magazine with less than 20,000 circulation can not command very remunerative advertising rates, and really earns no excessive profit. When you get up to 100,000 circulation we find prosperity more general. Where circulation reaches the hundreds of thousands or million mark, the business is very profitable. The usual advertising rates are one-half cent per agate line per thousand circulation, which, for a paper like the Saturday Evening Post, with a circulation of over a million, runs up over $6,000 per page.

There can be no argument in favor of the Government carrying such a paper at a loss. It is a profitable institution, and can afford to pay its way. The objection to the rates adopted the other day came mostly from the West and central portions of the country, because the people there would have to pay a higher subscription price under the zone plan. Under my plan the postage remains the same to every part of the country.

The total revenue that will be raised under the plan will be about $36,000,000, or more than the estimated increase under the proposed zone rates.

Catalogues are now carried in the first and second zones, 150 miles, for 5 cents first pound and 1 cent per pound for each additional pound. For a 5-pound catalogue this is 1.8 cents per pound. If they are sent in a 20-pound package to one address, it will be only 24 cents, or 1½ cents per pound. It is less than the rates provided for in the House bill. After March 1 next these will be 1½ cents first zone, 2 cents second zone, and so forth. Why should we carry catalogues for a less rate than newspapers? The one is wholly devoted to advertising the merchant's goods who lives at a distance, the other advertises the home merchant's goods.

Is there any reason why there should be a discrimination against the newspaper and in favor of the mail-order catalogue? Even supposing it to be the policy of this Government to favor the mail-order trust, yet should not a periodical which contains news and intelligence, in addition to advertising matter, be at least given the same rates as the purely advertising catalogue?

My bill proposes to put catalogues back into third-class mail, where they belong and where they pay 1 cent for every 2 ounces, or a rate of 8 cents per pound. This will bring a gross additional postal revenue of at least $12,000,000 and a net profit of about $5,000,000, making a total increased revenue of $41,000,000, or nearly sufficient to pay the cost of the service.

The rates proposed are tentative only, but the principle upon which this sliding scale of rates is based is fair.

Speech of Representative James L. Slayden at the Annual Meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Science at Philadelphia, Pa.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JEFF: McLEMORE,

OF TEXAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 28, 1917.

Mr. McLEMORE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a speech by Representative JAMES L. SLAYDEN at the annual meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, Philadelphia, Pa., April 20, 1917.

The speech is as follows:

DISARMAMENT AND INTERNATIONAL COURTS PREREQUISITES TO A DURABLE PEACE.

Four, five, or possibly six years ago I read a great speech by the member of the House of Commons for the division of Carnarvon, Wales. It was an eloquent plea for arbitration and the settlement of international disputes by the method of courts, and a specially strong and convincing argument for an agreed reduction of national armaments. That great democrat and advocate of peace is now the premier of the British Empire. His wonderful speech in London on the 12th shows that he holds the same views still. I shall refer to them later.

I am not one of that class of pacifists which believes it possible entirely to prevent war, at least not just yet, and refuses to discuss it except from the point of view of its absolute and immediate ending. But I do believe that it is possible, by arrangements between governments that now thoroughly appreciate the cost of wars and are beginning to understand their stupidity and futility, to make them comparatively harmless.

PULL THE FANGS.

Out in the Southwest I once knew a man who called himself a snake merchant. His chief article of trade was that dangerous and repulsive reptile, the rattlesnake. He would handle his merchandise in a way that made the onlooker shiver; but he knew what they did not—that he had made the snakes harmless by pulling their fangs. Now, that is precisely what I would like to do to aggressive and belligerent governments that covet the lands and sovereignties of other nations. I would pull their fangs by taking away from them nearly all the military forces that foolish and confiding people have put at the command of kings. Ambitious monarchs can be made comparatively harmless by reducing the size of armies so much that they will cease to be anything more than a police force. Then they will serve a useful purpose at home and cease to be a menace abroad.

One soldier to each 1,000 people in any country is enough to keep internal peace in a just government, and if governments are not just the sooner they are overturned the better. But if one soldier to each 1,000 is not enough, two surely will be, and international agreement should prevent any government from going beyond that.

HOW IT WOULD HAVE FARED WITH BELGIUM.

Suppose the federated German Empire had only controlled an army of 75,000 men in 1914, or, taking the larger figure I have suggested, 150,000; would there have been an invasion of Belgium, whose chief offense was that she lay in the highway between Berlin and Paris? Would Liege, Louvain, Dinant, Ypres, and Rheims now be in ruins and their priceless treasures of books, pictures, and architecture forever lost to the world? Armies of the size I suggest could not have done all that mischief, yet they would be large enough to keep the criminal classes under control, while utterly unable to thwart democracy's right to break the shackles of oppression, which is always imposed from above by the aid of the autocrat's military arm.

Thomas Jefferson, who lived in a less democratic era than ours, believed, and declared his belief, that revolutions were necessary once in a generation if the people were not to lose their blood-bought liberties. We may not think them necessary as often as Jefferson suggested, but we will all agree, I assume, that the opportunity to assert the right to liberty and independence should not be denied by a huge army at the command of an autocrat. The way to peace, to a just and durable peace is through democracy, and it is necessary to peace and democracy that the preponderance of power should never be taken from the people and given to the soldier. My faith in the people and in their supremacy in the domain of government has been greatly strengthened by recent events in Russia.

GRATITUDE TO NICHOLAS, THE CZAR.

Russia and the world may well spare Nicholas Romanoff from the field of political activity, but justice to his memory compels the admission that during his reign he did one thing for which he is entitled to the gratitude of the whole world, which we now know may be drawn into disaster by the machinations of a few men.

Whether the inspiration of an aroused conscience or the difficulty of financing military projects caused it we may never know, but the great epochal fact remains that governments began the serious consideration of reducing armaments on his motion. It is one of three or four good and statesmanlike deeds of an otherwise commonplace and inglorious reign. The historian of the future may in charity emphasize this great reform that Nicholas proposed and give only passing attention to pogroms, Siberian exiles, and other things that damn the political administration of Russia. If I may be permitted indulgence in slang I will say that when Nicholas, the last of the autocrats of the house of Romanoff, called the first Hague conference to disarm the nations in the interest of peace he "started something."

WILL GOVERNMENTS CONSENT?

Can we ever get the consent of governments to a general disarmament? I believe so; and I furthermore believe that never in the history of the world has there been such an opportunity for this greatest of all reforms as we will see at the close of the war in Europe.

The cost of modern war will plead for it and will finally compel it. Great Britain is now spending $10,000,000 more each day in the prosecution of war than the Army of the United States cost in any one of the 24 years from 1875 down to and including 1899.

The belligerent powers of Europe are spending more money each day than the average annual cost of the whole Government of the United States between 1800 and 1861.

In 1865 the total cost of our Government, outside the Post Office Department, was $1,295,099,290, and the cost per capita in that most expensive year of the Civil War was $37.27.

Last year, when we were at peace with everybody but Pancho Villa, and, perhaps, on occasions, with Carranza, our taxes per capita were nearly $15.

Contrast that with the $4.43 per head paid during Cleveland's administration for all expenses outside the Post Office Department and contrast it with the $85 per head you will have to pay for the next year and charge the increased cost to war and excessive preparation for war.

We in America may stand such burdens a few years more, but Europe can not. All these vast sums, both in Europe and America, must come out of the sweat and toil of the man who works. But even that long-suffering class is beginning to think and assert its rights; even the patient, long-suffering mujik has revolted at last.

A little while ago an officer of the United States Navy of high rank, a frank and capable man, who was testifying before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, said that if the policy of competition in armaments continued it could only have one of two endings—bankruptcy or war.

Mr. HENSLEY, of Missouri, on another occasion asked Capt. McKean, of the Navy, what would be the consequence if two individuals "became apprehensive of each other and began to arm themselves," to which the naval officer replied that it would lead "to the hospital or the cemetery."

Mr. HENSLEY then asked him if the same thing would not happen to nations under like circumstances. Capt. McKean replied that society would compel disarmament in the case of individuals and that the society of nations might do the same thing as to particular nations under such circumstances.

Another naval officer of high rank said that it was the policy of our Government to be either the first or second naval power in the world. I think he really meant that that was the policy our naval officers wanted. When reminded of the fact that other nations might object to our being the first or second naval power of the world his reply was, "We have the power and the money to protect ourselves, and I think we could do it."

What, let me ask you, will become of the rights of small nations under such a policy? Is it not a return to the rule of the tooth and claw, and can there be any just peace under such conditions, any hope for the small country, however just and peaceful, which has not the money and power?

REPUDIATION A POSSIBILITY.

Already there is talk of repudiation in Europe, but not, of course, by officials of the contending powers, for they are still trying to borrow, but by students of the world-wide madness, who realize that there is a limit to the burdens that men can bear. That outcome would be hard on those who have put their earnings into the notes of Russia, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, and the United Kingdom, but in the long run it might not be bad for the mass of men. If excessive armaments and war credits should both be abolished it will lead to a long period of peace. Some people believe that it is this threat of repudiation hanging over them that has caused the owners of such securities to demand that the taxpayers of the United States shall underwrite the war loans of belligerent Europe.

BIG ARMIES DO NOT INSURE PEACE.

The theory that huge military preparation assures peace exploded in 1914. At that time Russia, Germany, and Austria had the greatest armies in the world, and they were the first countries to enter the war. I don't understand, in view of what has happened, how any man can keep a straight face and make that argument. Nations are like the men who compose them. Given a hostile feeling and weapons and they will use the weapons. It is perfectly clear that if we are to have a lasting and just peace after the great war the insane policy of competitive arming must be abandoned. I believe that must have been the President's thought when he used the phrase "peace without victory" in his speech to the Senate in January. The President knows, as every thoughtful person must know, that if either side in the European war should win an overwhelming military victory its faith in the efficacy of arms in the settlement of international disputes will be renewed and strengthened, and that it would not agree to the policy of reduced armaments. If neither side should have such a victory, the folly and futility of war will be plain to the dullest mind. Its very horrors and inconclusiveness would illuminate the argument and hasten the substitution of the court and board of arbitration for the sword.

COURTS AND ARBITRATION WILL FOLLOW.

I am convinced that if we can persuade, or compel, Governments to reduce their military and naval establishments every other step in the plan for a just and lasting peace will follow easily and naturally. Heads of Governments who are not inclined to quiet reasoning when they command great fleets and armies would then take a different view. The setting for war is complete when two heads of quarrelsome governments are heavily armed, but if either realizes that while his army is the best of its size in the world it is still not large enough to overrun and destroy a neighbor, he will incline to talk it over and settle differences some other way.

Abolish overgrown armies and navies and there will at once be an opening for the Council of Conciliation, the Court for the Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, and the Board of Arbitration. If we can take away from the heads of governments, from the heads of all governments, the power to make war, or to make conditions that compel war, and take it so far away that they will forget that they ever had any connection with such things, the people will do the rest. The people, I believe, may be relied on not to condemn themselves to destruction. They will not put themselves into the hell of Verdun or Gallipoli.

From this you may surmise that I am pleading for democracy, and so I am, for I believe that democracy spells peace.

If the Republic of Russia really has been set up on a firm foundation, if the people of that country are to have a real voice in disposing of their own lives and fortunes, the "Bear that walks like a man" will cease to be a menace to Europe.

Already the republicans of Russia have spoken a sympathetic word to the Poles in whom a century of oppression has not stifled the hope of independence. For the first time since the Grand Duchy of Finland fell victim to the rapacity of the Romanoffs, there is a sympathetic feeling in Helsingfors for what is being done in Petrograd.

I do not sympathize with the suggestion that the Russians should not try for a republic, that they are not yet ripe for such complete freedom. It may be that all the people in the world are not yet sufficiently advanced for self-government, but all are advanced beyond the need of despotism; all are entitled to have a try at free, representative government. It is better to have democracy with occasional disorder than autocracy with unremitting oppression.

EVIL CONSEQUENCES OF WAR.

The wars that are begotten by huge military preparations put all sorts of financial and social burdens on the people. Modern wars, these huge scientific, mechanical wars, mean bankruptcy to nations that engage in them. They postpone indefinitely projects for the social betterment of the people. They mean inferior houses for the family, less vigorous children, thus passing on their miseries to the innocent unborn, inferior schools, undernourishing for women and children and the physically less fit men who have not been sent to the trenches. They mean increasing contributions from the earnings of labor to meet interest charges and to prepare for other wars that ambitious monarchs look forward to. They engender hatred between peoples that holds back civilization and prepares for other calamities, for be it remembered that "wars still other wars do breed." They break friendly relations between neighbors in a country like ours, where the citizens are contributions from all branches of the human family.

If we would not disturb the peace of the world with internal dissension, we must be tolerant and patient. Good American citizens who were "Saxon and Norman and Dane," Teuton, Celt, or Frank, each with a lingering interest in and affection for the country of his origin live side by side in our Republic. Their diverse origin makes it more difficult to keep the peace than among an absolutely homogeneous people. The situation calls for a wide tolerance for great wisdom and patience.

Suspicion of the loyalty of a citizen just because he was born in Germany, or is the son of a man who was born in Germany, is unworthy the great Republic and grossly unjust in nearly every case. By unjust suspicions and persecution men of spirit who are loyal may be made rebellious in time. All citizens have a right to be judged by their previous conduct and character. Suspicion, sensationalism, and intolerance are the worst features of the war psychology and we have it now in an exaggerated form.

In the American Revolution of 1776 there were many earnest supporters of the Colonies who were born in Great Britain. Many sons of Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen whose relatives in the old country wore the uniform of King George followed Washington from the beginning in Massachusetts to the ending at Yorktown. We have monuments to the memory of von Steuben, Kosciusko, and Lafayette, all in one small square in Washington. I do not doubt for a moment that in the war with Germany many German-born men and their sons will loyally and effectively support the American Republic, and they ought not to be insulted by unjust suspicion or worried by the unthinking who show their patriotism in violence. Let us try to protect them from a suspicion that is so frequently insulting, and from the nagging and annoyance that espionage bills and such un-American legislation will make possible.

We must live with these people after the war and it will contribute to the cause of internal and external peace if we will remember their embarrassing situation and treat them as Americans should be treated.

May I in closing quote two or three sentences from the great speech made in London a few days ago by the great little Welshman, now the real head of the British Government? Take these words of David Lloyd-George home with you:

I am the last man in the world to say that the succor which is given from America is not in itself something to rejoice at greatly. But I also say that I can see more in the knowledge that America is going to win a right to sit at a conference table when the terms of peace are discussed. That conference will settle the destiny of nations and the course of human life for God knows how many ages. It would have been a tragedy, a tragedy for mankind, if America had not been heard there and with all her influence and her power.

I can see peace, not a peace to be a beginning of war, not a peace which will be an endless preparation for strife and bloodshed, but a real peace. Europe has always lived under the menace of the sword. When this war began two-thirds of Europe was under autocratic rule. Now it is the other way about, and democracy means peace.

Many strange things have happened in this war—aye, and stranger things will come and are coming rapidly. Six weeks ago Russia was an autocracy; she now is one of the most advanced democracies in the world.

To-day we are waging the most devastating war the world has ever seen. To-morrow, to-morrow, not perhaps distant to-morrows, war may be abolished forever from the category of human crimes.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. BASCOM SLEMP,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 22, 1917.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House, known as the revenue bill, proposes to raise the sum of $1,800,000,000 by direct taxation. It is the purpose of a law already passed to raise and expend $2,000,000,000 additional through a bond issue. The amount to be raised through taxation for carrying on the war is therefore about equal to the amount to be raised through the sale of bonds. In other words, if we pass this bill we, ourselves, pay cash for one half the expense of the war and borrow the other half, which latter half will be paid by posterity. It seems to me that this imposes too great a burden on those living to-day.

The war in which we are engaged is more in the interest of future generations than in the interest of those now living. President Wilson laid down the doctrine that we were fighting for the right of the people of all nations to control their own Governments and to make the world "safe for democracy" for all time, which obviously relates to the future more than to the present. There is no way to make any scientific or sure statement on the portion that should be paid by those living to-day and the portion to be borne by future generations, but the action of other nations may be some guide.

England, a nation of financiers, has raised through taxation only 25 per cent of her war expenditures; France, that has fully preserved her national credit, has raised by taxation only 22 per cent of her war expenditures; and Germany only 16 per cent of her war expenditures, as against our proposal to raise 50 per cent of our war expenditures through taxation.

I have no fixed percentage in my mind as the proper proportion. I should prefer to be governed by the principle that no industry should be destroyed by this taxation bill, that the production of articles necessary for the allies should not be curtailed by the effect of the bill, and that the purchasing power of the public for bonds should not be so impaired that we could not secure through the sale of bonds the money necessary for the allies and for ourselves. I should think, also, that we should be governed by the attitude that this war is a war for all mankind, for the peace of the world now and hereafter, and therefore that we should not be too sensitive as to the attitude of future generations as to the bonds we propose to issue. Our boys will shed their blood and lose their lives now. This will be compensation to some extent to the descendants of those living in the future for any possible error of judgment by the present generation.

Now, I favor the income tax and the excess profits provisions, though I would vote for a graduated excess profits tax similar to the provisions of the income tax. I shall vote against any retroactive taxation features. I shall vote for an amendment providing for the rates in second-class matter to be based on the advertising as opposed to the educational matter they contain. I shall vote against the advertising feature in the bill. It is discriminatory. I shall vote to modify the soft-drink item as confiscatory to small producers. I shall vote to readjust the tariff provisions and for a committee to report on a revision of the entire subject by December next. The provisions in the bill are unscientific. Suddenly to impose a 10 per cent horizontal duty on articles now on the free list, many of which are noncompetitive and which enter largely into manufactures for export, to say nothing of its effect on foodstuffs, would be revolutionary in, and detrimental to business, probably impairing and disarranging contracts already made.

I think it would be better policy if we raise not more than $1,250,000,000 through taxation, which is about 33⅓ per cent of the estimated expenditures for the first year of the war, which is 7 per cent in excess of England's rate. Apparently this amount can be raised without seriously disturbing business in this country, and in my judgment, as shown by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], this is more than is needed at this time by the Government from the source of taxation.

Revenue to Defray War Expenses.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. TOM D. McKEOWN,

OF OKLAHOMA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, May 23, 1917.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, to raise revenue in an equitable manner to maintain Government in time of peace is a gigantic task rarely ever accomplished by legislative bodies. To equitably distribute the burden of taxation to defray the expenses of this war upon a 50 per cent basis is almost a superhuman task. If we knew that this would be the only revenue measure to defray war expenses the solution would be easier, but as men of common sense we must anticipate that this measure is but one of several to follow. We would like to believe that it would be the only one, but we are face to face with cold facts and not theories.

I feel that incomes and excess profits should bear their share of this taxation, and the tax should be sufficiently large to preclude the making of excessive profits out of this war. I would not go beyond the point where industries would become unable to increase the wages of their employees and keep up the efficiency of their plants. To go beyond that place would work a great hardship upon the men who labor in the industries of the country. During the war the prices of necessities will be high and a corresponding increase in wages should follow.

The inheritance tax in times of war should be greatly increased, and when we shall return to pursuits of peace the inheritance tax should remain upon the statute books of the Nation and provide for a rate of 98 per cent of the amount by which such net estate exceeds $25,000,000. The amount of taxation received would be a small part of the benefit derived from such legislation. The real benefit would be the prevention of multimillionaires from entailing their great fortunes upon their descendants. The accumulation of enormous wealth in the hands of a few, no matter how legitimate the accumulation may be, is a great detriment to the welfare of a people who have a democratic form of government. Peoples who have such form of government must necessarily act through representatives in parliaments or congresses. If enormous wealth should accumulate in the hands of a few selfish persons, then these persons could, if they desired, use the influence and power incident to their fortunes in securing legislation in their favor, while the less fortunate, though more numerous, would often find themselves discriminated against. Every nation owes itself the duty to preserve its own life.

The money to defray the necessary expenses of this war should be raised as fast as the same shall be needed, but excessive sums over present needs should not be raised and collected to lay idle until the day they can be spent. Such a practice will encourage extravagance. While every department charged with the duty to expend the taxes raised by this bill should exert every energy to push the war to a successful termination, yet there ought not to be such haste as to cause waste. We are urging the conservation of food and the raw products of field and mine, to the end that the evil day will not come when if our children shall ask for bread we shall be compelled to give them a stone. It is not amiss to urge that the departments that are to spend this money should see to it that this tax money shall not be wasted, and that the United States Government should receive a dollar in value for every dollar expended.

I hope that not a dollar of this tax money shall ever reach the pocket of any man or woman disloyal to the flag of this country.

I hope that not a dollar of the revenue raised by this bill shall be paid to any employee of this Government who sought his position or holds the same now for the purpose of evading service under the draft bill. Any able-bodied man within the draft age in the employ of the United States Government who would seek to evade service for his country because of his employment is not worthy of employment by this Government, and the sooner such kind, if there be such, are driven out of the employment of the Government the better it will be for the service.

There are several provisions in the bill that I am not wholly in accord with, but we are confronted with the question of how to raise the amount of money requested to carry on the war. For myself, I would not increase the first-class postage rate. On second-class mail I would increase the rate on the basis of the amount of advertising compared to the amount of news matter carried. Purely advertising schemes should pay the full cost of transportation and distribution. In other words, the person who sends purely advertising matter through the mail should pay the full cost, just as the billposter has to pay full cost to erect his boards and procure his license.

Only a last resort to raise the revenue required should warrant the tax upon freight, express, light, heat, and telephone bills. The emergency alone can justify the tariff increase.

Protest has come from every industry mentioned in the bill, and if one were to judge the patriotism of the American people by the number of protests entered against the many provisions of this bill he would reach the conclusion that it was at a low ebb; however, in my opinion the protests are not evidence of a lack of patriotism, but have their origin in the fear or belief that the particular business is being taxed inequitably and that other business is not paying its just share, and for the further reason that many of the people do not understand the pressing needs of the Government nor the necessity to stop thinking of self and give their country and its destiny some serious consideration.

It is urged that the automobile is a necessity and for that reason the industry should not bear the heavy burden placed upon luxuries. It is true that the automobile has come to be necessary in many instances, but it is still a semiluxury, and those who use them and those who manufacture them are to pay a reasonable tax. If the ownership of the automobile was confined to those who are really able to purchase them, there would be more debts paid to local creditors and less necessities of life purchased upon time.

It is suggested by some who favor national prohibition that no war tax should be levied upon liquor in this measure on the ground that it is inconsistent with their policy. This is a revenue measure and taxes everything that could be discovered by an astute committee. I am not in favor of letting the chance pass to double the tax on liquor, on the theory that I may have an opportunity to vote it out at an early date. I am unwilling to tax legitimate industries and omit the tax on liquor on account of some sentimental reason.

The exemptions under the income-tax chapter should have been scaled according to the number of dependents cared for by a person liable to taxation. In other words, the married man who has five children to support and educate should have a greater exemption than the married man who has only to provide for his wife. The single person who has no one dependent upon him should not have the same exemption that the single man who has a mother or sisters to support.

The bill is not perfect, but there never can be a perfect measure written by men. The press of the country is not justified in its assault upon the Ways and Means Committee concerning this revenue bill. One day it lashes Congress on account of alleged delay, and when the committee in order to expedite business did not sit for six months to hear every man who had an idea as to how it ought to be drawn, the next day we are reminded that the Ways and Means Committee and the House of Representatives hastened to report and press the bill in such a haste that it will necessitate the Senate to rewrite the bill.

It is possible that the disclosure upon the floor of the House by members of the committee and other Members of the House that the United States Government is losing over $80,000,000 annually on second-class rates, while certain large and influential papers and periodicals were receiving enormous incomes from their advertising space, had something to do with these ridiculous inconsistencies.

No Member who listened to the able speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] upon the subject of second-class mail rates can bring himself to believe that present rates and abuses should continue. We should take immediate steps to separate the wheat from the chaff.

One can not at this time prophesy in what form the bill will finally become a law, and I hope that upon its final passage that it will require only sufficient tax to meet the necessary expenditures for the present, to the end that the income, excess profits and inheritance tax, together with the tax laid upon luxuries and semiluxuries, shall be sufficient without taxing directly any of the necessities of life.

Every member of the Ways and Means Committee has impressed the House with his sincerity in presenting the measure, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] has demonstrated beyond peradventure his wonderful leadership in piloting the bill thus far, with the assistance of the able men of the committee on both sides of the House.

No citizen can feel that he has been slighted by being overlooked by this bill. It reaches every industry and business in the land. It is a monument to the sagacity and ability of the committee in this particular.

Although containing provisions that I am opposed to, yet I shall vote for the measure, because I can not conscientiously refuse to support a measure to raise revenue to carry on the war for the reason alone that all of the provisions do not meet my personal approval. I hope that the American people will accept the bill with the same patriotic feeling that actuates the Congress in its passage.

Grain Used in Manufacture of Beer, etc.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. L. C. DYER,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, May 28, 1917.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, in answer to some of the remarks made concerning the necessity of conserving the grain now used in the manufacture of beer, and so forth, I beg to call the attention of the Members of the House to the following letter:

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 24, 1917.

Hon. LEONIDAS C. DYER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The brewing industry of the United States is threatened with destruction through the efforts of fanatics and theorists to force your honorable body to pass a nation-wide prohibition bill in order (as they claim) to conserve for food the grain used in the manufacture of alcoholic stimulants.

Wildly exaggerated figures as to the amount of grain to be saved by this proposed measure have been put out for the consumption of the unthinking public by prohibition leaders.

The claim was recently made in the daily press that the saving of grain would amount to 600,000,000 bushels per annum. This is about as close as the average prohibitionist comes to the truth when dealing with this subject, the solution of which has baffled mankind since the beginning of the race, but which these fanatics pretend to believe they can solve overnight.

Permit me to say that this movement being backed by the same old Anti-Saloon League lobby in Washington as has for years tried by coercion and intimidation to force Congress to wipe out our industry, and no more heartless, un-Christian, and unscrupulous lobby ever infested the halls of Congress.

We know that their statement that they desire prohibition only during the war for the grain it will save to be absolutely false, and if they are strong enough to inflict this crime on the people we will never be allowed to go back into business.

It has been proven from the figures of the Internal-Revenue Department at Washington, that during the year 1916 the brewers of the country used 52,439,973 bushels of barley, 15,711,515 bushels of corn products, 2,354,000 bushels of rice, or a total of 70,505,488 bushels of cereals.

They returned in spent grains to the farmer for cattle feed 24,676,920 bushels, making the net amount used, 45,828,568 bushels.

Very little barley is used for human food, consequently the closing down of our plants would save practically nothing in the way of food products.

The barley crop has already been sown, so that the acreage will not be available this year for the growing of food crops.

Under the proposed law it will still be permissible to ship barley to England, where it is only used for making beer. Why discriminate against us in favor of the foreign brewer?

The brewers in 1916 paid revenue to the amount of $87,950,000, which is equal to about $1.90 per bushel for the grain used.

The revenue collected by the Federal Government alone on alcoholic stimulants for the year 1916 amounted to approximately $250,000,000. If the increase proposed by the Ways and Means Committee of the House is made effective, this amount will be increased to from $400,000,000 to $450,000,000.

National prohibition will wipe out at least 75 per cent of approximately $1,300,000,000 invested in the liquor industry.

The workers employed in the industry will lose approximately $450,000,000 in wages a year.

The Cummins amendment to the espionage bill as presented to the Senate on May 12 would permit the manufacture of wine, which Senator PHELAN says, according to press reports, is not intoxicating. The lightest wines contain double the amount of alcohol as the average beer. Consequently under the proposed law the rich would still get their wine, while the poor man would be deprived of his beer.

The experience of every Government in Europe proves the necessity of beer or other alcoholic stimulants for our Army and Navy, and it remains to be seen whether our men can get along without them.

Scarcity and short crops are not altogether responsible for high prices. Stop speculation in food products and there will be plenty for all and at reasonable prices.

Many millions are invested in what is known as the "English Brewing Syndicates," located in many of our big cities. These Englishmen invested their millions relying on the justice of our Government to protect them in their property rights.

There has been no thought in their country of confiscation of any branch of the liquor traffic without compensation. Should our Government be any less moral than the English Government?

We rail against the Prussian autocracy, but the property rights of the poorest peasant of Prussia are sacred against the encroachment of even the Kaiser himself; and the same is true as regards every civilized country on the globe but our own.

Property values in each of the large cities will depreciate to the extent of many millions.

In St. Louis alone over 10,000 people are employed in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages; 5,000 more are engaged in the retailing of same.

The majority of these men are married and have families to support, and have worked at their calling too long and are too old to do other work which would yield them a wage sufficient to support themselves and families.

There are about 3,000 properties in St. Louis alone leased for saloons and restaurants, which would be closed in the event of prohibition.

These stupendous losses would absolutely demoralize financial conditions in the larger cities and upset the fiscal system of many of the State governments and make it necessary to revise their tax system from top to bottom.

Missouri, in spite of the immense revenue collected from the liquor industry, is practically bankrupt. What will she do if she loses these revenues? Would you expect her to help the Federal Government under such conditions?

The immense quantities of alcoholic stimulants consumed by the people of the United States prove absolutely that the vast majority of our fellow citizens are not in favor of prohibition, and if you will take the trouble to add up the total majority for prohibition in the States which have voted dry you will find these majorities to be very small indeed.

Since starting this letter this evening's Post-Dispatch has come to hand, and I attach hereto a clipping from same, giving the views of Kennedy Jones, director of food economy of England. They are evidently approaching the question from a sane and thoughtful standpoint, and will refuse to be stampeded into denying their working people their beer at the behest of the fanatics of their country.

The most powerful man in Britain—Lloyd-George, who is a prohibitionist—has been unable to induce the British people to surrender their personal liberty, which they prize more highly than life itself, for the doubtful benefits of prohibition; and if the masses of our country are wise they will follow their example, provided they are allowed a voice in the matter.

I trust that, in the spirit of justice and fair play and for the sake of the thousands of your fellow citizens in Missouri interested in the liquor traffic, you will give this question, which is of national importance, the consideration it deserves and vote against any measure seeking to deprive the people of their personal liberty and thousands of your fellow citizens their property rights.

Yours, very truly,

H. R. WILLIAMS,
Manager the Independent Breweries Co.

The War-Revenue Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MOSES P. KINKAID,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, May 22, 1917.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, now that the war-revenue bill has passed the House, and that I have voted for it and, in the main, supported it as to amendments, I feel free to offer a few observations as to the policy involved, which might have been regarded as dilatory or obstructive when the bill was under consideration.

The question may be asked, Why were these suggestions not made when the bill was in the House? My answer is that what I am about to say is intended for consideration when providing war revenues at future sessions rather than this one. I mean that the proportion of cash required to be raised by the pending revenue bill as passed by the House to the amount of bonds issued shall not be taken as a binding criterion for the amount of cash in proportion to bonds provided for at the next or at other future sessions. As it is uncertain how long the war will last, what I propose is essentially tentative.

I am in favor of the pay-as-you-go policy as far as it can be made to prove truly economic and wise, but we must not forget that there are limits to which we can safely go in taxing productive industries. To go beyond the proper limit would be to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. It seems plain to me that our financiering should be so conducted as to permit every industry to continue to thrive and at the same time not to overburden any individual or business concern when relief may be afforded by the sale of bonds. Neither should we overload ourselves at the start, for the reason that we do not know how long the war will last or can not now estimate the limit of expenditure that will be required. We must remember, too, that instead of lending to us, as might be the case in normal times, the allied nations are borrowing from us. The United States has no nation from which to borrow; it must borrow from its own citizens.

Now, it is plain that with the vast accumulation of wealth of recent years we can pay more cash right at the start of the war, after having enjoyed such a long period of peace and plenty, than will be the case a year hence, when money has been drained from the country and when, by reason of the withdrawal of hundreds of thousands of our best manhood to engage in the world conflict, our accumulations will have decreased. And this untoward tendency must become essentially accelerated as the war shall continue and the number of men to help with production shall decrease.

I regard it as too Spartanlike for this generation to continue to carry half the expense of the war in cash as the war proceeds. It is illogical that prosperity and adversity can lock arms so successfully as mutually to thrive.

It has been suggested that it is unfair and inequitable to place the burden of the war on the next generation, but why limit the burden merely to the present and to the next generation? The principles for which we are fighting are to be enduring and the victory to be achieved must be lasting. Why is it not equitable to distribute the burden over several generations? Dependent on the duration of the war and the magnitude of the expenditures, from 20 to 50 years would not be an unreasonable period over which to extend the time of payment.

It should not be lost sight of that we are not only carrying our own expenses but we are financing several allied nations. As I have pointed out, all our borrowing must be from our own citizens. Not only that but we are to prevent famine by succoring the starving, and thus we double and quadruple the need of production at a time when all labor resources will be greatly diminished.

On its face it is absurd as a physical and an economic proposition that when we are in the throes of war we should try to raise three or four times as much money as we raise annually in time of peace. It is like saying that a man with his hands tied shall reap extraordinary harvests from half-tilled fields. When the Nation is placed at the greatest disadvantage it is called on to yield more than any other nation has ever been asked to contribute. No other nation in the world has ever undertaken such a Herculean task; no other country has ever been so altruistic.

We are in the war and victory must be achieved, and to this end we must not overburden ourselves at the beginning of the struggle. We must conserve our strength for the greater possible tests of the future, for we do not know what may be exacted of us. Why not provide revenues from the same point of view that would guide the individual in providing for himself? For instance, the farm-loan act provides for loans for the maximum time of 40 years, which renders it practicable to hold and secure a home in cases where the pay-as-you-go plan, or short-period loans, would make this desirable end prohibitive.

So, Mr. Speaker, if the war indebtedness be made to extend over a long period the prodigious burden will be lightened so much that citizens need hardly be conscious of the weight they carry, and, in fact, they would forget it except when reminded by the redemption of war bonds from time to time. The facility with which indebtedness extended over a long period of years could be met would be aided by the natural increase of population and wealth makers, their accumulations thus diminishing the rate to be paid by each individual.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in a high rate of taxes on surplus wealth and on war profits, thus preventing persons of small means from being deprived from the necessaries and the comforts of life. If the producers and wage earners are overloaded now there may be serious business depression, which, with increased cost of living and the many depressing circumstances accompanying a state of war, will tend toward discouragement in the very hour when the valiant spirit of America has dared to accept the great task which may exact its most supreme power to endure and to prevail.

How Every Man May Serve.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BURTON L. FRENCH,
OF IDAHO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 29, 1917.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD resolutions adopted by the Lewiston (Idaho) Commercial Club, entitled "How Every Man May Serve."

HOW EVERY MAN MAY SERVE.

The existence of the United States is at stake. Responsibility for the conduct of the war rests mainly on the President. In war the President is not only the Chief Executive; he is, under the Constitution, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. To advise him in war he has a General Staff, composed of the ablest and most experienced military and naval experts, organized like the general staffs of all the warring nations. The President and the General Staff must not only organize and direct the energies of the people in war, but in this war they must coordinate our efforts with those of our allies in all the novel, complex, and intricate business of a struggle that involves the whole world. The marvelous military efficiency of our chief adversary, Germany, is due to the rigid direction of the affairs of the nation in war by the Emperor and the general staff, and the whole-hearted acceptance of that direction by the German people.

Men who desire to serve our country must adjust their minds to a situation that is new and strange to us all. The ways and habits of democracy must be abandoned for a time in order that democracy may not perish. Our own history, the experience of other nations, and our native good sense and patriotism alike dictate that the President and the staff be given immediately powers adequate to their responsibilities. For a time our accustomed rights and privileges as citizens and freemen must be subordinated to the duties and obligations of citizenship. War is a servitude that of our free will we accept temporarily to escape a more lasting and terrible slavery.

We hold it to be the first duty of every citizen at this time to support promptly and uncomplainingly such measures as the President and the staff advise are necessary to the safety of the country and the effective conduct of the war; to forego criticism and contention; to notice blunders and mistakes only for the purpose of repairing or correcting them; to stand ready to serve, without reservation or condition, where the Government may direct and not where the citizen himself would choose; to seek earnestly to understand the supreme necessity of organization; to adapt himself to the general plan; and to find his place and fit himself into the general organization, waiving his personal rights and private opinions for the public good.

During this initial period, while the Nation is striving for comprehension of the task before it and for organization and unity, each man may test his loyalty and measure his patriotism by his willingness to support such measures as the President recommends, whole-heartedly to obey the Government, to serve where he is directed, and to refrain from every comment, criticism, or suggestion which is not definitely and beyond question helpful and constructive.

This is a war of whole nations. By our entrance into it we have become a nation of soldiers. The prime virtues of the citizen now are the virtues of soldiers, promptness, obedience, fortitude, and unfaltering loyalty. The first need of the Nation is organization and the first essential in preparation is preparedness of the spirit. By accepting these plain and simple principles and by helping his neighbors to accept and understand them every man may render to his country the service that is immediately necessary.

LEWISTON, IDAHO, May 22, 1917.

Resolutions Adopted By the Board of County Commissioners of Lincoln County, Idaho.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. BURTON L. FRENCH,
OF IDAHO,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 29, 1917.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for printing in the RECORD a copy of resolutions adopted at a meeting held on the 21st day of May, 1917, at Shoshone, Idaho, by the Board of County Commissioners of Lincoln County, Idaho, and the war production committee of said county. The resolutions are not extensive but indicate a serious problem confronting the farmers of the Northwest.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas a joint meeting was held on the 21st day of May, 1917, at Shoshone, Idaho, by and between the board of county commissioners of Lincoln County, Idaho, and the war production committee of said county, and that said meeting was called for the purpose of devising ways and means for procuring more farm laborers to assist in the irrigation, cultivation, and harvesting of the farm crops of said Lincoln County; and

Whereas after hearing reports from numerous well-posted farmers from said county and after a full and complete discussion of the subject it was the sense of said meeting that a very great and grave danger is now threatening not only the crops of Lincoln County but also the crops all over southern Idaho by reason of the fact that there are not sufficient farm laborers available for the proper handling of the crops in question; that a large number of the farmers of this county are at the present time suffering for a lack of help, and that as soon as irrigation season gets under way it will be utterly impossible for many of the crops to be saved without additional help, that owing to the scarcity of farm laborers their wages have been rapidly increasing, and many of the farm laborers are taking advantage of the absolute necessity of the farmers to secure exorbitant wages, much in excess of the amount the farmers are justified in paying for such help, and that there is a constant demand for still further increase in said wages; that by reason of said conditions there is a feeling of unrest on the part of the farm laborer for fear that he may not be obtaining as much money as some other farmer in another part of the community is paying. Under such fluctuating prices it is a common occurrence for the farm laborer to leave his employer without notice, in the almost certain belief that he can obtain at least as much, if not more, from some one else.

The more serious result of the above condition is that the substantial farmers, who have a considerable area under cultivation, are placed upon such uncertain basis that they dare not go further along the line of additional food production, and that although the farmers of this community have loyally answered President Wilson's and Gov. Alexander's call in using their utmost endeavor to obtain a large food production during the war, their energies along this line will prove a detriment rather than a benefit unless some action is taken to relieve the scarcity of farm labor in this vicinity.

It was also the sense of said meeting that steps should be taken by the Federal Government to aid the farming vicinity of the country, and especially the irrigated section of southern Idaho in procuring men to work on the farms, and, although no recommendation was definitely made, two plans were suggested at said meeting, one being that a draft of the idle men of the country be made for farm laborers, to be organized and under the direction of the Federal authorities, and that their wages should be fixed at some reasonable figure; that anyone so drafted who refused to so work should then be drafted into the Army and sent to the front. The second suggestion was that a sufficient number of Chinese be imported into the country to supply the temporary shortage of help during the period of the war.

It was the further sense of the meeting that the farm-labor conditions of the country are gradually growing worse and will continue to grow worse as more and more men join the Army, and unless relief is given along these lines, it will be impossible for the farmers in southern Idaho to perform the full amount of service along the lines of food supply that they might otherwise be able to produce: Wherefore be it

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress be requested to take any action which, in their judgment, they might deem to be to the best interest for the purpose of procuring an adequate supply of farm laborers for southern Idaho, and that the governor and the other State officials of Idaho be requested to assist in any movement along this line that may to them seem practical; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress and a copy to the governor of the State of Idaho.

United States Did Not Seek War.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,
OF TENNESSEE,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Tuesday, May 29, 1917.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, the Associated Press on the 26th instant carried a brief account of a remarkable speech delivered by Judge E. H. Gary at the annual meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute in New York City, May 25. I think I am rendering a public service by having this speech published in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is full of wisdom, of good advice, of true patriotism, of fairness to those charged with the prosecution of the war and responsible for legislation. Our case against Germany—our reasons for entering the world war—could not be better stated.

This splendid speech of Judge Gary's goes well in hand with the recent war address delivered to the American Congress by President Wilson. The speech is as follows:

UNITED STATES DID NOT SEEK WAR.

The people of the United States constitute a peace-loving Nation. They abhor war and would go, have gone, great lengths to avoid it. They are considerate, reasonable, and forbearing. They are not envious of their national neighbors. They neither seek nor desire anything that belongs to any other country. If they had an advantage over other nations in any department of human endeavor they would not unjustly profit by it. Their ambition is to cultivate good will and friendship and their hope is to avoid enmities. Their consistent purpose and effort have been to occupy an independent position amongst nations, unentangled and uncomplicated with alliances or associations that might interrupt the policy of aiding and never antagonizing others.

These observations are based on history. The record has been written and can not be changed by any who may impugn the motives or conduct of our people. Such a citizenship when driven to self-defense by a barbarous despotism is apt to be the most terrible, even though civilized and human, in its combativeness. This country is largely made up of men and women who come here to live in peace and tranquillity, or the descendents of such; they wish to progress and prosper as the result of privileges which the exclusion of war always permits. The great majority, if not the total, of our inhabitants appreciate what our Republic, with its protective institutions and manifold opportunities, means to every citizen, and with noble impulses they will in every emergency rally around and follow the Stars and Stripes, their emblem of honor, of liberty, and of justice.

We did not desire, we persistently and consistently sought to avoid, trouble with Germany and her allies. We had always been the true friends of the Teutons until the ruling powers, for reasons not comprehended by us, forced us into the position of self-defense. We believed, as indeed it was admitted by the invaders, that they were reckless, lawless, and cruel in their treatment of their neutral and unoffending neighbors, but as a Nation we refrained from interference or even criticism. As human beings we suffered intensely as we learned of the outrages perpetrated upon the innocent victims of force and brutality; and still our Nation, not for lack of sympathy but rather on legal grounds, stood aloof. We were neither indifferent nor selfish, but our President, after full and careful consideration of all the facts and the construction of the rules of international law as determined by the best legal talent, decided he was obligated to remain silent and inactive. For one, I think his conclusions were warranted.

Even after the central powers trespassed upon the well-established rights of the persons and property of individual American citizens our Government was patient and unmoved to action, accepting the excuses and promises of the aggressors. As a Nation we exercised more restraint than any large and powerful people ever before practiced under provocation so great. Our Chief Executive indulged the hope for long and weary and suffering days that our entry into the pending war might be avoided. The wish was father to the thought, and this sentiment filled the minds of the majority of the people of the United States.

At last war was forced upon us. The President was compelled to conclude that we were intentionally attacked, that the honor and integrity of our country could no longer be maintained unless the gage of battle was accepted; and in this decision he was supported by the whole country. His clear, powerful, convincing, and eloquent statement of the case and impeachment of the enemy will stand out in history as one of the greatest official declarations and also as fully justified by the existing facts and circumstances.

A COLOSSAL UNDERTAKING.

But we have entered upon a colossal undertaking, justified only by the necessities of the case and on the highest moral grounds. It is doubtful if any of us fully realizes the strength of the enemy, even though we know his grim determination. His numbers, his preparedness, resources, devices, creative ability, methods, protective barriers, means of rapid mobilization and transfer of troops and supplies are further advanced in effectiveness than any other army or armies have ever been. This concentration and perfection of the utilities of military strength should not be underrated. Years of steady, active, and studious, though secret, effort have brought about the creation of a giant, powerful, remorseless, conscienceless; and up to the present this kind of a government, armed to this extent, seems to have an abiding conviction that it can overcome all opposition and sooner or later pursue a war of aggression and conquest.

And yet the allies possess an element of strength not appreciated—if it could under any circumstances be understood—by those who are in control of the armies of the central powers. The allies are contending that right makes might; their enemies that might makes right. We are of the opinion that we possess a weapon that must prove all powerful. With this as the foundation and inspiration of our armies, they are better able to utilize all the forces at their command. It will require time, skill, numbers, sacrifices, and large sums of money; but nothing that we do not possess in abundance. For the reason that we are right and the enemy is wrong, we shall probably see other nations of strength and importance, now neutral in attitude, join the allies if the war shall be protracted. Some or all of the South and Central American Republics, China, Spain, Scandinavia, Holland, and Switzerland ought to come in and probably will before the central powers are allowed to accomplish what they attempt. These countries could not afford to permit their people to become subject to the dominance of a nation which considers force as the only consideration for aggression and expansion.

With the unprecedented and increasing wealth and the vast resources of the United States she is able to assist materially in providing the financial necessities for equipping multitudes of soldiers from other countries; and, if necessary, all these must be mobilized in the defense of a common and righteous cause. And as to equipment, the brains of the allies, ourselves included, will in time be sufficient to match and overmatch the best talent that is possessed by our adversaries after many years of constant thought and study. Among other things it is conceivable that if the allies had the best and most effective types of aircraft, outnumbering those of the other side five or ten to one, they could obtain and hold control of the air and in this way destroy the productive works, transports of troops and supplies, storage warehouses, and other facilities for offensive and defensive warfare of the enemy, and thus materially increase the advantage now held by reason of numbers and resources. We may be sure our experts are giving due consideration to all the possibilities for improved machines and methods.

WHAT WE ARE FIGHTING FOR.

What are we fighting for? This question is asked and answered, in one form or another, by millions of people. I give an answer that seems to me to underlie all others: We are fighting to firmly establish and permanently maintain a basis whereby every international question in dispute must be determined in accordance with the principles of justice.

To bring this about, other questions which are obvious must be determined; but if the above-mentioned basis is secured, everything else necessary will have been or will be disposed of.

ALL SHOULD BE WILLING TO SACRIFICE.

The task which confronts the country is not confined to the Army and Navy, although they will be entitled to the larger part of the credit and glory if we succeed. They offer their bodies as a sacrifice, and they must have the undivided, unqualified support of all outside their ranks. The time, money, and prayers of all civilians must be given for the soldiers. They bear the brunt; they are the shield for our safety. All of us are fighting in self-defense. This is our land and the flag is ours. The administrators of the country, from President Wilson down, are no more interested than each of us. Life would not be worth living if our flag were to be permanently furled; if our country were subjugated by an alien enemy, especially such a one as we now defend ourselves against.

The pecuniary burdens to be imposed upon us will be very great. We knew in advance such would be the case. We must pay the enormous cost of mobilizing, equipping, supplying, and moving our own armies, and we must advance money and provide supplies to our allies in accordance with their necessities and our resources. We could not decline if we were disposed, for they are now fighting our battles and we are, with them, under the whole burden. We must never falter nor retrace our steps. Wherever or whenever the end is we must press forward with all our strength, might, minds, and souls. The more vigorously we proceed within the limits of intelligence the sooner will the end be reached.

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF TAX BURDENS.

Some of us are complaining or criticizing because of the enormous taxes that are likely to be imposed. We are apt to consider ourselves as opposed by the legislative or executive departments of the Government, as if they were partisans, seeking to punish or at least unfairly treat the private individual. We do ourselves an injustice by harboring such thoughts. We can rightfully claim that the burden of taxation be equitably distributed; that all the people, after exempting the necessities of life, shall be compelled to contribute; and that there shall be no waste or extravagance in making expenditures. If possible taxes ought to be so levied and distributed as to avoid clogging the channels of business prosperity. All this we may properly demand. Equitable distribution is fair and reasonable, and it makes all pecuniarily interested in the subject, including both the collection and the expenditure of the taxes levied. Less than this would tend to create classes—the worst thing for any country.

Now is the time to unite the whole country in a common cause. The soldiers are on a level as they ought to be. All others should be on a level. Classes should be obliterated and also politics, localities, and religious differences during war times at least. Opportunity should be open to all; governmental burdens should be borne by all. With such an administration of governmental affairs we should be satisfied, however severe the drafts which are made upon us or upon the larger interests which we represent.

I lately spent a few days in Washington, and it was my privilege to meet a number of men who in legislative halls or executive departments are serving their country; and it is certain that all are actuated by the motive to fairly represent and protect the best interests of the country and all the people. Individuals are not influenced by politics. There are and will be differences of opinion concerning the various questions presented, as a matter of course, but these will be adjusted and the legislation finally passed will represent an honest endeavor to do what is proper.

GOVERNMENT IS COOPERATING WITH BUSINESS.

You have heard some criticism concerning the conduct of the Government's business affairs. It has been said that confusion or at least lack of system or cooperation sometimes appears; but it must be remembered that there has been suddenly thrust upon the Government officials an enormous amount of business, extraordinary in volume and character, and the strength and capacity of all are taxed to the utmost and often beyond physical endurance. Besides, rules of law or of departments established to fit other conditions sometimes appear and prevent the exercise of judgment which would bring better results if more latitude were permitted. Officials in Washington are entitled to credit and praise for their management under existing circumstances, and so far I believe there is no just ground for severe criticism.

And then there is a disposition on the part of Government officials to cooperate with the business men in promoting the welfare of the country. This is what all of us have desired and advocated, and now we will probably have as much opportunity in this direction as we have ever desired. Just what will be the result in all the ramifications of the business involved remains to be seen. To the extent that the directors of this institute have been personally connected with these matters they have been well satisfied, except perhaps as to some of the prices in question.

Mr. B. M. Baruch, chairman committee on raw materials, minerals, and metals of the advisory commission of the Counsel of National Defense, writing for himself and the Secretary of War, and also representing the Secretary of the Navy, requested your president to act as chairman and to appoint other members of a committee on steel and steel products to cooperate with the Government; whereupon the matter was brought before the directors of this institute, and such a committee was designated, consisting of the following:

Elbert H. Gary (chairman), James A. Farrell (vice chairman), James A. Burden, E. A. S. Clarke, Alva C. Dinkey, Willis L. King, Charles M. Schwab, and John A. Topping.

The general committee has appointed subcommittees as follows:

For ascertaining capacities and supervising allotments of orders to manufacturers: James A. Farrell, E. A. S. Clarke, J. A. Topping, and E. H. Gary, ex officio.

On alloys: J. A. Farrell, E. A. S. Clarke, A. A. Fowler, E. G. Grace, E. J. Lavino, and E. H. Gary, ex officio.

On iron ore, pig iron, and transportation: H. G. Dalton, Frank Richards, Harry Coulby, George T. Dyer, W. T. Shepard, A. H. Woodward, Leonard Peckitt, Frank Billings, and Amos Mather, secretary.

On sheet steel: W. S. Horner, Charles Hadley, and Walter Carroll.

On scrap iron and steel: Eli Joseph, Samuel Deutsch, Vernon Phillips, and Joseph Michaels.

On pig tin: John Hughes, E. R. Crawford, and Edwin Groves.

On tin plate: J. I. Andrews, E. R. Crawford, and E. T. Weir.

On tubular products: James A. Campbell (chairman). Other members to be appointed. Possibly other committees.

The committees meet regularly and are devoting much time to the work involved.

They have, with other work, been engaged in mobilizing the resources of the different producers of steel, such as the Government requires for its purposes, and the statistics are in the possession of the secretary of this institute.

The Secretary of the Navy submitted a program for 1917 for plates, structural shapes, and bars needed for ships, and after considerable negotiation contracts were closed in behalf of the producers on the basis of $2.90 for plates and $2.50 for structural shapes and bars. We were of the opinion that in view of present costs and other conditions we should receive larger prices, but in the spirit I have referred to the proposition of the Government was accepted. As costs of production are advancing on account of increases in wages, taxes, prices of certain raw materials, and so forth, it is expected the Government will be willing to increase its purchasing prices accordingly.

IRON AND STEEL FRATERNITY PATRIOTIC.

The iron and steel fraternity, represented by this institute, will be actuated by the highest conception of patriotic duty with respect to the requirements of the Government. We will cheerfully bear our full share of the load which must be carried until there is realized a complete triumph over the hosts of aggressive, desperate, and inhuman autocracy. Personal interests will yield to the necessities of the country we love.

Free Speech and Free Press.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD E. BROWNE,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 31, 1917.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I am a firm believer in freedom of speech and of the press. Free speech and freedom of the press are essential to democracy. I am opposed to section 4 of this bill, because I believe it to be an unjustifiable assault upon the rights and integrity of the press and the American people. Freedom of speech and of the press was realized after years of valiant fighting. In England King James denied the right of freedom of speech even in the Parliament. The American Colonies were denied freedom of speech, which was one of their greatest grievances against the English Government.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY AND FREEDOM OF SPEECH GUARANTEED.

The first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, proposed at the first session of the First Congress, on March 4, 1789, reads as follows:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.

The makers of the Constitution regarded freedom of speech and of the press as of such great importance to a free people in the maintenance of their freedom that they placed the right of freedom of speech and of the press beside the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. If we give the President of the United States the right to interfere with one of these great fundamental rights, what assurance have we that some other Congress will not give some other President the right to interfere with freedom of worship?

NO PERSON SHOULD BE GIVEN THE POWER OF CENSORING THE PRESS.

No man, in my opinion, is great enough, wise enough, or just enough to say how 100,000,000 free people shall speak or write. Since I have been a Member of this Congress I have consistently voted against every measure that in the slightest way interfered with freedom of speech or of the press, these great bulwarks of liberty. Under existing laws any man that writes or speaks falsely about another can be punished, imprisoned, or made to respond in damages, but the truth can always be pleaded as a defense.

EXECUTIVE NOW HAS SUFFICIENT POWER.

In times of war the President, by Executive order, can suppress news or facts concerning the position of our troops and the movement of our fleets. This was repeatedly done during the War between the States. In 1835 there was an attempt to exclude abolitionist literature from the mails by the Postmaster General, but the Postmaster General's orders were quickly set aside as conflicting with the provision of the Constitution guaranteeing freedom of speech and of the press. It is well settled that war does not suspend the provisions of the Constitution. In times of war freedom of the press is of more importance than in times of peace.

FREEDOM OF PRESS IN TIMES OF WAR.

In times of war the powers of the Government are necessarily centralized and placed in the hands of a few persons. The President of the United States has already been given the right to conscript or take any male citizen between the ages of 21 and 31 years of age and send him to the trenches of Europe. The President and the Secretary of the Treasury have already been given $7,000,000,000 in bonds of the United States to carry on the war. The President will soon be given the power to fix prices, take over food supplies, warehouses, manufacturing plants, and any other business that he may deem necessary to successfully carry on the war. All the resources of the United States are at the disposal of the President. The President can personally exercise only a comparatively small number of the powers delegated to him. He will, of course, have to delegate these powers to others and they in turn will have to delegate these powers to subordinates. The President will do his very best to delegate these powers to able, wise, honest, and capable men. Human judgment, however, is not infallible, and some of these men and their subordinates who are given great power may be inefficient, may not be honest, may not be men of sound judgment. Is it wise to place in the hands of any man such tremendous powers and then be prevented on penalty of severe punishment from discussing or commenting upon his policies or his acts? True, President Wilson wrote in his letter to Arthur Brisbane. of the New York Evening Journal, "that he does not intend to curb patriotic criticism." What is patriotic criticism? What facts should be disclosed would always be a question of doubt and a great portion of the press of the country would not dare to state the facts. The press would be intimidated from fear of criminal prosecution by the Government.

Already the Official Bulletin, a daily publication, is being issued, authorized under the Executive order of the President, edited by George Creel, chairman of a committee composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy. Whether it is the intention that this Bulletin should take the place, so far as official news is concerned, of our great free press, and whether the newspapers of the United States will be limited in the publication of the war news and matters pertaining to the way the Government is being administered to what appears in this Bulletin, published by the Executive order of the President, we have not yet been informed. We can only infer when we consider this new venture of the Government in the newspaper business in connection with the proposed bill, which limits and circumscribes the freedom of the press.

CENSORSHIP A WEAPON OF AUTOCRACY.

It has been truthfully said, "The cure for the weakness of democracy is more democracy." A republic flourishes on criticism, while a monarchy withers. President Wilson has said, "We are in this war to make the world safe for democracy." Press censorship under provost guard is the ancient and highly prized weapon of autocracy. If this bill should become a law, place holders and bureaucrats will determine what is and what is not a crime in this country. This is a people's Government. The people are furnishing the men and the money and making the sacrifices that must be made to wage a successful war. The people have a right to know in every detail what their servants, what those in authority, are doing. If a transport carrying troops across the Atlantic is sunk, if a campaign is successful or unsuccessful, the people should know it. Any attempt to prevent criticism in the public press on the momentous issues at stake can not but result disastrously.

Public opinion is always the greatest safeguard to a nation in a crisis. A sound public opinion can not be formed unless the people have access to the facts as they exist. If any government acts upon facts that have been molded or shaped by those in power, its judgment is worthless. Inefficiency and incompetency can hide with complacency behind censorship laws. There can be no harm in the public having the right to criticize military operations that are a failure, or officials who have made mistakes, for it is through honest and just criticism that mistakes are remedied and frequently turned to victories.

ENGLAND'S MISTAKE.

Are we to profit by the mistakes of England? Lord Northcliffe, one of the ablest English statesmen, has denounced the censorship law of England, and says:

It has been a grave mischief maker, it has delayed preparedness, covered up disasters, shielded incompetent leaders, and caused England defeats on the battle field.

Lord Beresford declares:

The censorship of the press has concealed from the people of England the extent of their shipping losses and has kept the nation from practicing food economy, and is wholly responsible for the food situation.

Shall we repeat England's most disastrous blunder?

British censorship delayed the manufacture of high explosives many months. Russian censorship concealed the defective ammunitions and lack of ammunitions which led to the early defeats of Russia and the loss of over 1,000,000 men. It also concealed the intrigue of the Czar and his treachery to the Russian cause.

Democratic form of government is based upon the doctrine that the combined intellect, wisdom, and honesty of the whole people is greater and more trustworthy than that of any one individual or coterie of individuals. If this is true in times of peace, it is equally true in times of war. If the American people are unable to obtain, on account of the censorship of the press, the facts, it will be impossible for them to exercise their combined wisdom and good judgment.

ALIEN AND SEDITION LAWS.

The alien and sedition laws provided that the President could, unrestrained, order out of the country any foreign-born person he might consider dangerous, and it was made a crime, punishable by imprisonment, to publish any scandalous or malicious criticism of the Government of the United States or the Congress or the President of the United States. This was not very much more drastic than the law proposed here. The alien and sedition laws were passed by the Federalist Party, and this party was swept from power forever by the indignant people and these tyrannical laws were repealed.

From the time of the Reformation until the Commonwealth, the English press was subject to censorship under direction of the Crown. Upon restoration of the Stuarts the old censorship was again restored. Steel and Defoe were punished for violating the law censoring the press. Until 1729 newspaper reports of parliamentary proceedings were unknown. The House of Commons held that it was a breach of privilege as it tended to make members answerable to their constituencies. The real liberty of the English press dates from the passage of the Fox Libel Act of 1792, which enacted that the decision in all libel suits belonged to the jury and not to the judge. This reversed the rule which the courts had acted upon for many years.

If we pass this bill we will strike a blow at a great fundamental right, a right that all freemen believed in even before bills of rights or written constitutions were promulgated.

Memorial Day Address of Gen. Isaac R. Sherwood at Arlington National Cemetery May 30, 1917.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY Z. OSBORNE,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, May 31, 1917.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the patriotic, poetic, and eloquent oration of our distinguished colleague, Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Ohio, delivered at the Memorial Day exercises at Arlington National Cemetery on May 30, 1917.

Delivered from the same platform from which the President of the United States made his memorable address, this remarkable oration, made by a man who may be regarded as a type of the highest class of American citizenship, who in his young manhood performed four long years of arduous war-like service, choosing for himself the humble station of a private soldier and successively advanced by his superior officers by reason of his fidelity, intelligence, and courage, grade by grade, to the rank of brigadier general of the United States Army, is well deserving of a public and permanent record. It is an expression of high and lofty patriotism. In future years we and our successors may refer to this oration as one of the many gems of patriotic thought, emanating from a soldier, a patriot, and a statesman beloved by his comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, venerated and respected by the people of the country, and held in sincere affection and high esteem by all his colleagues of the House of Representative, Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Ohio.

MEMORIAL ADDRESS DELIVERED BY GEN. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD IN ARLINGTON CEMETERY, MAY 30, 1917.

Let me express my deep appreciation of the honor in the call to follow our great President in this sacred memorial service. Especially do I appreciate the gracious privilege of facing this magnificent audience in this beautiful sylvan temple in immortal Arlington.

We are to-day a great continental Republic, the strongest and most commanding around the world. We have demonstrated during a century and a quarter of memorable history the potency for universal good of a realized democracy. We are now in the midst of the greatest and most destructive war the world has ever witnessed. What the end will be we do not know. But as the leading factor of Christian civilization, we owe it to ourselves and to those warring millions across the steely seas to do our part to lead and light the way to a world-wide democracy and a world-wide enduring peace.

Our own home poet, Justice Wendell Phillips Stafford, of the District of Columbia, has given us an inspiration in heroic verse. I quote three couplets from his poem of April 29 last:

Hail, France, whose bloody travail
Has brought again to birth
The soul that made the Marseillaise
The trumpet of the earth!

Hail to the starry banner
Above Westminster walls,
And her anthem, rolled with the prayers of old
Through the arches of St. Paul's!

Fight on, free lands, for freedom—
Freedom in every blow—
The freedom we bear they too will share
Against whose gates we go.

And every veteran of our great war from 1861 to 1865 will hope and pray that our flag, invincible, of the 48 shining stars of States, will become the beacon light and hope to all the smuggled souls, yearning for a realized liberty, across the Atlantic.

It is timely here to quote from that valiant soldier, the most eloquent orator of the great Civil War, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll:

A vision of the future rises. I see a world where thrones have crumbled and where kings are dust. I see empires where the aristocracy of idleness has perished from the earth. As I look life lengthens, joy deepens, love canopies the earth and over all in the great dome shines the eternal star of human hope.

It is the mission of our armies to-day to make the European world safe for all peoples struggling for democracy.

I do not forget that we stand in the sacred presence of Arlington, the greatest silent city of the heroics on this continent. As we look over this spreading sea of graves let us not forget the sacrifice, the valor, the all-pervading patriotism that symbolizes the glorious mission of Arlington. Silent Arlington, but vocal to-day with the alluring songs of a heroic epoch.

Six years ago the poet of the Grand Army, Kate Brownlee Sherwood, dedicated a poem to Arlington. I quote three couplets:

O, age of voiceless miracles! of sentient thought that brings
The angels of diviner force with healing on their wings!
And snowy fleets that sail the seas and ships that sail the air,
Bear witness that the rule of right is coming everywhere.

Ah, you whose eyes are wet with tears, who move with solemn tread,
To crown with flowers of memory your dear remembered dead;
Not on the piercing monoliths, nor craven tomb, nor crest,
But o'er the sea of nameless graves let pity, lingering, rest.

A pity kin to victory! lo, grateful millions come
Like pilgrims to a holy shrine, with choral chant and drum;
Their sentinels keep watch and ward from rising sun to sun,
And guard with reverent care the flag that floats o'er Arlington.

Everywhere to-day throughout this land Memorial Day is celebrated with more sentiment, more pathos, than any day since Appomattox. We strew the most fragrant flowers of ripened May in Arlington. Not only in Arlington but everywhere throughout this broad land to-day are tender hands in the pathos of an all-pervading love, strewing the choicest flowers of spring over the graves of our hero dead. And yet there are hundreds of secluded spots in the far-off South where a forward soldier fell on the picket line or in the advance who sleeps in an uncoffined grave. But even here gentle nature is kindly, and in some secluded nook where a brave comrade turned the last green sod with a bayonet over his unshrouded form, the snowy magnolia will diffuse a sweeter balm and the wild passion flower, winding its sweet tendrils in the waving grasses, will gather tears beneath the Stars and shed them in the sunlight.

Nothing new can be said of the great war that made Arlington possible. History has said its last word.

But the thought comes to me that there are ideas of that war that no orator or prophet of human destiny has ever exploited on Memorial Day. I refer to the heroic literature that the war inspired. It is far different in tone and flavor from any other war in all history. To illustrate: Ours is the only war in all history where the men behind the guns, on the march, in camps, or around the fires of the bivouac sang patriotic songs of their own composition. When the storm burst, the finger of God dropped the plummet into the dead sea of all past endeavors, and with the overflow came new hopes and new ambitions. The genius of the Nation rose above the level plane of prose, into the higher altitudes of inspired song. This is why our chief heroic literature of value is our war songs. This accounts for the fact that aside from Lincoln's Gettysburg oration and Edward Everett Hale's "A Man Without a Country," and a few notable efforts by Henry Ward Beecher and Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, our war poets have made the deepest and most lasting impression upon the heroic history of the conflict. These heart-stirring songs, inspired and put into melody by the boys in blue behind the guns were sung in chorus of fife and drum to lift the gloom of the dark night camps from rocky-face mountain to Atlanta and from Atlanta to the Sea, from Washington to Richmond and Appomattox, and from Savannah up through the piney woods of North Carolina to the final surrender at Raleigh.

Is it not worthy of mention that over a half century has elapsed since the war and not one stirring patriotic song of national import has been written in all these eventful years? In a Republic like ours it seems incredible that no poet has given to the world an epic of the great conflict—the fiercest and longest enduring of modern times. And it is still more incredible that none of the famous antislavery poets of the decade of fierce contention preceding the war, except Whittier, wrote any of our stirring war songs. And yet no war ever afflicted any country where the patriotic song writers were so potent in creating martial fervor.

To-day when the Nation is stirred to its profoundest depths by the presence of impending war, we are going back for half a century and beyond to find one song of stirring patriotism. And I must say it, because it is true, that the country owes a debt of the deepest gratitude to the Grand Army of the Republic and the Loyal Legion for keeping alive and aflame these old war songs. At every soldiers' reunion, at every camp fire, in every post room, and in every State and National encampment of the Grand Army, and every local and State and National commandery of the Loyal Legion we have been singing these old war songs. Nothing has been written for a half century to be worthy of comparison with Sheridan's Ride, by our Ohio poet Thomas Buchanan Read. It has more dash and spirit than Lord Tennyson's Charge of the Light Brigade. No lyric with the inspiration and high ethical quality of Julia Ward Howe's Battle Hymn of the Republic has ever thrilled the Nation in all the years since the war. No song was ever sung in camp or bivouac or concert hall with the deep pathos and plaintive sentiment of Tenting To-night on the Old Camp Ground, written by a private soldier one lonesome night on the Chickahominy River—Arthur Kettridge, of New Hampshire. No song has been written or sung since the war that has enlivened lurid memory with prophecy as the musical gem John Brown's Body, adapted by Col. Fletcher Webster, of the Twelfth Massachusetts regiment in 1861, son of the great ante bellum statesman, Daniel Webster. No rallying war song was ever written equal to We are Coming Father Abraham Three Hundred Thousand More, by Stephen J. Adams, of Massachusetts. No poet has ever written a poem of equal dramatic power as Walt Whitman's Bugle Call to Arms, the greatest of the war period. No war poet ever wrote a braver poem than Edmund C. Stedham wrote in 1862, when the country was looking for a successful general to command the Army of the Potomac. The title Give Us a Man. Lincoln was deeply impressed with this poem and read it at a formal meeting of his Cabinet. No soldier or patriot or poet ever wrote a war ode so full of human sympathy and genuine soldier spirit as We Have Drunk from the Same Canteen, by Col. Charles G. Halpine, who commanded the Irish Brigade of the Army of the Potomac.

Some of the most pathetic poems of the war came from the South. They became current in the North without the singers knowing their southern origin. Among the most beautiful is Somebody's Darling, written by Marie La Costa, of Virginia. It is so universal in sentiment that it may well serve as the mother cry of all war-cursed peoples.

Three other dramatic poems of fervid eloquence and power are worthy a place in heroic history—The Conquered Banner, by Father Ryan, of Mobile, Ala., and Maryland, My Maryland, by James R. Randall, of Maryland and Louisiana.

On Memorial Day in 1867 a patriotic group of splendid southern women at Columbus, Miss., scattered flowers upon the graves of Confederate and Union soldiers alike. This was the inspiration for one of the finest poetic gems in the literature of patriotism. It is entitled "The Blue and the Gray," by Francis Miles Finch. I quote the last couplet:

No more shall the war cry sever
Or the winding rivers be red;
They banish our anger forever
When they laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day—
Under the roses the Blue,
Under the lilies the Gray.

And what have we been singing since the war? Hundreds of frivolous songs, popular for a time, and then forgotten. Not one with a moral worth a bar of soap or a bar of music; not one with the tone and flavor of an enduring patriotic sentiment; not one that lived a year in public favor; not one worth singing now. Let me mention a few:

Captain Jinks and the Horse Marines.
There'll be a Hot Time in the Old Town To-night.
How Dry I Am.
Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here.
O, You Beautiful Doll.
Don't Make Those Goo-Goo Eyes at Me.
When I Walk with Billy.

Not only must we go back a half century to find an inspiration for heroic deeds in the poetic literature of patriotism, but a hundred years to find its most thrilling and commanding expression. I refer to the Star-Spangled Banner, written by Francis Scott Key, a local lawyer of Frederick, Md., in 1814. The music is from Anacreon in Heaven, written by John Stafford Smith, of London, England, in 1772, first sung in a Baltimore tavern by Ferdinand Durang, a Scotch actor.

It was poems like these lyrics of war that gave hope and courage to the boys in the trenches and around the flickering lights of the bivouac fires, when grief and anguish sat speechless around every northern and southern fireside.

There never was a war like our great four years' war, and there never will be another. There never was a war that produced the tone and flavor and quality of its literature. There never was a war where the people, the men and women at home and behind the army, were so fierce and aglow with fervent and all-pervading patriotism. There never was a war where so many war songs were inspired and where so many soldiers voiced in song the inspiration of the war poets.

It is Mazzini, the greatest of Italian patriots, who says:

The angel of martyrdom and the angel of victory are brothers. The one looks up from earth and the other looks down from heaven, and it is only from epoch to epoch that their glance meets between earth and heaven, that creation is embellished with a new life and a people arises evangelist or prophet from the cradle or the tomb.

Was not this a grander epoch for us and for all humanity when the war clouds lifted above the last crimson battle field and the angel of peace came forth in robes of white to greet the angel of martyrdom and the angel of victory?

A great historic poem is now due. Some near-by day, let us hope and pray, some prescient genius of America will arise and sing of this, the most memorable struggle for national unity of all the ages, linking Vicksburg and Gettysburg, Atlanta and Chickamauga, Nashville and Appomattox into a grand epic.

This beautiful flag that floats over Arlington to-day and streams in triumph and glory over a hundred millions of people has a desperate history. A half century ago nearly half its stars were shot out of the blue canton and its tattered folds were dripping and crimsoned with the best blood of the Nation; but when the struggle ended the angel of peace sat crowned in light above its bronze-tipped pinion and liberty had thrown aside her crown of thorns and stood radiant and beautiful beside her.

Triumphant, immortal Arlington, vocal to-day with the songs of patriotism and fragrant with the most gracious floral tributes of loving hearts! We are here to pay reverent and grateful homage to the gallant soldiers and wisely imbued statesmen who a half century ago in the battle front and councils, sage and prophetic, made possible the greatest Republic around the world.

International Confederation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. M. CLYDE KELLY,
OF PENNSYLVANIA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a letter from the secretary of the late Dr. J. Leonard Levy, of Pittsburgh, who was for many years pastor of the Rodef Shalom Congregation of that city. With the letter was inclosed one written by Dr. Levy some days before his death and addressed to myself. The letter was as follows:

The Hon. M. CLYDE KELLY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KELLY: Inclosed you will find an article by the Hon. David Lubin, on a subject exceedingly interesting and timely. Will you oblige me and present this for publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so that it may be issued as a public document?

You probably know of Mr. Lubin and his work, and you therefore realize how interesting such a subject as an International Confederation, coming from his pen, is likely to prove to many millions of our fellow citizens. I am entirely innocent of the method of procedure and I shall thank you to add such introductory words as may be necessary to put the article in such form as shall secure for it the right to be printed as a public document. As soon as you have received leave to print, I shall feel greatly obliged to you if you will drop me a line so that I may apprise Mr. Lubin of your courteous action.

Very truly, yours, J. LEONARD LEVY.

Mr. Speaker, within a few days after that letter was written, the entire Pittsburgh community, which knew and loved Rabbi Levy, was shocked by the announcement of his death from pneumonia after an illness of but a few days.

It is with sadness that I carry out his request and print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this article on the subject closest to the heart of this gifted, sympathetic champion of universal brotherhood and lasting peace. I was fortunate in having his friendship. To know him was to understand why he was loved with an intensity of affection seldom accorded to any man. Many times I have heard him earnestly pleading the cause of the humble and distressed. Many times I have seen him give generously of his time and means for the uplift of the helpless and downtrodden.

Dr. Levy had a strength of character, a broadness of vision, a power of eloquent expression which made him a power not only in his local field but throughout the Nation. Besides his religious duties he was a lecturer, an author, a linguist, a civic champion, and a world traveler.

In two continents Dr. Levy worked and prayed and hoped for the freedom of humanity. He abhorred war with its cruelty and waste and horrors, and he cherished peace with all the power of his great heart and soul.

But when America entered the war for democracy, this champion of freedom showed his patriotism, true and undivided. He flung himself into the needed welfare work for America at war, and he gave himself unsparingly, prodigally. While cherishing peace, he cherished democracy and justice more. More than he hated war he hated the autocracy which makes lasting peace impossible. And he gave himself a martyr to the cause of America and world freedom.

In his death Jewry has been bereft of a magnificent leader, America has lost an exemplary citizen, and the world has lost a brilliant champion of the rights of humanity.

It is significant of the life of this devoted, unselfish friend of man, regardless of race or nation or creed, that his last request, perhaps, was for the publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of a plan for the world-wide brotherhood for which he labored faithfully, but whose fruition he could not live to see.

The article by David Lubin is as follows:

AN INTERNATIONAL CONFEDERATION—PERMANENT PEACE UNDER A CONSTITUTION.

ROME, ITALY, February 14, 1917.

Dr. J. LEONARD LEVY,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Your communication of December 13, in which you ask me for an article on the peace question has been received. Your request is, no doubt, prompted by our conversations on the subject during my summer vacation last year.

First of all, I am reminded of the fact that some nine years ago I attended an international peace conference held in London. At one of the sessions I was introduced to two charming people, prominent peace advocates of Boston. It was in the early days of the International Institute of Agriculture, and I wished them to see in the institute and in the idea it stood for the nucleus of an international economic parliament, the germ whence a future world peace confederation might arise.

During the intervals of the session we talked over these matters, and in the evening we met again. My friends suggested that I should accompany them on a visit to the noted pacifist, Mr. William Stead, to which I gladly assented. This led to an exchange of views on the means likely to insure an enduring world peace.

I will now endeavor to set forth the substance of this and of similar conversations and correspondence which I have had from time to time, and I will do so in the form of a dialogue. I believe this form will best lend itself to the presentation I wish to make. With this explanation as a preliminary, I will begin my paper by introducing the speakers: Smith, an advocate of disarmament; Jones, an opponent; and White, a critic.

JONES. Am I to understand, Mr. Smith, that your proposed disarmament is to bring about permanent peace?

SMITH. Yes; disarmament and the peace tribunal.

JONES. How would you bring this disarmament about? What should be the mode of procedure?

SMITH. It is largely a matter of education. We peace advocates of the United States, for instance, have a strong propaganda under way for the disarmament of the United States, to begin with. Peace advocates are doing the same kind of work in other countries, and so, in the course of time, there will be a sufficient number of nations won over to form a preponderating world force in favor of an international treaty for world disarmament.

JONES. Primarily, though, you start by an endeavor to disarm this country. Can you get that done?

SMITH. We are very hopeful; in fact, up to the beginning of the present European war we had made considerable headway in that direction.

JONES. Yes; I know you had. But is it not possible that in proportion as this propaganda was making greater headway here than in other countries you were to that extent weakening the United States and strengthening those other countries?

SMITH. There could be but one answer to that question, an affirmative, were it not so patent that the rest of the world was as anxiously seeking peace as was the United States, for witness the eagerness of the nations to hurry their adherence to The Hague Peace Tribunal.

JONES. Yes; the adherence was prompt enough. But that answers nothing, for right upon the heels of this adherence were they not arming and drilling on a greater scale than ever before in the history of the world? Does it not therefore follow that this disarmament propaganda is impracticable, in fact, mischievous?

SMITH. What plan would you then propose?

JONES. I have no plan; I do not think that any scheme for permanent international peace is practicable.

WHITE. I am inclined to believe that such a conclusion is too dogmatic. We see that there is progressive development in human affairs, so why should there not be progress on the lines of international peace relations?

JONES. Am I to understand, then, that you favor the disarmament program of Mr. Smith?

WHITE. By no means; I believe with you that the disarmament program is impracticable and mischievous. It seems to me that its main defect consists in mistaking an effect for a cause. It takes armament to be a cause instead of taking it as an effect. I think that the first practical step should be the formation by the democracies of the world of an international confederation, a confederation for the maintenance of permanent international peace.

SMITH. This seems to me like straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. Would it not be more practicable to attain the end in view by disarmament rather than by attempting the formation of an international confederation?

WHITE. Well, let us see. At first glance it would seem that armaments are the cause of the war and that disarmament, by removing the cause, would result in peace. But is this the case? Is not armament an effect rather than a cause, an effect of a state of mind? But what mind, whose mind? Clearly the mind of governments, for have not governments minds? Do not these minds run through the whole gamut of political qualities? Do not the forms of government vary from a pure democracy, when the mind of the government is formed and directed by the collective will of the people, down to the extremes of autocracy, when its mind is the will of the individual at the head of the state?

In a democracy the government is formed and directed by the people; in an autocracy the autocrat claims to be sovereign. And what is an autocratic sovereign? The dictionary tells us that a sovereign is one who exercises supreme authority, absolute control. He is the supreme power in the state; the original, absolute, and universal power by which all persons and things in a state are controlled and determined. He exercises supreme jurisdiction and power, he claims to be subject to none.

JONES. Subject to none? Do you mean to say that there are no qualifications: that he exercises supreme authority, absolute control: that he is subject to no one? Are these not the qualities which we attribute to God?

WHITE. Yes; and more; for while God is all powerful for good, this autocratic sovereign is, besides, all powerful for evil. This assumption of omnipotence is graphically imaged in the Bible when it ironically places in the mouth of such a sovereign the words: "I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High." Now, what concerted effort for disarmament can there be between powers of this kind and democracies? Are they not essentially incongruous and incompatible? Can such fundamentally incongruous forces be lastingly welded under treaties for disarmament?

SMITH. Why not, pray?

WHITE. Well, let us see; let us first take up the stand of autocracy. Here are a few quotations from well-known authors which I have noted down. Apply them to past and present day experiences; then judge whether there be ground for my statement.

The first is from Hegel: "Not only must the State be obeyed; it must be venerated as a God." "Success insured by might is the measure of right."

Treitschke says: "Weak nations have no right to existence, and must be absorbed by powerful nations." "The essence of a State is power. Nothing exists or can exist which is superior to the State."

Again, Adolphus Lassen declares: "The State can do no wrong." "The observance of treaties is not a matter of duty but of advantage."

And von Bernhardi says. "Love God above all things, and 'thy neighbor as thyself.' This law can claim no significance for the relations of one country to another." "There never has been, and never will be, universal rights of men."

Annston Chamberlain says: "Militarism is the indispensable instrument of German culture; it builds its brightest hopes of supremacy on the extermination of others."

And Nietzsche says: "Morality is a symptom of decadence." "War is as necessary to the State as slavery is to society." "Might is the source of right." "There is no right other than that of theft, usurpation, and violence."

How radically different the words of Scripture:

"Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees and that write grievousness which they have prescribed."

"Thus saith the Lord: Keep ye judgment, and do justice."

"And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness, quietness, and assurance forever."

Now let us take up the stand of democracy. The President aptly sets forth this stand in his speech of January 23 to the Senate, when he says:

"Inviolable security of life, of worship, and of industrial and social development should be guaranteed to all peoples."

"The equality of nations upon which peace must be founded, if it is to last, must be an equality of rights; the guaranties exchanged must either recognize or imply a difference between big nations and small, between those that are powerful and those that are weak."

"Governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed."

We thus see that conciliatory efforts for permanent peace through disarmament between such incongruous and incompatible factors as democracies and autocracies must not alone be futile but highly dangerous to democracies. It seems that a clearly marked dividing line must be drawn between these two factors, between democracies on the one hand, and autocracies on the other. The day for measuring strength, the day for lining up forces has come, and the first practical step toward permanent international peace will be taken whenever the democracies shall make a united effort toward that end.

JONES. What you have just said, Mr. White, reminds me of the following Scripture text:

"And before Him shall be gathered all nations, and He shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

"And He shall set the sheep on the right hand but the goats on the left."

WHITE. Yes; that is it; the democracies on the one hand and the autocracies on the other.

SMITH. But what should be the mode of procedure? Have you a plan?

WHITE. No; at present nothing more definite than what has been brought out by our discussion—a confederation of the democracies. I would, however, suggest that we continue and see whether the logic of the case does not point to such a confederation as the most practical means of securing and maintaining permanent international peace.

SMITH. I believe we should all be pleased to have you proceed.

WHITE. As I see it now, I would say that the first thing to be done will be to issue a call for an international convention of the democracies for the purpose of drawing up a constitution for an international confederation. This constitution should be on simple and elemental lines, with limited powers, all for the purpose of maintaining permanent international peace. When the constitution thus drawn up shall have been ratified by the nations concerned, delegates would be designated who would proceed to the place of meeting to begin their labor as an international body.

JONES. What would be the powers and functions of the delegates?

WHITE. Their powers would be specified and limited by the constitution. Their functions could be of threefold character—legislative, executive, and juridical.

SMITH. Why an international constitution? Do you not mean a treaty?

WHITE. No; I do not mean a treaty; I mean a constitution, for a constitution would provide for a permanent international body for international action. Moreover, a constitution voted on by the people and ratified by the Government of an adhering nation would be more binding than a treaty.

JONES. Are we to understand that this international confederation would stand for disarmament?

WHITE. No; not for disarmament. On the contrary, there would be a normal average armament, which the adhering nations would be required to keep up, and under certain conditions this normal would be increased.

JONES. What would this increase be for? Would it be for purposes of defense against members of the confederation?

WHITE. As a rule, no. The increase would be for protection against militantly aggressive nations outside of the confederation.

JONES. But supposing the nations outside the confederation were much more powerful than the confederated?

WHITE. In that event it would indicate that the time had not yet come for the proposed confederation.

JONES. Supposing we grant that a sufficient number of nations are ready to adhere; among them, on the one hand, Great Britain with her navy and the United States with its military resources and financial strength, and, on the other hand, countries less efficient from a military standpoint, countries such as the South American Republics and China. Would not the burdens and the benefits of such a confederation be unequally distributed?

WHITE. As just stated by you, yes. But the case need not stand thus. Each of the adhering nations could contribute a just and adequate quota to the total military strength of the confederation, partly in money, partly in territorial strategic advantages, partly in man power, and partly in actual and potential military and industrial resources. In this manner there could be a systematic, adequate, and just contribution by all the nations concerned.

Let us take China, for instance. Of late years we have heard much talk of the "yellow peril," seemingly a formidable cry, but one which deserves qualification. From remote times China has selected the units forming her governing body on qualifications of learning. This has rendered China by temper and inclination one of the world's great apostles of peace. In fact, China has always been, as it were, a democracy in the making. But the fact should not be overlooked that China possesses the elements that go to make military strength of a high order, potential strength, which is now dormant, but which could be awakened and brought into play. She is strong in man power, perhaps stronger than any other nation. This man power alone should be sufficient contribution by China for her share of the military strength of the confederation.

JONES. I am inclined to agree with what has just been said; indeed, it occurs to me that an additional consideration may be added. The present war has made plain that military unpreparedness is a costly luxury, doubling, trebling, and quadrupling what the cost of a scientific preparedness would be during times of peace. The proposed confederation, as I understand it, is intended to provide a continuous, systematic, scientific, and efficient mode of adequate military preparation. Such preparation would entail very much less expenditure in money and effort on the part of each of the units of the confederation than heretofore, and yet would be much more effective for the purposes of any combat which might arise than would be possible otherwise.

SMITH. Would there be any disadvantage in not being a member?

WHITE. Yes; for the confederation would standardize the character and degree of armament. It would determine a normal ratio of armament for each nation, whether in the confederation or not. When that normal would be exceeded the offending country would be subject to certain penalties to be imposed by the confederation. These penalties would be of a restrictive and coercive nature, mainly in the form of special duties on imports from the offending country, special harbor dues, special taxes on persons and property, etc.

The funds thus obtained would be employed to increase the armament of the confederation up to a fixed relative standard. In other words, offending nations outside of the confederation would thus be made to contribute to the cost of such forced increase.

JONES. Would autocracies be permitted to join the confederation?

WHITE. Yes; indeed, their adherence should be welcomed, for by having its people vote for and its government ratify the international constitution, by joining the confederation an autocracy would thereby cease to be an autocracy in so far as its relations to the other adhering States were concerned.

SMITH. By what means could adherents be made to comply with the provisions of the constitution?

WHITE. Well, that could be done by requiring each of the adhering nations, on joining, to deposit in the treasury of the confederation a guaranty for good faith, said guaranty to be in the shape of a negotiable bond for a given amount which would vary according to the rank of the nation. Charges of failure to comply with the provisions of the constitution would be brought before the juridical body of the confederation, which would decide on the equities of the case and determine the amount of the penalty to be deducted from the bonds held on deposit. Said bonds would then be sold in the open market and would begin to bear interest from the day on which the verdict would be rendered.

JONES. But would such countries as the United States, France, or Great Britain consent to deposit bonds as a guaranty of their good faith? Would not their mere ratification be sufficient?

WHITE. It appears to me that nations of the standing just named would rather insist upon the deposit of bonds in order to have them serve as a guaranty to insure the good faith of all the other adherents.

JONES. But supposing trouble arose and there was a refusal on the part of some adherents to pay, what means would there be for forcing payment?

WHITE. The bonds, in the first place, could be of such a nature, so secured by collateral, as to insure their interest and principal, thus rendering them negotiable the world over at any time, whether before, during, or after a war. Their negotiable character would render them the guaranty that they are intended to be.

SMITH. But why should the labors of such a confederation be confined to armaments? Why could it not also have under its administrative board departments like those of a national government? In addition to armaments, foreign affairs, war, and the navy, which have already been outlined as within the sphere of the labors of the confederation, why could there not also be international departments of the treasury, of the post office, of agriculture, of commerce, of labor, of transports? Would there not be room for departments like these to deal with the international phases of production and distribution?

WHITE. I think there would be. For instance, the reduced outlay on armaments, rendered possible under the confederation, might permit the formation of a federal or international reserve bank under the department of the treasury of the confederation. In this case each of the adherents could periodically deposit in this bank a sum equivalent to a given proportion of the excess amount of its former military and war expenditure. The funds of this bank could then be used for moving crops, for obviating panics, for regulating international exchanges, for constructing international canals, for reclaiming waste lands, and for other purposes of international public utility.

The International Institute of Agriculture and the International Postal Union are already here, ready to serve the purposes of the confederation, perhaps with added powers and increased duties. Similarly, departments could be formed to deal with the international phases of commerce and of labor, when reciprocal commercial and industrial treaty measures could be placed in their hands, while the department of transports could be intrusted with the international phases of ocean carriage.

However, it might be more advantageous to have the confederation start its work in a very simple and elementary form, so that its routine duties might be more readily mastered. As the work would proceed onward, the capacity for additional service and the benefits to be derived therefrom would become so apparent as to justify expansion, until in time its labors would attain a higher and wider efficiency.

JONES. So, then, with a wave of the hand, as it were, we separate the celestial sheep from the plutonic goats, we line up a united democracy for mortal combat with a disunited autocracy, a democracy united under an international constitution, united not merely by the devices of war but also by the polite arts of law. This united democracy is to set up a normal standard of armament and to give notice to all the world to line up to this normal under penalties for disobedience, penalties so irksome and costly as to cause autocracy to shrink, shrivel, and perish from off the face of the earth.

But wait. Have we not forgotten something? We talk of sovereignty as the attribute of autocracy, but is it not also claimed as the attribute of democracy? Will imperial England ratify a constitution for a confederation of nations? Will she permit the delegates to the legislative body of the confederation to have the final say as to the strength and disposition of her navy? Shall the powerful American Republic be swayed by the delegates of Cuba, of Montenegro, or Peru, or Portugal? A glorious ambition surely, but from a practical approach it is, alas, but a poetical will-o'-the-wisp, a mirage in the desert.

WHITE. It appears to me, Mr. Jones, that you have overlooked the fact that democracies are really autonomous political bodies rather than sovereignties. In a democracy sovereignty is supposed to reside in the people, whereas in autocracy it is vested in the head of the Government; and this makes all the difference in the world.

As for the danger that the delegations of the many minor countries might sway those of the major countries, I think this could be obviated, for the legislative functions of the confederation could be vested in two houses, a house of representatives with a plural vote proportionate to the importance of the country and a senate with a fixed voted for each autonomous power.

JONES. And now that all arguments against the proposal have seemingly been overcome, we are presumably ready to put it into operation. The millenium is here; we are at the outer gate; there is nothing to be done but to knock and enter. But wait a moment, a long moment; yes, wait an age, perhaps several ages before the good time will be here. "A place to stand upon, a rest for a fulcrum, a lever long enough," said Archimedes, "and I will lift the earth." And it is just as difficult to move the world of ideas along at a bound as it would be to find a lever long enough to move the earth. Ideas are shot forth by the hundred, by the thousand, by the million; and yet this staid, old, old, stupid world refuses to change its course. It prefers to keep the slow, even tenor of its ways, as a respectable world should, rather than to jump forward on the spur of the moment toward a prescribed goal, no matter how earnestly it may be argued, coerced, or coaxed to do so.

There is Christianity, for instance, with its beneficent character, its incessant exhortations, its superhuman efforts, and yet its 2,000 years of striving still falls short of the goal, for we are still waiting for the kingdom on earth as it is in Heaven. Surely all this should teach us to be most modest in putting forth ambitious schemes for the uplifting of the world.

SMITH. Is there not undue stress in your criticism of Mr. White's statement? You tell us that in spite of the millions of ideas that are shot forth, "this staid, old, stupid world refuses to change its course." Is this the case? I think not; for as we see development is a weaver employing ideas as warp and woof in weaving the cloth of progress. Now, then, instead of volunteering his presentation as a full-fledged plan, it seems to me that Mr. White's proposal for a confederation of the democracies is rather along the line of a logical outcome, a corollary of our discussion. It would therefore follow that our time may be well spent in continuing our inquiry.

JONES. Well, I must confess that Mr. White's proposed confederation seems reasonable and even logical as an academic proposition; might read well in essay form. This, however, is one thing; but the adoption by the nations is quite another. The world has been jogging along these thousands of years without any such confederation, and we soberly suppose that it would all of a sudden be willing to have forced upon it the thousand and one new and untried problems and precedents to which the adoption of this proposal would be sure to give rise.

SMITH. It seems to me that if your question had been asked in the first half of 1914 the answer would have been a decided "no"; the nations would not have been willing to have these new problems and precedents forced upon them. But can nations give this same answer now, in 1917? I think not, for during this interval has not the world had a most empnatic object lesson?

We talk of the danger of anarchists; we employ skilled detectives to hunt them from hiding place to hiding place; and when ferreted out we forthwith clap them into jail. But what of those archanarchists, the nations, who, armed to the teeth, and through their claim of sovereignty acknowledging no law but their own will, are such an infinitely greater menace to the peace, the welfare, the security of the people of the whole world?

As I have told you, I am one among a large number of advocates of peace through disarmament. Our propaganda, as you know, was much more in evidence before the war. I confess, however, that the war has, as we see, thrown into clear relief many new and perplexing viewpoints important enough to warrant modifications of opinion. I would therefore feel under obligations to Mr. White if he would resume the thread of the discussion.

WHITE. It has been truly pointed out that the proposals for permanent peace which seemed tenable in 1914 are not tenable in 1917. The new and startling events which have occurred demand new solutions. It is obvious to all that the world is no longer what it then was; that time has passed never to return. The problems of 1914 are no longer the problems which confront us in 1917. The world to-day has had an object lesson, as plain as a kindergarten lesson, a lesson understood not merely by the learned but also by the unlearned.

The millions of dead, the hundreds of millions who suffer and who are to suffer, the destruction of the wealth of nations totaling up to hundreds of billions of dollars, all of these and more besides are the bitter fruits, the direct results of uncontrolled, autocratic sovereignty. And all this is by no means the end, for the war is still going on. And supposing the war were to end right now, would that restore conditions as there were? Let us see.

Much surprise was manifested when our Congress had its first billion-dollar session, and, let us bear in mind, that billion dollars was to be expended for the current and peaceful needs of the country. How will it be with the nations after the war, with nations of much more limited financial resource than those of the United States, with nations who will be compelled to provide in their budgets for a billion dollars a year for interest on their war debts before they will be able to set aside a single dollar for their current administrative needs? Will they repudiate? That would lead to trouble. Will they pile tax upon tax? That also would lead to trouble. Will the worker and the peasant rest content to have their unit of wage cut in half or less as the result of taxation and of reduced purchasing power of money?

Such forced reductions may have been accepted by the worker and the peasant of past destructive wars—of the past when worker and peasant had no books to study, no papers to read, when they lived in hovels and were considered to have no spirit and no soul; when the normal dress of the man was an overall, a sheepskin coat, and wooden shoes; when the women wore a one-piece smock dress, went barefooted, and with a kerchief on their heads. But that time has gone, and gone forever. Schools, books, newspapers, travel, and the general freedom of the twentieth century have put an end, a final end, to all that.

Who, then, can say that the mere cessation of the war will bring peace, permanent peace?

And even if sufficient power could be exerted to force a return to the old régime, how long, under such conditions, could peace be maintained? There would then be no more guaranty for peace in the future than there has been in the past.

It therefore seems to me that the formation of a confederation, something on the lines we have been discussing, would mark a new era; would, in fact, make permanent peace possible.

JONES. I am inclined to admit, Mr. White, that the facts in the case justify your generalizations, however gloomy and foreboding they may be. In fact, there is warrant for supplementing them. It is easy to foresee that the evils you speak of will not merely be confined to the theater of war; they will be explosively scattered to the four ends of the earth in the form of violent trade disturbances, panics, bankruptcies, and ruin. Now, it is this phase of the question that is of interest to the American people. Limiting your reply to this point for the moment, I should like you to tell us, Mr. White, how these evils could be averted or brushed aside by the formation of the proposed confederation. If you can show that it would avert them, I have surely been won over.

SMITH. I concur in what has just been said by Mr. Jones.

WHITE. Very good. And now let us first consider what is the underlying basis of financial, commercial, and industrial stability. Is it not credit? Are not the terms of credit, its state of mobility, determined by confidences? And is not this confidence determined by present and forecasted conditions? At this juncture it is to be noted the public mind is concentrated upon the current events of the great struggle now going on. Will it not presently be concentrated upon its probable resultant effects? And if the forecast warrant the weakening of confidence, will this not tend to bring about radical and unfavorable changes in the terms and in the state of mobility of credit? And if it brings about these unfavorable changes, as it is bound to do, will this not gravely endanger the financial, commercial, and industrial stability of the whole world?

If we are to assent to all this—and how can assent be denied?—does it not follow that the first thing to be done to avert the full brunt of the evils which loom ahead is to stabilize confidence and thereby stabilize credit? And what better means for doing this can be shown than the proposed confederation? By banding the democracies together to checkmate autocratic sovereignty, would not the confederation insure peace? Would it not thereby tend to restore public confidence and thus insure the stability of credit?

JONES. It seems to me, Mr. White, that your statements are fairly tenable.

SMITH. I am inclined to agree with you, Mr. Jones, although I do not think that we should narrow the case down to the mere question of stability of credit.

WHITE. No; we should not: the question is one of much deeper, more far-reaching concern than the stability of credit. It is a question of the greatest importance to the political freedom of the individual and of the Nation. We have to pay too great a price in this century of progress for quiet acquiescence in the destructive, reactionary effects of the dynamic activity of autocratic sovereignty. As we have seen, the cause of the present struggle, as well as of the many struggles of the past, can be unerringly traced to the operation of such sovereignty. Would it not therefore follow that if its dynamic action on the political life of the nations were neutralized, the evil inherent in such sovereignty would be removed? Would this not remove the great spoke in the wheel of the progress and peace of the world? And could not this be done by a militant confederation of the democracies?

And this great battle of democracy against autocracy is not new. It is as old as the history of man. It is the age-long struggle of law, of equity, of freedom, against anarchy, injustice, and slavery. It is the index finger pointing the way on the one hand, and the savage, spiked club raised to strike, on the other. It stands for liberty, equality, fraternity, as against tyranny, inequality, and enmity. It stands for intelligence and light on the one hand, and for ignorance and darkness on the other. The first stands for abundance, for a blessing; the second stands for deprivation, for a curse. The first stands for humanity, the second stands for savagery. And so have these two always stood and fought, with the former seemingly the vanquished in many a fight. Yet, notwithstanding, there has been advance, and the advance has been by the former, by democracy, for so it was planned in the Divine comedy. And presently the combat shall cease, and there shall be but one combatant left, and that combatant shall be Triumphant Democracy, and he shall be left free to build up the kingdom on earth as it is in heaven.

JONES. May that day soon come!

SMITH. Amen.

Therefore it is written, "Our Father and our King, we have no Sovereign but Thee."

DAVID LUBIN.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1917.

MR. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, in his eloquent memorial address at Arlington our veteran colleague, Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, deplored the lack of patriotic songs written in recent years. In his address he is reported to have said:

Is it not worthy of mention that over a half century has elapsed since the war and not one stirring patriotic song of national import has been written in all those years?

To-day, when the Nation is stirred to its profoundest depths by the presence of war, we are going back a half century and beyond to find one song of stirring patriotism.

In this connection I desire to submit one of exceptional merit recently written by a former Member of this House, the Hon. Henry Sherman Boutell, who served here for 14 years with great distinction and later was appointed by President Taft as our minister to Switzerland, where he rendered faithful and honorable service to the United States.

[First published in Washington Star May 25, 1917.]

WE'RE BOUND TO SEE IT THROUGH.

(Recruiting song and march. Air: Benny Havens or Wearing of the Green.)

I.

O fathers, give your sons with pride,
With joy, O mothers true;
A hundred million voices ask
Your help to see us through.
Your help to see us through, strong hearts,
Your help to see us through;
Our country needs your last, best gift;
Your sons must see us through!

II.

O brothers of our blood and laws,
Our hearts are one with you;
One hundred million voices shout,
We're bound to see you through!
We're bound to see you through, brave kin,
We're bound to see you through;
So signal Haig we're on the way,
We're bound to see him through!

III.

O friends who helped when we were weak,
Who always have been true,
Now we're a hundred million strong,
We're going to help you through.
We're glad to help you through, old friends,
We're glad to help you through;
Wire Papa Joffre we'll soon be there,
We're going to help him through!

IV.

O valiant fighters at the front
Against the vandal crew,
A hundred million voices call,
Our sons will come to you!
Our sons will come to you, brave boys,
Our sons are all for you;
We've got the money and the will
To send our sons to you!

V.

We're fighting freedom's battle, all,
The Old World and the New;
A hundred million voices ask,
Who fails to see it through?
Who fails to see is through, dear sons,
Who fails to see it through?
Let traitor be our name for him
Who fails to see it through!

VI.

Stir up, O God, our ancient faith,
Our hearts with strength endue;
A hundred million voices pray
Help us to see it through!
Help us to see it through, O Lord,
Help us to see it through;
Great God of all the unconquered just,
To victory lead us through!

America!

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES H. DILLON,

OF SOUTH DAKOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, Rollin J. Wells, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., has written many poems of great merit. I present one of his recent patriotic poems, which ranks as one of his best.

AMERICA!

America! America! The world's aflame to-day,
And thou art called to do thy part and walk the bloody way;
So gird thy loins and draw thy sword, march gloriously and brave,
For where thy starry banner floats no man may be a slave.

America! America! Thou hast been grandly blest;
On thee is laid a sacred charge, to be and do the best;
So let thy every act and deed be singly for the right,
And then no foemen can withstand thy legions in the fight.

America! America! Thy blows should fall like rain,
Until the fires of strife have ceased, and then assuage the pain,
Bind us the wounds and purge the hearts of hatred and of strife,
And lift the nations that have warred unto a better life.

America! America! Thy treasures are untold;
The greatest of thy treasures, still, is not thy hoards of gold;
But goodly, gracious, kindly deeds, that help mankind to see
That peace and charity and love are emblems of the free.

—Rollin J. Wells.

The Daily Argus Leader, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., under date of May 28, 1917, printed this poem at the head of its editorial column and made the following comment:

At the head of the editorial columns to-day we print a fine poem from the pen of Rollin J. Wells, of this city. This splendid contribution to the patriotic literature of the year was first published in the New York Times on May 16. Since then Mr. Wells has received many letters of congratulation. One writer suggests its publication as a poster and another writes for the courtesy of an autograph copy. In the judgment of this newspaper the poem ranks with Mr. Wells's best.

Distribution of Agricultural Products.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY A. CLARK,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, for many reasons it is apparent to me that legislation along the lines of this bill is necessary. Its essential features are securing and furnishing of seed, supplying labor, prevention of waste, increasing food production, dissemination of information, and elimination of disease and destruction of pests. All of these are important, but not in the same degree.

Without seed and labor increased production can not be secured.

The committee held several meetings and before it appeared men of national reputation, equipped by years of experience, and gave to the committee the benefit of their knowledge. I particularly refer to the officials and assistants of the Department of Agriculture. They understand the agricultural conditions of the country and are qualified to speak with authority.

From the statements made before the committee and the exercise of its own judgment this bill was framed. I rely upon some of these statements and this judgment, together with my own investigations, in support of this bill in the main. Personally I believe something might have been added to it.

Some facts are beyond controversy. There is a present shortage of food products and also a prospective one. Prices have increased and are now increasing, and this faster than a corresponding increase in wages. The farmer needs seed and labor. Continued academic discussion will not accomplish much; action is needed. The farms have been stripped of laborers by the high wages of munition factories.

Increased acreage, seed, and labor problems can in large measure be solved by county organizations, subdivided into township agencies, through which the wants of any locality can be ascertained and made known to the county organization, through it to the State departments of agriculture or public safety committees, and thence placed before the United States Department of Agriculture.

Many of the local wants will be met locally; the owner of the seed and the would-be purchaser can be brought together. An organized force of laborers and of farmers who are willing to assist one another, constituting a movable squad, can be secured in each township. There must be some directing agency to supervise all this.

The United States Department of Agriculture seems to me the established organization to undertake this work.

It will take time, intelligence, and money; the latter this House ought to supply, and that liberally.

As to present prices of food, I quote from the Farmers' Open Forum of April, 1917:

The New York Times Annalist of April 23, 1917, publishes a table showing index numbers of the increase in the cost of living in the last two years. It explains the table as follows: The Annalist index number shows the fluctuations in the average wholesale price of 25 food commodities selected and arranged to represent a theoretical family's food budget. Here are the figures:

For April 24, 1915, index number is 154.
For April 22, 1916, index number is 166.
For April 21, 1917, index number is 270.

In other words, the 25 most common and necessary articles of family use have almost doubled in price in the last two years.

Dun's index figures show similar price increases, as follows:

Between April 1, 1914, and April 1, 1917, dairy and garden products increased 84 per cent, meat 46 per cent, clothing 49 per cent, metals 69 per cent, and foodstuffs 105 per cent.

A few days ago the Old Dutch Market (Inc.), of Washington, D. C., which operates a large string of stores selling meats, canned goods, eggs, vegetables, etc., published a comparison of prices of April, 1914, and April, 1917. It deals in all with 60 table necessities. The average increase on all items listed is 85.32 per cent during that period.

As a corollary to this, we have the report issued on April 26 of the food committee appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. "Interesting figures were obtained," says the committee, "from the proprietors of some of the smaller stores, whose business is with the poorer people. They show clearly that the poor have been compelled to resort to the strictest economy in order to provide food, on account of high prices. Their purchases are of the cheapest possible articles and in smaller quantities than heretofore. The sale of ordinary cuts of meat in this class of stores seems to have been discontinued and the meat now purchased consists of hog livers, hog kidneys, neck bones, hog faces, etc."

Following the food riots in New York, Miss Helen M. Todd was appointed to make an investigation of the effect on school children of the high cost of food. She reported last week that in the poorer districts diet has been so cut down that the children's scholarship has suffered materially through malnutrition, and that public-school teachers complain that the children are unable to maintain their grades.

The Review of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics for April, 1917, tells the same story. In the four years from February 15, 1913, to February 15, 1917, flour increased in price 69 per cent, eggs 61 per cent, potatoes 224 per cent. A 16-ounce loaf of bread cost on February 15, 1914, $0.055; on February 15, 1915, $0.063; on February 15, 1916, $0.062; and on February 15, 1917, $0.071. Bread to-day is 10 cents a loaf. As this goes to press wheat is $3 a bushel in the western markets.

As to coal, the Black Diamond Magazine and the Coal Trade Journal show that the average retail price of anthracite range coal in New York was $5 a ton in January, 1915, and $8.75 a ton in January, 1917. Soft coal at the mines was from $0.80 to $1.65 a ton in December, 1914, and from $4.75 to $6.50 a ton in January, 1917; this in the face of yearly increasing output.

Everybody is aware of the shortage conditions. No quotations or citations are needed to prove the fact. We have already made huge appropriations for different objects. Some of the money realized out of the contributions to other nations may be intended for the purchase of food, but we have got to first get the food, and we have to raise it from our own farm land.

The total value of all farm lands in Pennsylvania, by the census of 1910, was $1,253,274,862; that State ranks twelfth in the value of its agricultural products, and the value of farm lands in the United States was $40,991,449,090.

In one bill we voted $7,000,000,000 for war measures, approximately six times the entire value of all the farm lands in Pennsylvania and more than one-sixth of the value of all the farm lands in the United States. Out of these farm lands we have got to produce that without which bullets and bayonets, swords and cannon, munitions and sacrifice are useless.

There are more men under arms in Europe than there were men, women, and children in the United States at the outbreak of the Civil War. This force is not a creating but a consuming one. They have been taken away from the fields of production, and now it is proposed to send more from our own country; this can only accentuate the conditions now existing of high prices and shortage of food.

In the passage of this bill we can afford to aid the Department of Agriculture in a work that must be done, can not be deferred, and in the hope that it will be successfully performed; failure means disaster.

Speech of Hon. Frederick C. Hicks, of Long Island.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MARTIN B. MADDEN,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a speech of Hon. FREDERICK C. HICKS, of Long Island, delivered at Port Washington, Long Island, on May 30, 1917.

The speech is as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS, OF LONG ISLAND, DELIVERED AT PORT WASHINGTON, LONG ISLAND, ON MAY 30, 1917.

It is a keen pleasure for me to participate with you in the program of the day, and I appreciate to the fullest the courtesy of the invitation and the warmth of your generous welcome.

Those who witnessed at Mineola a few hours ago the inspiring review of the Defense Guard of Nassau County must have been deeply impressed by those splendid bodies of men which so signally express the spirit, the purpose, and the determination of the times. In Suffolk County and in Queens the same fervent patriotism and unqualified loyalty is made manifest by similar organizations, all responding to the Nation's needs. In this crisis let none but Americans be on guard on the ramparts of American freedom, with loyalty to country and to flag the watchword of the hour.

This public park is dedicated to education, which through all the ages has been the impelling force of civilization, the impregnable bulwark of enlightenment, the very foundation upon which rests the mighty structures of free democracies; the security for all time for free thought, free speech, and free action. We place to-day on this consecrated spot a cannon which we dedicate to the patriotism of this and future generations of our boys and girls. May it be a silent reminder to them of the heroic deeds of our past and instill into their minds and hearts and souls the same high conception of self-sacrifice, the same steadfast adherence to duty which inspired their fathers and their fathers' fathers in every trying hour in the history of the Republic.

Fifty-two years have passed away since Grant met Lee at Appomattox. The rejoicings which swept over the northland on the termination of that terrible conflict are now but a memory. The hatred and bitterness between those who wore the blue and those who wore the gray have faded away. Most of those old heroes of the Grand Army have passed to the great unknown. Those who survive live in the conscious pride that a grateful people still pay them reverence for their deeds of a half century ago. For the old veterans of sixty-one the twilight shadows are lengthening. Soon darkness will fall, and they will sleep the eternal sleep, but the record of their bravery and of their achievements will forever remain a standard of undaunted courage and self-sacrifice for others to emulate. While time has obliterated the old animosities and thinned the ranks of the survivors of that great struggle, the lesson which they taught, the example which they set by their life's blood, lives on. Their work is done; ours has just begun. Their triumph has been achieved; ours must be won. We accept the responsibility, old fighters of yesterday, and pledge our lives to the trust. Again the bugle has sounded the call that never knows retreat and the flag marches onward. It is a call to duty that comes from every battle field of the Revolution and from every cemetery where sleep the soldiers whose graves number the pages of this country's history. Its voice rises out of the depths of the sea as the waves echo the shouts of the victors in the War of 1812. The strident note sounds clear as it comes to us from Gettysburg and Antietam, Atlanta, and the Wilderness. It comes to us from the roar of cannon in far-off Manila Bay. It is the spirit of America calling to her sons and daughters in this crucial hour when the destinies of civilization hang in the balance.

It is an appeal to sacrifice, to manhood, to all that we cherish and hold most dear in life; a command to duty, demanding of everyone, regardless of race or creed or birth or color, full and absolute service to his country. Heed the call, O my countrymen, in this hour of the Nation's peril. Respond with all your splendid courage, with all your determination, with all your faith, and thus will the great Republic go onward bearing aloft, undimmed by the clouds of war, the torch of freedom, of religious toleration, of representative democracy, and of opportunity for our children and the generations yet to come.

This is no time for the coward, the weakling, or the carping critic. Faultfinding and discontent unfortunately will come as an incident to the war. When the grumblings of the faint-hearted and the criticisms of the "copperheads" are heard, then is the time of all times for the stout-hearted, courageous men and women to demonstrate their patriotism anew by increased support of the Government and those charged with the direction of its affairs. Then is the time for the strong and fearless to say to the weak and timid, "We will stand by the country and the flag no matter what the cost." Come what may, there must be no dillydallying, no halfway measures, no faltering. This war was not of our choosing; we committed no act of hostility, we broke no treaty, we violated no right. The Imperial German Government was the aggressor and the trespasser, forcing war upon us. However loath we may have been to take up arms, we are now equally determined not to lay them down until this war ends with victory, complete and absolute, resting upon our banner.

"The call to arms has sounded,
And the echo of the cry
Is answered by God's country
As our soldier boys go by.

Our flag floats proudly o'er them;
'Tis the emblem of the free;
'Tis the flag our fathers fought for
On the land and on the sea."

America stands forth to-day as a participant in the greatest conflict of all history and has thrown her mighty resources in the scales against German aggression. For two years and more we have been silent witnesses of the terrible war across the seas, praying that "on earth peace, good will toward men" might become an actuality—a precept for the future guidance of nations. May the sunrise of that day hasten in its coming and in the fullness of its righteousness see established a peace so permanent that forevermore mankind will enjoy its blessings.

In the midst of trials and provocations we have been patient and forbearing. We have condoned insults to our flag and ignored the ruthless destruction of the lives and property of our citizens; we have endured the abrogation of our rights as a neutral Nation and remained passive when the laws of humanity and of nations have been violated. We appealed to justice, to international law, and to the humane instincts of civilization, but our appeals were made in vain. Protest and remonstrance have been futile. Continued patience and forbearance cease to be a virtue when arrogant and despotic power demands submission to brute force. Instead they become a confession of timidity and weakness—evidence that this Nation supinely submits to injury and insult. No longer can a great self-respecting Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the cause of human rights, continue unmindful of the disregard of those rights and of the principles of law and justice.

Cherishing our traditions and our ideals, determined to preserve all that civilization has acquired in its centuries of advancement up through the ages, America draws the sword for humanity against despotism. We wage battle for defense of our national existence, for the maintenance of our rights, for the reestablishment of law and order. We join in the conflict to prevent arrogant military power and autocratic political creeds from strangling free governments and to stop for all time the violation of treaties and of national obligations. We enter the war not for conquest or territorial aggrandizement, not for trade expansion or commercial development, not for any indemnity or political advantage which peace may bring. There is no hatred in our hearts for the German people. Our quarrel is not with them, only sympathy that they have been misled; victims crushed under the iron heel of the Prussian military oligarchy.

To-day representative democracy and military autocracy are in a death struggle on the plains of Europe. One or the other will prevail and become the standard of government for the future. The American people take their stand on the side of democracy and place their faith in divine Providence, confident that the star of destiny will guide the great Republic onward to victory and to glory.

THE FLAG.

"Stars of the early dawning, set in a field of blue;
Stripes of the sunrise splendor, crimson and white of hue;
Flag of our fathers' fathers born on the field of strife,
Phœnix of fiery battle risen from human life;
Given for God and freedom; sacred, indeed, the trust
Left by the countless thousands returned to the silent dust.

Flag of a mighty nation waving aloft unfurled,
Kissed by the sun of heaven, caressed by the winds o' the world;
Greater than kingly power, greater than all mankind;
Conceived in the need of the hour, inspired by the Master Mind;
Over the living children, over the laureled grave,
Streaming on high in the cloudless sky, banner our fathers gave.

Flag of a new-born era, token of every right
Wrung from a tyrant power, unawed by a tyrant's might;
Facing again the menace outflung from a foreign shore,
Meeting again the challenge as met in the years before;
Under thy spangled folds thy children await to give
All that they have or are that the flag they love shall live."

"Shall School Children Beg?"

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM P. BORLAND,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent given me, I desire to call attention to some unfortunate features of the school system of the District of Columbia. I think it is demoralizing to permit little girls to solicit money from strangers. It is reprehensible for teachers or other public employees to attempt to increase their emoluments at the expense of the morals and education of the school children. I insert here a rather remarkable circular letter and my answer thereto:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1917.

To the parents of the pupils of the Force School:

Last year, by the efforts of teachers and pupils, $400 was raised for the playground fund. Seventy-five dollars was given to the general fund and $200 was spent in keeping open our school playground and coaching school for six weeks during the summer. The remaining $150 was kept for current expenses.

Thirty-one boys and girls, fifth to eighth grades, attended the coaching class; 8 of these were enabled to skip a grade; 3 of the 8 skipped another grade in February, thus saving one year of school work; 9 were able to make up deficiencies, and thus gain promotion; 14 others were helped to keep their standing. Doesn't such work seem worth while?

The work done was of such benefit to the children, and they were so eager to do the work, that the teachers feel the same opportunity should be open to others this summer. There should be two classes, one for the primary grades and one for the intermediate. To do this and carry on the playground work $300 is needed.

Congress has appropriated for some schools, but the demand is so great we feel that we, in our neighborhood, must take care of our own. Will you help?

Please answer the following:

1. Do you approve of the children raising the money by their own efforts?
2. Do you prefer voluntary contributions by the parents?
3. If so, how much will you give?
4. Do you desire to have a parent-teacher association organized for the Force School?

Respectfully, yours, JANET MCWILLIAM, Principal.

JUNE 1, 1917.

MISS JANET MCWILLIAM,
Principal Force School, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MISS MCWILLIAM: Your circular letter of May 29 brought home by the children yesterday calls attention to the efforts which you made last year to raise money through the work of the school children for certain undefined activities connected with the playgrounds and the summer schools. I kept your circular letter because I wanted to answer it more definitely and concisely.

I do not approve of the methods which were pursued last year in raising money through the efforts of school children, and I trust the plan will be abandoned before it is necessary to stop it by positive legislation. Nothing of this kind is permitted in the best-regulated schools throughout the country. The method is reprehensible, even though the purpose in raising the money is of the very highest order. It is degrading and demoralizing to permit little girls to sell tickets except to members of their immediate family, and it can hardly be recommended even in the case of boys. During the last year, I have been surprised to find that the children were being instructed to sell tickets for various moving-picture shows. The shows were the price of the ordinary 5-cent variety and not educational in character, and on the special day when part of the proceeds went to the school fund the price of the tickets was 10 cents. I have bought these tickets from my children in order that their feelings might not be hurt by a failure to sell the tickets given to them, but I have refused to permit them to sell them or attempt to sell them to strangers. Mrs. Borland visited one of these entertainments and found, as I say, that the show given was the ordinary 5-cent show of a very inferior character.

Of course, the children can not be compelled to sell the tickets, and no person connected with the school has authority to give the children any such instructions, but it is hard to make the child's mind understand the difference between orders which the teacher has the power to give and enforce and such instructions as the teacher is giving without authority of law, the compliance with which is within the discretion and control of the parents. The child very naturally gets the idea that what the teacher asks him to do is compulsory. This is another of the many evils connected with the sale of tickets and soliciting money in public schools.

I also object seriously, in common with a great many other parents with whom I have talked, to the excessive number of holidays in the lower grades of the Washington schools. Each time one of these picture shows is given there is a holiday or a half holiday. School is dismissed also for every circus and every parade of any kind. As public displays of various kinds are numerous in Washington, the result is that there are more holidays than in any place outside of Old Mexico. If there were fewer holidays in the lower grades, there would be less need for these summer schools to coach the delinquent students. I have found it necessary with my two children to conduct a coaching school of my own in order that they might learn with some thoroughness arithmetic and the ordinary primary subjects. I often wonder what other parents do who do not have the time to devote to their children's education outside of school hours.

The management of the Washington schools has been so lax in recent years as to give little cause for pride, although Congress has endeavored by an extremely liberal method of appropriation to provide a way for the very best character of public education.

Having expressed my views upon the evil effects of the collection of money through the efforts of the children, let me say further that all experience demonstrates the evils connected with the unregulated and unaudited illegal collection and disbursement of funds for public purposes. It is very easy under a plausible pretext such as summer schools or playgrounds to break down the safeguards of law in public matters. No collection of money for public purposes should be made except by authority of law and with the safeguards of supervising and auditing which must show exactly how much money is received, who is responsible for it, to whom it is paid out, and for what purposes. Nothing could be more lax or more certain to invite suspicion than the collection of money through school children without authority of law and without proper accounting.

Let me say further that Congress, through its proper committees, has repeatedly considered in the most careful and painstaking manner the needs of the public schools of the District and the needs of the playgrounds, and has appropriated liberally for this purpose. It must be assumed that Congress has given all the money that it felt was needed or could be wisely expended for these purposes. To solicit money from the individual patrons of the school implies in the strongest possible way that Congress has not appropriated properly or sufficiently for the purpose. I am very much opposed to any money being expended for this purpose without the proper estimate and the publicity which surrounds a regular appropriation.

As to the playgrounds, there has unfortunately been a scandal connected with this very worthy and necessary object. Congress found a few years ago that an excessive amount of money was being expended in salaries of people who were supposed to teach the children how to play. The number of employees who were drawing compensation was vastly in excess of the amount that was really spent upon the playgrounds, and a very necessary check was put upon the matter by law. I assume that the plan was then conceived of keeping these employees still on the pay roll by requiring the school children to sell tickets and otherwise solicit money. If this is the case and if the persons are being employed out of these voluntary subscriptions whose employment has been discountenanced by Congress it indicates one of the many evils connected with this practice.

As to the summer schools, the public ought to know that the teachers in the Washington schools are paid by the year, which is the case in very few school districts in the United States. The time of the teachers, therefore, for 12 months in the year belongs to the public, and if it were desirable to hold summer schools certain teachers should be designated by the school director to conduct such schools without extra cost to the taxpayers. The teachers in the District of Columbia are paid much better than the teachers in the same class throughout the United States and have various special privileges, such as longevity pay, which do not exist elsewhere. It is not always true that high pay and easy work gives superior services in public affairs, although, in common with most Members of Congress, I am a believer in paying wages which are fully up to the best pay elsewhere.

The management of the Washington schools has been very lax, but so many of these petty evils have occurred in the last few years that I very much hoped that a change would be made in the personnel of the management, but unfortunately the change did not take place.

To sum up the matter, I consider the collection of money through the school children reprehensible in every respect. I consider the voluntary contributions by patrons of the schools unnecessary and indefensible. I consider the handling of extra funds by school officials without authority or the safeguards of law as extremely objectionable. I regard the giving of entertainments by the school or for the benefit of its teachers to the detriment of school work as an injustice upon the patrons of the school. I regard the payment of extra compensation to teachers, who are already employed by the year, as illegal and unwarranted. I am quite certain that when publicity is given to this matter in Congress and among the taxpayers of the District a very decided objection to this method will be made.

Yours, truly,

WM. P. BORLAND.

Address of Hon. W. Frank James, of Michigan.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

BY

HON. PATRICK H. KELLEY,

OF MICHIGAN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address by Hon. W. FRANK JAMES, of Michigan, delivered at Arlington National Cemetery on Memorial Day, May 30, 1917.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. W. FRANK JAMES, OF MICHIGAN.

We have gathered here to-day to pay a memorial tribute to our brave comrades of '98 who went down in Habana Harbor in the Maine.

"He has come back home, asleep,
With the flag above his face;
With the starry fold to keep
Guard above his resting place;
And beneath blue summer skies,
Where he dreams below the sod,
But a single rosebud lies
Now between his heart and God!"

They have gone to join the heroes who fought at Bunker Hill!
They have gone to clasp the hands of those who suffered at Valley Forge!
They have gone to live with those who fell at Monterey!
They have gone to meet those who died at Gettysburg!

This is not a new bereavement, but one which time, the healer of even the most severe grief, has softened. These are not new-made graves we garland, for over them all nature has already spread the memorials of her love. They have received the benediction of her sunshine and her tears, and above them her vines and grasses have spread the mantle of immortality.

Memorial Day is America's most sacred holiday, dedicated to the memory of those veterans who were willing to offer up their lives upon the battle fields or on the seven seas that their country might live.

This sacred day of memory is the one day of the three hundred and sixty-five upon which the busy, bustling Americans lay aside all labor to pay a heartfelt tribute to the "raw recruit of 1861," to those sturdy "boys" who joined in the glad chorus, "We are Coming, Father Abraham, Three Hundred Thousand Strong," and also to the "Rookie of 1898," who enlisted in the Spanish-American War at the call of another martyred President—William McKinley.

Of the nearly 3,000,000 soldiers who "tented on the old camp grounds" in 1861 there now remains but a corporal's guard. The ranks of the brave boys in blue of 1861 who fought so gloriously at Mission Ridge, at Chickamauga, at Gettysburg, and hundreds of other glorious battlefields are now being rapidly thinned by Father Time; 20,000 or more have passed over the great divide to answer to the last "roll call" during the past year.

Their marching line is now thinned to color bearers and file leaders; It is now only a spectre army of gray-haired men, who once a year on Memorial Day keep step to the shrill of the old fife and the taps of the muffled war drums. To-day the worn blue line closes up the gap made upon it by another year; again it is marching to the "Bivouac of the Dead" to pay tribute to their old comrades, and beside the worn line of blue marches the thin line of the gray.

Those in the robings of glory,
These in the gloom of defeat,
All with the battle blood gory,
In the dusk of eternity meet.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day,
Under the laurel the blue,
Under the willow the gray.

From the silence of sorrowful hours
The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers,
Alike for the friend and the foe.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the judgment day,
Under the roses the blue,
Under the lilies the gray.

As we attend each successive Memorial Day exercises we see fewer and fewer of the old familiar faces, and it will only be the space of a few short years when we will be called upon to attend the last rites of the last hero of the Civil War and hear our chaplain repeat these solemn words: "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, and dust to dust."

When the last hero of 1861 has passed to his reward the veterans of 1898 will carry the good work onward, until they, too, pass over the great divide; but until that time Memorial Day will be to us who were lucky or unlucky enough to have taken part in the Spanish-American War a sacred trust, bequeathed to us by the immortal heroes of the Civil War.

My fellow citizens, our duty is not done by simply observing Memorial Day, or by building monuments to the memories of our departed heroes. You must see to it, you who fought in 1861 and in 1898 so gallantly for your country, and you who reap to-day the harvest of their heroism, that your influence goes abroad for pure morals, and guard as you would your life the liberties handed to you.

The future of America lies in what our citizens make it to-day. The entire world is looking to America; there are no new continents.

Friends, we are still in the "broad field of battle"; we are still in the "bivouac of life." Whether or not you are a true American will be answered by the courage and the sincerity with which you defend the institutions and the liberties of your citizenship. Bare your heads beneath the folds of the flag, "bathed in the blood of your fathers and your countrymen."

"The beat of the drum and the call of the bugle" are hushed, but to-day this Nation needs the same daring, the same fearlessness, the same courage that inspired the boys in blue in 1861 and 1898.

If this country is worth living in, it is worth dying for. If the time shall ever come when the youth of our Nation are not willing to die for their country if need be, then comes the day when this Nation shall cease to exist.

It is better to die for the flag,
For its red and its white and its blue,
Than to hang back and shirk and to lag,
And let the flag sink out of view.

It is better to give up this life,
In the heat and thick of the strife,
Than to live out your days 'neath a sky
Where Old Glory shall never more fly.
—Edward A. Guest.

I have never been a peace-at-any-price man, and I have always believed that the best way to keep out of trouble was to be prepared. In speeches on Memorial Day at Ironwood and Bessemer, Mich., two years ago to-day, I said, in part:

I believe in peace; I am a man of peace, but am not a peace-at-any-price man. Peace is a wonderful thing. It is the very climax of a nation's joy.

There can be no argument over what a glorious thing peace is; neither can there be any argument over the horrors of war. But there is a vast difference between "peace with honor" and "peace-at-any-price." Peace-at-any-price is the Chinese kind of peace. Peace-at-any-price is a temporary physical safety at the expense of moral courage to fight. The believers in peace-at-any-price would have licked the hand of George the Third; the believers in peace-at-any-price would have allowed Jeff Davis and his followers to have disrupted the Union. Peace-at-any-price is an unfailing sign of national decay. No nation, no matter how mighty it may be, can long endure that either refuses to protect its citizens or its honor.

There is no good American patriot who does not believe in peace and who will not strive for honorable peace until such a time as peace shall cease to be a virtue and become abject cowardice.

Instead of forming societies for the advancement of peace we need more societies that shall advocate patriotism as a primary ideal; yes, patriotism even ahead of peace.

There is no need for us to waste time in talking about the horrors of a war—we all admit their horror. Why not spend some time in "discussing the horrors of a war which unpreparedness for war begets."?

Inability of self-defense is a perpetual invitation to assault. I do not believe in the militarism of the great powers of Europe, but better that even than the abject spectacle of a mighty China before a tiny Japan—one prepared and the other clamoring for peace-at-any-price.

I would rather see this great Nation of ours to perish from the face of the earth than to have it lose its honor, its manhood, or its self-respect.

In these days that try men's souls let us pray to God that President Wilson shall speak the words befitting each occasion—speak them firmly and with the assurance that he has the sentiments and faith of all patriotic Americans behind him.

These are no days for British-Americans, German-Americans, French-Americans, or any other kind of a hyphenated American.

We only want the kind of Americans who are proud that Old Glory is our standard. As patriotic Americans we stand for national honor and for national protection. We stand for a united people. We are a humane people; we are a God-fearing people; we hate no other nation; we have no envy of any other nation; we have no desire for any quarrel with any other nation. We only insist upon our divine right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Those were my ideas two years ago, and they are my ideas now. Much as we hoped for peace with honor, it was not to be. We have been forced into war by a great nation, and it is our duty now to do all that we can to bring this war to a successful issue and as quickly as possible.

I am not one of those who believe that Germany is nearly beaten. On the contrary, I am firmly of the opinion that if we did not enter the war now the allies would be defeated. We have entered the war at this time, in my opinion, not only to protect the lives of our people but because we realized that if the allies were defeated we would be "easy picking" for the central powers.

We alone of all the nations are financially able to pay an indemnity, and the central powers would collect from us billions and billions of dollars.

Let us not deceive ourselves. It is no little "skirmish" for which we are preparing, but a war to the death with the greatest military nation of all times. Either German militarism must be defeated or else the greatest Republic of all times will pay an indemnity that will keep our children and our children's children poor to pay. We will be fortunate, if we lose, if we escape paying a large indemnity of land as well.

Let us not deceive ourselves into thinking that while we are raising an army of 1,000,000 men that they will not have to go to France to fight. We will be lucky, indeed, if we do not have to send 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 men to France. If Russia should have civil war or conclude a separate peace, then our lot would be harder still.

Standing on the street corners stating we "never have been licked and never will be" will not win this war. This is no "talk fest," but the greatest war of this or any other time. Let us hope that "young America" will wake to the realization that this war is a real war before it is too late.

Standing on the street corner telling how much "you love your country" is not patriotism. All talk and no action is not patriotism. When a man says, "I love my country, but I can not fight," that is not patriotism—that is the cry of the weakling and the coward. But when a man says, "I love my country and I am ready to fight and, if need be, die for it," that is patriotism.

No one but a most arrant coward would say that we should do our share by merely loaning money to the allies. Were we to do that and that alone, we would be just as contemptible as the man who, too cowardly to fight for his country, hired a substitute.

This is a man's war, and we must do a man's part. Poor, plucky, brave France is bleeding to death. Are we going to forget that were it not for France there would be no United States? Are we going to forget De Grasse, Rochambeau, and the immortal Lafayette? I can not believe that America is not willing to pay the debt of gratitude we owe France. We must get men over to France at once, not only for the help they might be but because we want to have our allies know that we have entered this war not with money alone but with men—millions of men—as well.

I want to see the American flag in the trenches in Europe at once, and for that reason I voted for the so-called Roosevelt amendment in the selective-draft bill. What more inspiring sight to our allies, and what more depressing news to the central powers than the news that a former President of the United States was on his way with 80,000 to 100,000 men? Whether we love "Teddy" or hate him, we must admit that he is no "slacker," no "mollycoddle," but a fighting man through and through.

As the little parody on Kipling's "Tommy Atkins" runs:

TEDDY.

It's "Teddy this" and "Teddy that," and "Teddy 'ow's yer soul?"
But it's "Way for Mr. Roosevelt!" when the country's in a hole;
When the Nation's in a hole, my friends, and the war cloud's rising black,
Then it's "Room for Col. Roosevelt!" for our Teddy's coming back.
It's "Traitor to his party," and it's "Not the people's choice,"
But it's "Citizen and patriot" when they hear the cannon's voice;
When they scent the smoke of battle, boys, and need a million men,
It's "Rah for Gen. Roosevelt!" and who's the "traitor" then?

Some people say, "Why should we send our boys to the trenches of France?" The answer is easy—our liberty is just as much at stake as the liberty of France. We are going to send an American Army to France to fight the battles of America, for the liberty of America, and the democracy of America. It is better to keep the "hell" over there—the raping, burning, and destruction of all kinds—than to wait until too late, and then have the "hell" over here. If our allies with our assistance can not defeat the central powers now, of what avail would our feeble efforts be a little later? Now is the time to strike, and to strike hard.

Not only are we fighting for liberty, but France and her allies are doing the same. The patriotic Viviani well expressed it the other day:

Why do all these people fight?
They fought to elevate all the peoples of the world toward the ideal and toward liberty; they fought to make the world a place in which men could breathe freely, and they did not fail.
I salute the hour of victory, with the pious hope that the spirit of Washington will become your spirit.
Lift your heads, citizens of America, lift them as high as your flag.

Seeing that we are at war, we expect absolute loyalty from all—native Americans as well as those adopted Americans who swore a solemn oath that they renounced all other lands for this land. Being born here does not give one any especial privilege to be disloyal or treasonable. On the contrary, it only makes the act the more outrageous and damnable. Benedict Arnold was a native born, but I do not remember any monuments being erected to his memory. Neither have I heard of anyone "boasting" of the fact that he is a descendant of Benedict Arnold. Some people do not seem to realize the difference between liberty and treason.

This is not the time to mince words, my friends.

Every man living in the United States may just as well understand now as a little later that no matter where he was born or from where his ancestors came, that he can not wear the American flag on his sleeve and the flag of another country across his heart.

Most of the people here—or their ancestors—came here to avoid oppression or to better their condition. Any time they do not like this country, or our policies, they are free to go, but so long as they are here we expect from them absolute loyalty. We expect them to shed their blood with ours for the preservation of these United States.

America has been compelled to go to war because a great nation did not heed our command to cease killing American men, women, and children. We were very patient about it; many of us would have gone to war long before.

Now that we have gone to war, we say to every man living here:

"Are you an American citizen or a subject of some foreign government?"

"Are you with us or against us?" If against us, "Here's your hat; what's your hurry?"

You can not call yourself an American and be against American policy and preach and plan and conspire against our well-being.

It is a show-down, and the lines are going to be drawn tighter and tighter from now on. You are either with us or against us; there is no being "neutral" in this war.

Some people seem to think that we ought to be satisfied if they are "neutral" in this fight. Why, you can not be neutral in a fight between your country and the enemy.

You are either with it heart and soul or you are against it—a traitor.

Quit talking and writing rank treason,
While under Old Glory you stand,
Or break with us fairly and squarely,
And Go with your heart in your hand.
We honor a gallant opponent,
Respect a conviction sincere,
But damned be the man with two faces,
Let him get the blazes out of here!

As I told a man from Philadelphia the other day who wrote me complaining of my vote on increasing the Army:

It occurs to me, sir, that you do not like this country. You seem to want to neither fight for it yourself nor to allow anyone else to fight for it. If your own Congressman is too busy to get you a passport to the country that you seem to prefer to this, I will gladly secure the same for you.

We have decided by an overwhelming vote that wherever an American goes "lawfully and observing the law, there the flag goes with him, and there it must ever go."

Of course some native Americans, in whom the blood of their forefathers who fought at Bunker Hill, the Alamo, Chickamauga, Gettysburg, and Santiago has begun to run so thin that it shows a lemon tinge, do not agree with this splendid American policy.

Neither will some of our adopted Americans, whose only patriotic thrills come on pay day, when they are paid off in good American money according to the American wage scale, or on election day, when they help to swell the majority at some close election precinct.

But, thank God, out of our more than 100,000,000 people there are few, very few, of these, else there were no United States.

It is not only the duty of every American citizen to be loyal and patriotic himself but it is his duty to instill the same patriotism in his children. Let us consider it is just as much our duty to teach our children to love their country as it is our duty to teach them to love their God.

WE TALK OF THE FLAG.

"Tell me about the flag," he said,
As I was putting him to bed,
"And why men wave their hats and cheer Whenever it is drawing near."
And so we stopped undressing then
To talk about the time when men
Were facing cannon shot and shell
To serve the flag we love so well.

I told him of the men who died
In frozen wood and countryside
Long years ago in battles grim
To keep a flag like that for him,
I told him all about the stars,
The spotless white and crimson bars,
And what they dreamed of and they sought
As bitterly they bled and fought.

"Let no one tell you as you grow
That nothing to the flag you owe.
Let no one whisper that it means
But pleasant days and peaceful scenes,
And merely calls to mind a land
Where wealth abounds on every hand,
Because no more that flag will fly
When men for it refuse to die.

"And it may be," said I, "that you
Must some day serve that banner, too;
And then if such a day should come
That sounds again the stirring drum
And blows once more the martial fife,
Be not a slave to peaceful life.
As they were men, you be a man
And give that flag the best you can.

—Edward A. Guest.

And while we honor those who fought in 1861 and 1898 and while we cheer those who are to fight for us now, let us not forget that the mother is entitled to all honor and respect as well. While her part is a "silent" part, it is a very important part in the play after all.

You may boast men's deeds of glory, you may tell their courage great,
But to die is easier service than alone to sit and wait;
And I hail the little mother with the tear-stained face and grave
Who has given the flag a soldier—she's the bravest of the brave
And the banner we are proud of, with its red and blue and white,
Is a lasting tribute holy to all mothers' love of right.

—Edward A. Guest.

And we owe just as much honor and respect to the wife who has to stay home and raise her boys to be manly men like the father. Hers is as heroic a part as the part of her "man" who does the fighting:

I only pray that while he is away
You guard and guide him day by day.
And give me strength to tend his little ones
Until he comes.
On land or sea,
Wherever he may be,
God bless my man for me.

Talk about love of country and love of the flag—why, my friends, you can no more love your flag or your country too much, any more than you can give too much love to the mother who bore you.

No honor for our country can be too deep; no love can be too pure; no patriotism can be too true and too steadfast.

No one who has not enlisted to follow the colors can appreciate the love of the soldier for the flag:

Love of the flag? Well, what do they know of it?
What do the men of their kind ever know of it,
Who stand on their legs when the colors go by
And yelp with the others and never know why?
What do they know who dodge all the wars
And don't know the colors except at bazaars?

If you want to love the flag with a love beyond all understanding, a love as strong as the love of a mother for her child, enlist and march behind it, and then you will know what "love of the flag" means.

It is said that when the French Army was in full retreat from Moscow, and when the French soldiers, frozen by the cold and exhausted by hunger, dropped by the hundreds along the wayside, they would rise up as Napoleon went by, and cry out, "Long live the Emperor!" and then drop back in the snow as their winding sheet. What was it the French soldier cheered as Napoleon passed by? Was it the man who had crossed the bridge at Lodi? Was it he who had annihilated the Russians at Austerlitz; or was it the man who had crossed the Alps and won the lost Battle of Marengo? Ah, no; they cheered because they saw in that gray coat and that cocked hat, the visions of the vine-covered cottage on the banks of the Seine or the Loire—the gray-haired father, the yearning eyes of the mother, the little brothers and sisters, and all the delights of home.

So to-day when we see the American soldier going by, carrying the red, white, and blue of Old Glory we cheer. And what do we cheer? Not an aggregation of khaki-clothed men, but we cheer because we see in the Stars and Stripes the vision of a reunited country of the Blue and the Gray that knows no North or no South; we cheer because we see in that flag the vision of a great race formed by the melting of former Germans, former Austrians, former British, former French, former Italians into one great American race; a race that knows no other land than this land; a race that knows no other flag but the Stars and Stripes; and a race that knows no other motto than "United we stand, divided we fall."

Newspaper Censorship.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM R. WOOD,
OF INDIANA,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Saturday, June 2, 1917.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent having been given me to extend my remarks upon the clause submitted by the conferees providing for a censorship of the newspapers of the country, I desire to say that in my opinion the real purpose of this measure is not so much for the prevention of the publication of information that would be of comfort to our enemies or detrimental to our own Army as it is to shield the inefficiency of those who will be in high places in the conduct of the affairs of the Nation during the present crisis.

As proof of this assertion, I wish to call attention to the recent exposure with reference to the Commonwealth Pier matter, where a great many Naval Reserves were quartered without sufficient accommodation. Also, to the Mongolia tragedy, where two Red Cross nurses were killed. When the newspapers of the country called the attention of the public to this last affair and insisted that a thorough investigation be made as to the real causes leading up to the death of these nurses, and that the excuse offered by the Navy ordnance experts that certain shells fabricated prior to 1900 were defective would not satisfy the American public, the chairman of the committee on public information, Mr. George Creel, who it is generally understood would have charge of the censorship of all news matters if this bill becomes a law, took these newspapers to task and intimated, if he did not directly state, that further criticism of this character would not be tolerated.

That the voluntary censorship imposed upon themselves by the newspapers is quite sufficient for all necessary protection, so far as information useful to the enemy is concerned, has been strikingly illustrated by many important events that have occurred since this war commenced. A few days ago the French commission left this Capital in a special car. Every newspaper reporter in the city knew of their going and of the time of their arrival in New York. There the individual members of the commission were taken from a public pier to their ship, upon which they were to sail to their homes. Yet not one word of their departure was published in any newspaper in this country, and the first information that the public had of their leaving our shores was the news of their safe arrival in France. Since their arrival, however, it has become known that, through some means or other, the German Government was apprised of their departure from our shores, and German submarines were placed in the path of their ship. Fortunately the wireless apprised those in command of the danger ahead of them, and the course of the ship was changed, and the danger thus avoided. But this information was not conveyed to the German Government by any newspaper publication in the United States. Again, our submarine destroyers sailed away from this country to the danger zones of Europe, and not one word of their departure was mentioned in any paper in the United States, and the first intimation that the public had of this event came from Great Britain, through whom we learned that Germany had been apprised of their coming and had sent her submarines out to meet them. But this information was imparted to the enemy by some source other than the newspapers.

In passing, I want to call attention to the ridiculous position in which some critics have placed themselves with reference to this last event. These United States submarine destroyers were dispatched to the danger zones for the purpose of apprehending and destroying German submarines. The German submarines, apprised of the coming of these destroyers, according to statements coming from Great Britain, went out to meet them; and if the reports we receive from Great Britain are true, our destroyers, having information of this fact through wireless messages, changed their course and evaded these submarines. Why did they do this, may well be asked. If their purpose was to destroy the German submarines, why did they not take advantage of this opportunity and commence doing the work that they were sent over to do?

What this administration needs at this time more than anything else is to be protected from its own folly. It is constantly boasting of its desire for the searchlight of publicity, yet it is constantly bringing all the influence that it has at its command to suppress publicity and to suppress the truth with reference to its many glaring mistakes.

The people do not want anything made public that will give aid to the enemy or which will in the least interfere in the proper conduct of the war. Any newspaper that violates this sentiment of the people would immediately receive their condemnation, and knowing this sentiment and knowing the condemnation that would follow its violation is a sufficient guaranty of the proper conduct of the public press.

There is no need of this provision in this measure. It is an insult to the intelligence of the people and violative of their sacred rights.

The people of the United States want to stand by the administration in this crisis as they have done in every other crisis, but they want to do it intelligently. They want to see the path that they are called upon to tread. They are furnishing the money to pay the bills and they will furnish the lives to be sacrificed on our country's altar, and they have a right to know what is going on.

If this is a government of the people, for the people, and by the people, in order that it may not perish from the earth, we, the representatives of the people, should unitedly stand in opposition to this attempt at the destruction of one of the fundamental principles on which this Government is founded—freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press. Let us not kill our democracy in an attempt to establish a democracy for the world. Let us be careful not to tie the stone of autocracy to our necks while endeavoring to untie it from the necks of the peoples of Europe.

Let us call a halt in the hysteria of the hour long enough to reflect that the lifeblood of every Republic that has preceded ours has been sapped by a viper born of the so-called necessities of war. If we are wise we will profit by their example and kill this viper in the borning.

Letters in Regard to a Loan By the United States to Mexico.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.
OF MASSACHUSETTS,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Friday, June 1, 1917.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include copy of my letter to the Hon. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, dated May 28, 1917, and his reply thereto, regarding a loan by the United States to Mexico, together with a copy of certain excerpts from the new Mexican constitution:

MAY 28, 1917.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State, State Department, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I respectfully request to be informed whether it is proposed, or even considered remotely possible, that a loan be made to the de jure government of Mexico by the United States Government, or by bankers in the United States, with encouragement or upon guaranty emanating from the United States Government?

Members of Congress have learned that a certain amount of discussion is engaged in in this matter by newspaper men and others; the report now current involving a payment of from $50,000,000 to $100,000,00 by the United States to Mexico, or by American bankers to Mexico.

I realize that this is a matter about which the Congress probably will not be consulted; yet, although the matter lies wholly within the discretion of the executive, it may—even in these times—be permitted that the legislative branch of the Government receive an intimation of the policy to be followed and the reasons determining its adoption. What is more, I am hopeful that in so important a matter the Departments of State and of the Treasury would entertain the views of a Member of Congress, should it appear that there were a basis of truth in the report to which I refer, in which case that Member of Congress would feel it his clear duty to protest against such a plan.

The gravity of the situation in Mexico is so great that I am led to speak with unreserved frankness and earnestness. I sincerely trust that the report is wholly without basis, as indeed one would expect if one considered only what has been the attitude of the de jure government of Mexico toward the policy of this Government, and what President Wilson felt constrained to say to the Mexican ambassador at the time of his official reception, April 17, as given by the official Mexican organ in the United States, The Mexican Review, May, 1917, page 2.

Did it appear, however, that the Executive was really considering the matter, I should deplore the fact most profoundly. Nothing in the exigencies of the tremendous war in which we have engaged, nor in the long and lofty course of our foreign relations can be found as a basis for a transaction of this character. We can not forswear our traditions by sealing the closest possible bond with a government deliberately dedicated to a program that is wholly repugnant to the principles and institutions of the American people. A great Government loan to the Government of Mexico as now constituted, or official assistance, however informal, to the Mexican Government in securing such a loan from United States bankers, would simply mean that the United States had at last reconciled itself to indorse a program of social, economic, and religious persecution forced upon a neighboring people, which it is unthinkable would be proposed or tolerated at home. I can not square with the apparently high purposes of the President in this war, nor with the historic program of the Nation, any attempt to consolidate or finance a Government cynically frank in the declaration of its purpose to exterminate the foreign investor, the agricultural landowner, and the Christian church of all denominations. All the more is this incredible in view of the report that the Department of State has urged certain American investors not to waive their rights of appeal to their own Government, as insisted upon by the new Mexican constitution, article 27, part 1.

I append certain excerpts from the new Mexican constitution, which I believe amply to illustrate what I have ventured to express in the foregoing, and which themselves require no commentary.

I realize how little time you can give to these matters, but I venture to hope for a reply at your earliest convenience, as I contemplate publishing the present correspondence in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Yours, very truly,

GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, May 29, 1917.

Hon. GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TINKHAM: I am in receipt of your letter of the 28th relative to a loan to the Mexican Government, and beg to inform you that the matter has not been a subject of discussion with this department by any representative of the Mexican Government or by any person or persons having in contemplation the making of such a loan.

Very sincerely, yours,

ROBERT LANSING.

THE MEXICAN CONSTITUTION OF 1917.

Title 1, chapter 1, article 3. Instruction is free; that given in public institutions of learning shall be secular. Primary instruction, whether higher or lower, given in private institutions shall likewise be secular.

No religious corporation nor minister of any religious creed shall establish or direct schools of primary instruction.

Private primary schools may be established only subject to official supervision.

Primary instruction in public institutions shall be gratuitous.

Title 1, chapter 1, article 27. The ownership of lands and waters comprised within the limits of the national territory is vested originally in the nation, which has had, and has, the right to transmit title thereof to private persons, thereby constituting private property.

Private property shall not be expropriated except for reasons of public utilities and by means of indemnification.

The nation shall have at all times the right to impose on private property such limitations as the public interest may demand as well as the right to regulate the development of natural resources, which are susceptible of appropriation, in order to conserve them and equitably to distribute the public wealth. For this purpose necessary measures shall be taken to divide large landed estates; to develop small landed holdings; to establish new centers of rural population with such lands and waters as may be indispensable to them; to encourage agriculture and to prevent the destruction of natural resources, and to protect property from damage detrimental to society. Settlements, hamlets situated on private property, and communes which lack lands or water or do not possess them in sufficient quantities for their needs shall have the right to be provided with them from the adjoining properties, always having due regard for small landed holdings. Wherefore, all grants of lands made up to the present time under the decree of January 6, 1915, are confirmed. Private property acquired for the said purposes shall be considered as taken for public utility.

In the nation is vested direct ownership of all minerals or substances which in veins, layers, masses, or beds constitute deposits whose nature is different from the components of the land, such as minerals from which metals and metaloids used for industrial purposes are extracted; beds of precious stones, rock salt, and salt lakes formed directly by marine waters, products derived from the decomposition of rocks, when their exploitation requires underground work; phosphates which may be used for fertilizers; solid mineral fuels; petroleum and all hydrocarbons—solid, liquid, or gaseous.

In the nation is likewise vested the ownership of the waters of territorial seas to the extent and in the terms fixed by the law of nations; those of lakes and inlets of bays; those of interior lakes of natural formation which are directly connected with flowing waters; those of principal rivers or tributaries from the points at which there is a permanent current of water in their beds to their mouths, whether they flow to the sea or cross two or more States; those of intermittent streams which traverse two or more States in their main body; the waters of rivers, streams, or ravines, when they bound the national territory or that of the States; waters extracted from mines; and the beds and banks of the lakes and streams hereinbefore mentioned, to the extent fixed by law. Any other stream of water not comprised within the foregoing enumeration shall be considered as an integral part of the private property through which it flows; but the development of the waters when they pass from one landed property to another shall be considered of public utility and shall be subject to the provisions prescribed by the States.

In the cases to which the two foregoing paragraphs refer, the ownership of the nation is inalienable and may not be lost by proscription; concessions shall be granted by the Federal Government to private parties or civil or commercial corporations organized under the laws of Mexico, only on condition that said resources be regularly developed, and on the further condition that the legal provisions be observed.

Legal capacity to acquire ownership of lands and waters of the nation shall be governed by the following provisions:

1. Only Mexicans by birth or naturalization and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters, and their appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters, or mineral fuels in the Republic of Mexico. The nation may grant the same right to foreigners, provided they agree before the department of foreign affairs to be considered Mexicans in respect to such property, and accordingly not to invoke the protection of their Governments in respect to the same, under penalty, in case of breach, of forfeiture to the nation of property so acquired. Within a zone of 100 kilometers from the frontiers and of 50 kilometers from the seacoast no foreigner shall under any conditions acquire direct ownership of lands and waters.

2. The religious institutions known as churches, irrespective of creed, shall in no case have legal capacity to acquire, hold, or administer real property, or loans made on such real property; all such real property or loans as may be at present held by the said religious institutions, either on their own behalf or through third parties, shall vest in the nation, and any one shall have the right to denounce property so held. Presumptive proof shall be sufficient to declare the denunciation well founded. Places of public worship are the property of the nation, as represented by the federal government, which shall determine which of them may continue to be devoted to their present purposes. Episcopal residences, rectories, seminaries, orphan asylumns, or collegiate establishments of religious institutions, convents, or any other buildings built or designed for the administration, propaganda, or teaching of the tenets of any religious creed, shall forthwith vest, as of full right, directly in the nation, to be used exclusively for the public services of the federation or of the States within their respective jurisdictions. All places of public worship which shall later be erected shall be the property of the nation.

3. Public and private charitable institutions for the sick and needy, for scientific research, or for the diffusion of knowledge, mutual-aid societies or organizations formed for any other lawful purpose shall in no case acquire, hold, or administer loans made on real property, unless the mortgage terms do not exceed 10 years. In no case shall institutions of this character be under the patronage, direction, administration, charge, or supervision of religious corporations or institutions, nor of ministers of any religious creed or of their dependents, even though either the former or the latter shall not be in active service.

7. (a) In each State and Territory there shall be fixed the maximum area of land which any one individual or legally organized corporation may own.

(b) The excess of the area thus fixed shall be subdivided by the owner within the period set by the laws of the respective locality, and these subdivisions shall be offered for sale on such conditions as the respective governments shall approve, in accordance with the said laws.

(c) If the owner shall refuse to make the subdivision, this shall be carried out by the local government, by means of expropriation proceedings.

(d) The value of the subdivisions shall be paid in annual amounts sufficient to amortize the principal and interest within a period of not less than 20 years, during which the person acquiring them may not alienate them. The rate of interest shall not exceed 5 per cent per annum.

(e) The owner shall be bound to receive bonds of a special issue to guarantee the payment of the property expropriated. With this end in view the Congress shall issue a law authorizing the States to issue bonds to meet their agrarian obligations.

(f) The local laws shall govern the extent of the family patrimony, and determine what property shall constitute the same on the basis of its inalienability: it shall not be subject to attachment nor to any charge whatever.

All contracts and concessions made by former governments from and after the year 1876 which shall have resulted in the monopoly of lands, waters, and natural resources of the nation by a single individual or corporation are declared subject to revision, and the Executive is authorized to declare those null and void which seriously prejudice the public interest.

Chapter 3, article 33: Of aliens. Aliens are those who do not possess the qualifications prescribed by article 30. They shall be entitled to the guaranties granted by chapter 1, title 1, of the present constitution; but the Executive shall have the exclusive right to expel from the Republic forthwith, and without judicial process, any foreigner whose presence he may deem inexpedient.

No foreigner shall meddle in any way whatsoever in the political affairs of the country.

Title 7, article 130: The law recognizes no judicial personality in the religious institutions known as churches.

Ministers of religious creeds shall be considered as persons exercising a profession, and shall be directly subject to the laws enacted on the matter.

The State legislatures shall have the exclusive power of determining the maximum number of ministers of religious creeds, according to the needs of each locality. Only a Mexican by birth may be a minister of any religious creed in Mexico.

No ministers of religious creeds shall, either in public or private meetings, or in acts of worship or religious propaganda, criticize the fundamental laws of the country, the authorities in particular, or the Government in general; they shall have no vote, nor be eligible to office, nor shall they be entitled to assemble for political purposes.

Before dedicating new temples of worship for public use permission shall be obtained from the department of the interior (Gobernacion); the opinion of the governor of the respective State shall be previously heard on the subject. Every place of worship shall have a person charged with its care and maintenance, who shall be legally responsible for the faithful performance of the laws on religious observances within the said place of worship and for all the objects used for purposes of worship.

The caretaker of each place of public worship, together with 10 citizens of the place, shall promptly advise the municipal authorities as to the person charged with the care of the said place of worship. The outgoing minister shall in every instance give notice of any change, for which purpose he shall be accompanied by the incoming minister and 10 other citizens of the place. The municipal authorities, under penalty of dismissal and fine, not exceeding 1,000 pesos for each breach, shall be responsible for the exact performance of this provision; they shall keep a register of the places of worship and another of the caretakers thereof, subject to the same penalty as above provided. The municipal authorities shall likewise give notice to the department of the interior through the State government of any permission to open to the public use a new place of worship, as well as of any change in the caretakers. Gifts of personalty may be received in the interior of places of public worship.

Under no conditions shall studies carried on in institutions devoted to the professional training of ministers of religious creeds be given credit or granted any other dispensation of privilege which shall have for its purpose the accrediting of the said studies in official institutions. Any authority violating this provision shall be punished criminally, and all such dispensation of privilege be null and void, and shall invalidate wholly and entirely the professional degree toward the obtaining of which the infraction of this provision may in any way have contributed.

No periodical publication which, either by reason of its program, its title, or merely by its general tendencies is of a religious character, shall comment upon any political affairs of the nation, nor publish any information regarding the acts of the authorities of the country or of private individuals in so far as the latter have to do with public affairs.

Every kind of political association whose name shall bear any word or any indication relating to any religious belief is hereby strictly forbidden. No assemblies of any political character shall be held within places of public worship.

No minister of any religious creed may inherit, either on his own behalf or by means of a trustee or otherwise, any real property occupied by any association of religious propaganda or religious or charitable purposes. Ministers of religious creeds are incapable legally of inheriting by will from ministers of the same religious creed or from any private individual to whom they are not related by blood within the fourth degree.

All real and personal property pertaining to the clergy or to religious institutions shall be governed, in so far as their acquisition by private parties is concerned, in conformity with article 27 of this constitution.

No trial by jury shall ever be granted for the infraction of any of the preceding provisions.

Address of President Wilson Delivered at the Confederate Reunion in This City June 5, 1917.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MICHAEL F. PHELAN,

OF MASSACHUSETTS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks I insert the address of President Wilson delivered at the Confederate reunion in this city June 5, 1917.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT WILSON DELIVERED AT THE CONFEDERATE REUNION IN THIS CITY JUNE 5, 1917.

Mr. Commander, ladies, and gentlemen, I esteem it a very great pleasure and a real privilege to extend to the men who are attending this reunion the very cordial greetings of the Government of the United States.

I suppose that as you mix with one another you chiefly find these to be days of memory, when your thoughts go back and recall those days of struggle in which your hearts were strained, in which the whole Nation seemed in grapple, and I dare say that you are thrilled as you remember the heroic things that were then done. You are glad to remember that heroic things were done on both sides, and that men in those days fought in something like the old spirit of chivalric gallantry. There are many memories of the Civil War that thrill along the blood and make one proud to have been sprung of a race that could produce such bravery and constancy; and yet the world does not live on memories. The world is constantly making its toilsome way forward into new and different days, and I believe that one of the things that contributes satisfaction to a reunion like this and a welcome like this is that this is also a day of oblivion. There are some things that we have thankfully buried, and among them are the great passions of division which once threatened to rend this Nation in twain. The passion of admiration we still entertain for the heroic figures of those old days, but the passion of separation, the passion of difference of principle, is gone—gone out of our minds, gone out of our hearts; and one of the things that will thrill this country as it reads of this reunion is that it will read also of a rededication on the part of all of us to the great Nation which we serve in common.

These are days of oblivion as well as of memory, for we are forgetting the things that once held us asunder. Not only that, but they are days of rejoicing, because we now at last see why this great Nation was kept united, for we are beginning to see the great world purpose which it was meant to serve. Many men I know, particularly of your own generation, have wondered at some of the dealings of Providence, but the wise heart never questions the dealings of Providence, because the great long plan as it unfolds has a majesty about it and a definiteness of purpose, an elevation of ideal, which we were incapable of conceiving as we tried to work things out with our own short sight and weak strength. And now that we see ourselves part of a Nation united, powerful, great in spirit and in purpose, we know the great ends which God in his mysterious Providence wrought through our instrumentality, because at the heart of the men of the North and of the South there was the same love of self-government and of liberty, and now we are to be an instrument in the hands of God to see liberty is made secure for mankind. At the day of our greatest division there was one common passion amongst us, and that was the passion for human freedom. We did not know that God was working out in his own way the method by which we should best serve human freedom—by making this Nation a great united, indivisible, indestructible instrument in His hands for the accomplishment of these great things.

As I came along the streets a few minutes ago my heart was full of the thought that this is registration day. Will you not support me in feeling that there is some significance in this coincidence, that this day, when I come to welcome you to the National Capital, is a day when men young as you were in those old days, when you gathered together to fight, are now registering their names as evidence of this great idea, that in a democracy the duty to serve and the privilege to serve falls upon all alike? There is something very fine, my fellow citizens, in the spirit of the volunteer, but deeper than the volunteer spirit is the spirit of obligation. There is not a man of us who must not hold himself ready to be summoned to the duty of supporting the great Government under which we live. No really thoughtful and patriotic man is jealous of that obligation. No man who really understands the privilege and the dignity of being an American citizen quarrels for a moment with the idea that the Congress of the United States has the right to call upon whom it will to serve the Nation. These solemn lines of young men going to-day all over the Union to the places of registration ought to be a signal to the world, to those who dare flout the dignity and honor and rights of the United States, that all her manhood will flock to that standard under which we all delight to serve, and that he who challenges the rights and principles of the United States challenges the united strength and devotion of a Nation.

There are not many things that one desires about war, my fellow citizens, but you have come through war, you know how you have been chastened by it, and there comes a time when it is good for a Nation to know that it must sacrifice, if need be, everything that it has to vindicate the principles which it professes. We have prospered with a sort of heedless and irresponsible prosperity. Now we are going to lay all our wealth, if necessary, and spend all our blood, if need be, to show that we were not accumulating that wealth selfishly but were accumulating it for the service of mankind. Men all over the world have thought of the United States as a trading and money-getting people, whereas we who have lived at home know the ideals with which the hearts of this people have thrilled; we know the sober convictions which have lain at the basis of our life all the time, and we know the power and devotion which can be spent in heroic wise for the service of those ideals that we have treasured. We have been allowed to become strong in the providence of God that our strength might be used to prove not our selfishness but our greatness; and if there is any ground for thankfulness in a day like this, I am thankful for the privilege of self-sacrifice, which is the only privilege that lends dignity to the human spirit.

And so it seems to me that we may regard this as a very happy day, because a day of reunion, a day of noble memories, a day of dedication, a day of the renewal of the spirit which has made America great among the peoples of the world.

The Minnesota Way.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HAROLD KNUTSON,

OF MINNESOTA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to incorporate a clipping taken from the Bertha (Minn.) Herald of May 31 as showing Minnesota's way of doing things.

The district which I have the honor to represent has already contributed two full divisions of naval militia to the fighting forces of our country—one hailing from the city of Bemidji, the other from the cities of Crosby, Ironton, and Deerwood, which their superior officers have assured me are the peers of any division received at the navy yard wherein they are at present quartered. Aside from this, my district, the sixth Minnesota, has furnished its full quota to the Army and Marine, Aviation, Medical, and Hospital Corps—and what holds good of the sixth district also is true of the entire State.

Her broad and fertile acres will yield forth their usual bountiful crops for the sustenance of the human family. Her creameries will provide the Nation with butter, and her 10,000 lakes and streams will supply fish to help solve the serious food problem now confronting the world. Her mighty forests will contribute largely toward the building of the merchant fleet which will form an important item in preventing starvation among our allies.

The great North Star State, which made the first tender of troops to President Lincoln in the dark and stormy days of '61, will live up to her best traditions in the great struggle in which we are now engaged. She will give with a lavish hand not alone of those who are nearest and dearest to her, but of her treasure as well, that the Republic may march on unhindered toward the glorious destiny that has been decreed shall be ours.

The clipping is as follows:

[Bertha (Minn.) Herald.]

LIBERTY LOAN.

To the EDITOR:

A campaign has been organized for an automobile tour visiting every village in Todd County to advertise the liberty loan. A representative of the Government will accompany the party and addresses in the German language and Swedish language, as well as in the American language, explaining the liberty loan will be made. A band will also accompany the party. The purpose is to arouse the people to a realization of the fact that our Government is at war and needs the loyal cooperation and assistance of every citizen.

The good people of the county are respectfully requested and earnestly urged to give an hour of their time to attend these meetings; they will not only learn much about the Government bonds, but will get valuable information as to the real questions involved in the present war and the necessity of having every loyal citizen contribute his full share to bring about its early termination. The following is the itinerary:

The party will leave Long Prairie Monday morning, June 4, reach Burtrum at 10 a. m., Grey Eagle at 11.30 a. m., will stop at Sauk Center for luncheon and reach West Union at 3 p. m., Round Prairie at 5.30 p. m., and return to Long Prairie for an evening meeting.

It will leave Long Prairie Tuesday morning, June 5, and hold a meeting at Browerville at 10 a. m., Clarissa at 11.30 a. m., Eagle Bend at 1 p. m., Bertha at 3 p. m., Hewitt at 5 p. m., and Staples for an evening meeting.

By order of the committee.

Funeral Oration of Judge John F. Philips Over Ex-Senator Francis Marion Cockrell.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOSEPH J. RUSSELL,

OF MISSOURI,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the funeral oration of Judge John F. Philips, of Kansas City, Mo., delivered more than a year ago at the funeral of the late Francis Marion Cockrell, who for 30 years ably and faithfully represented Missouri in the United States Senate, where he rendered distinguished services for his State and his country.

Judge Philips was formerly a Member of this House, and was a lifetime personal friend of Senator Cockrell.

My attention was not called to this beautiful and touching eulogy upon the life of Senator Cockrell until now, otherwise I would have asked this permission at an earlier date.

The oration is as follows:

FUNERAL ORATION OF JUDGE JOHN F. PHILIPS OVER EX-SENATOR FRANCIS MARION COCKRELL, DELIVERED AT WARRENSBURG, MO., DECEMBER, 1915.

Friends, when the telegram came urging my presence here, I was at a farmhouse down in Pettis County, where I had just arrived, to visit some old-time friends. But how could I refuse to deny myself and come here by night to pay tribute to such a man and friend as lies pulseless in that casket?

The last time I saw him was not long ago at Washington City, when he almost dragged his feeble body around to render me a most gracious and needful service in behalf of a friend. Such was the respect and esteem in which he was held at all the departments of the Government that his card immediately admitted him to audience. And the success of the charitable mission in which I was enlisted was largely due to his commendation of me, and the matter in hand.

When his and my licenses as attorneys at law were yet new, back in 1858, we met as antagonists in a lawsuit in his county. Fired with ambition, with the zeal and impetuosity and self-assertion of a virile young manhood, we grappled like athletes, as if our lives depended on the one fall. And while I was the victor he displayed the gladiatorial spirit, in knowing how to yield gracefully; for he warmly congratulated me. And there began a friendship that in all the coming years lost nothing of its sweetness, but grew in strength. We lived in adjoining counties, and term after term of court we met either as adversaries or associates in the trial of all manner of cases. He was a foeman worthy of any lawyer's metal. While he made no pretensions to ornamental oratory he had the eloquence of earnestness and the force of logic. He was masterful in the marshaling of facts and analyzing of testimony. And such was the moral power of his character and his influence in the community that it required a powerful prize to break a jury away from him.

When the war clouds overspread us in 1861 he was among the first in central Missouri to organize a company for the Confederate Army; there our lines diverged, as I followed the old flag into the Union Army. Our good angel so directed our course that we never converged in hostile array to give occasion for personal estrangement.

He was an enthusiast. He displayed the zeal and impassioned eloquence in calling men to his standard, of Peter the Hermit in preaching the Crusades. And what a splendid soldier he was. He was not a severe disciplinarian, but his example made every soldier in his command willing to do or die to follow his standard. He is said to have always marched on foot at the head of his infantry column, carrying in one pocket the New Testament and in another a copy of Hardee's Tactics; and on his broad shoulders he carried his own equipment. He fought always in the front ranks, and never ordered his men to go where he would not lead. It is also said of him that he never knew when he was whipped nor admitted defeat. When compelled to retreat it was only a strategem. Days after Gen. Lee had surrendered, the news of which had not reached Gen. Cockrell in his remote field of action, he was still marching at the head of his brigade in quest of the enemy. When wounded he never quit the field so long as he could quench the flow of blood.

Had promotion stood to merit he should have retired from military service a major general instead of a brigadier. He was so consumed with the ambition to win victories for the Army he thought not of honors for himself.

When the flag of the Stars and Bars was furled, he sheathed his sword, to rust, and turned his face resolutely toward home and took up with courage and hope the duties of private life with unreserved allegiance to the Union and the Constitution. No man who had served the cause of the Confederacy, contributed more than he to close over the chasm the ruthless ploughshare of civil strife had run through the land, on either side of which had sprung up the rankest growth of hate and reprisal. He became the great conservator and pacificator of Missouri. So considerate and chivalrous was he that in all the supervening years of our intercourse and fraternizing, I never heard him utter a word calculated to stir up the tiger that lay dormant in the breast of a Union soldier. He was a templar knight, on whose frontal blazed the words "Courtesy and chivalry."

It was not strange when such a man came out of retirement and cast his glove into the political arena for office that he should have proved to be quite invincible. The Confederate soldiers, who knew him, rallied to his standard as they did on the stricken field of Franklin, while the Union men so admired his conservatism and nobility of soul that they, too, supported him in large numbers. When he went to the Senate, just as I entered the House of Representatives, he carried with him into the public service of the Nation the same energy, indefatigable industry, and unapproachable integrity that characterized his former life.

He presents an apt illustration of what Emerson said: "The world's great men have not commonly been great scholars, nor its great scholars great men."

Be it conceded that Missouri may have sent to the Senate men who excelled him in erudition, statesmanship, and in debate, but no one surpassed him in fidelity to his trust, and serviceableness to his constituents. He fastened upon himself the respect and confidence of the entire Senate. So thorough and painstaking were his investigations into the merits of every claim and demand submitted to him that his reports, as to the conclusions reached, as a rule, passed nem. con. His retirement from the Senate brought regrets from all sides and from every officer and clerk who knew him, and they all knew him. Such was the respect in which he was held by President and Cabinet that after his retirement from the Senate he was assigned to important work for the Government. So that he died with his harness on as a trusted public servant.

He was a serious man, rarely indulging in levity or badinage. But there was not in his nature an atom of fanaticism. So simple was he in manner, so gentle in intercourse, and so warm in salutation that no good man could come in contact with him without feeling that he had met a friend. With all of his native dignity of character and honors upon his brow, to you and me he was simply "Frank Cockrell."

If genius be the faculty of appreciation, he had it. His eye was quick to perceive the emergent occasion, and his hand was ever ready to grasp opportunity when it knocked at his door. No man I ever knew in the profession or in public life worked more intensely and discriminatingly than he. And no fitter epitaph could be chiseled on his monument or tomb than the words of Longfellow: "The nobility of labor, the long pedigree of toil." How his heart beat with sympathy! No hand of want was ever uplifted to him that went away empty if he had a dollar in his pocket. And had his means been commensurate with his generosity, he would be known as a philanthropist.

It is most fit that his body should lie in state in this church, whose faith he embraced, and at whose altar he worshiped; and how touching it is that the last lingering look at his face should be by the neighbors and friends who knew him so well and loved him so dearly. These flowers that embower his casket, decorate that pulpit, and garnish these walls with beauty are bedewed with the tears of affectionate regard. As I stand by his bier, in the presence of his unseeing eyes and his unspeaking mouth, I can but feel that such a man does not cease to live when he ceases to breathe. These flowers will wither and perish. Not so his deeds and virtues. Such a life puts in motion waves of influences that can never cease to vibrate. His deeds of valor, his honor and truth will never die. They will live on in the soul of the people. The strain of his blood and the forces of his character will tell on future generations in this community.

As matter is indestructible, and no atom that floats in the air is ever lost; as the seasons come and go only to return; as no winter is ever so bleak and drear that the springtime does not come again and all nature is ever performing the sacred mystery of reproductive growth, it is inconceivable to me that these intellects and spirits of ours, that dominate the animal and vegetable kingdom and harness the electrical elements and subjects them to the will of man, are to vanish into airy nothingness. There is something within us that bids us believe in a resurrection morn for the race. The life of such a man as Francis Marion Cockrell is a protest against utter annihilation and is an eloquent sermon for immortality. I have the faith to believe that when the light of the resurrection morn shall flash over the little mound above his body in the cemetery out yonder, in some form, clothed with celestial habiliments, he will arise to greet its gladness and its glory.

Correspondence in Regard to Mr. G. H. Thompson and His Three Patriotic Sons.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE,

OF COLORADO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted, I insert in the RECORD the following correspondence between Mr. G. H. Thompson, of Estes Park, Colo., and myself, and the acknowledgment by the President of the service rendered to the United States by Mr. Thompson and his three patriotic sons:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. THOMPSON: I have just read in the Loveland Reporter of your noble and patriotic act in giving three of your sons to the service of the United States and wish to extend to you my heartiest congratulations for this most unselfish action.

In the last one-half century of nonresistance and almost continuous material prosperity, we as a Nation have grown careless and unappreciative of our liberty as citizens of the United States; patriotic fiber of our national life has grown flabby. The keen appreciation of personal liberty growing out of and made possible only by national freedom has been dulled, but it does my heart good to know that there still remains some mothers and fathers who are willing to sacrifice their all in the interests of our wonderful Nation.

Again, Mr. Thompson, I congratulate you.

Very sincerely,

CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE.

ESTES PARK, COLO., May 1, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TIMBERLAKE: I desire to thank you for your letter of "congratulations," yet I only did my duty. I did not send my boys, for they were of age and settled the matter for themselves, but they knew that if I was of their age I should not hesitate for a moment as to my duty at a time when our Nation is in need of men.

There is not a case on record where a member of the Thompson family shirked duty at a time of this kind or where they disgraced the flag after enlisting.

We only have three boys, and they are all the children which we have. The two older ones are twins, and they are at Mare Island in training. The younger one would have been with them, but he has made a specialty of chemistry at the Denver University, and the Government chemist in the Federal service wired his professor to hold all of his students back from enlisting at the present time, for they were needed more as chemists than they were at the front and could serve their country better in that way, but he stands ready to go at any time.

I do not know who gave the matter to the Loveland Reporter, but I have been hearing from it from many sources.

It seems hard in one way to give all you have, but am glad that I have three that were ready when the call came.

I truly hope that this trouble may be settled without an open conflict, but if it comes we shall meet it and the victory will be ours.

I am glad that the President declared war, even though it has taken all we have, and if I had the opportunity of doing so I would gladly take his hand and tell him that we stand back of him in this trouble. I shall do all I can here at home, and the boys will take their stand at the front lines. While I say "I" I mean Mrs. Thompson also; we both stand together at this time.

If you have the opportunity of doing so, kindly tell President Wilson that we are praying for him daily, for at such a time as this he needs that help which can only be had from that higher power which rules us all as a Christian Nation. We are also praying that Congress may stand back of the President and give him the support which he should have by all true Americans. I would a thousand times rather be the superintendent of the Estes Park fish hatchery than to stand where some of the Members of Congress stand to-night before the world.

Again thanking you for your kindness, and remember that we are standing back of you through all of this trouble,

Yours, for our country and flag,

G. H. THOMPSON.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. THOMPSON: I beg to inclose herewith a letter from the Secretary to the President, acknowledging receipt of my letter of May 11, inclosing therewith your letter to me of recent date, relative to the enlistment of your three sons in the Army of the United States. Thinking that this might be gratifying to you it is with pleasure that I inclose the same.

Very sincerely,

CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., May 13, 1917.

Hon. CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TIMBERLAKE: The President asks me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 11 and to thank you for your courtesy in letting him see the inclosure from Mr. G. H. Thompson.

Will you not assure Mr. Thompson that the President deeply appreciates his patriotic sentiments and his good will.

Sincerely, yours,

J. B. TUMULTY,
Secretary to the President.

Right and Might, the Weapons of Liberty.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN W. LANGLEY,

OF KENTUCKY,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, in exercising the privilege granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I can think of nothing I could insert that would add greater value to it or contribute more to the edification of its readers than the following editorial which appeared in the Washington Post on registration morning. I have read a great many editorials and other articles on the present war and I have heard and read many speeches during this extra session on the same subject, but I have not heard or read anything which could be couched in the same amount of space which embodies more of the real essence of the situation than does this editorial. Its comprehensiveness, its diction, its thorough grasp of historic detail, and its conciseness of statement are, in my judgment, unsurpassed, and when the impartial historian writes the history of this war I predict that it will be but an elaboration of this rather remarkable epitome of its causes, progress, and results, written by the versatile and scholarly editor of this great newspaper.

RIGHT AND MIGHT, THE WEAPONS OF LIBERTY.

This day will be forever memorable in the history of democracy. It celebrates the decision of a mighty Nation devoted to peace to place the weapon of death in the hands of every citizen, if need be, to defend its liberty. Ten millons of these citizens of military age will enroll their names to-day. This register is a roll of honor at home and an evidence to the world that government by the people was not born to perish.

The armies of Americans about to be organized will be as large as necessary. The numbers have not been determined. They will be determined partly by the enemy. Germany will share in the decision as to the size and strength of the American forces. But the forces will be sufficient.

When the United States entered into this war it did not go in as a loser. There can be only one result, now that Liberty and Absolutism are face to face. Absolutism will die.

No American should or can speak in a boastful spirit when he declares from his heart that America will win this war. It is not for the glorification of America that the sword is drawn. Americans are not dazzled by the glint of helmets or misled by the pomp and circumstance of war. They enter into it because of necessity, and for one purpose only. When Absolutism has been struck down and Liberty is triumphant, Americans will return to their daily tasks as promptly as they now take up the sword. They will not return until the task is finished.

The world is in convulsions as a result of Germany's assault upon mankind. Russia and China are rocking with anarchy; the belligerents are bleeding; the neutrals are beginning to starve. Conditions will be worse before they are better. The neutrals who escape war will suffer even more than they would if they should go to war. But the tumult does not mean that tyranny is gaining control of humanity. It indicates, rather, that mankind is clubbing and hacking and blundering toward liberty. Every convulsion is a birth pang of freedom. If man were endowed with divine wisdom, he would not need to fall into bloody struggles in order to attain his own liberty and concede liberty to his neighbor. Being what he is, and stirred as he is by the unquenchable thirst for freedom, he goes through blood to get it. Perhaps more than half of the disorder in Russia and China is due to misunderstanding among men who are striving for the same thing and who would clasp hands and march all one way if they understood.

So far as America is concerned, however, the cause of the tumult is not obscure; it is nakedly clear. It is the attack made by Germany upon the sovereignty, independence, and liberty of America that compels America to fight. The world's confusion does not confuse Americans as to the issue, nor does the universal turmoil deter America one instant in taking up the sword to set Germany right. Russia and China may stagger like drunken men, but America will go forward to its goal. Neutrals may fight Germany or not, as their interests dictate, but from the hour that Germany struck at America the result of the war was foreordained.

Late or soon, the war will end when the German system crashes into ruins under the blows of a Nation that is armed with both right and might.

"Buy a Liberty Bond."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EVERETT SANDERS,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to quote a poem entitled "Buy a Liberty Bond," written by Mr. William K. Hamilton, of Terre Haute, Ind. This poem was artistically printed and distributed in that vicinity by the United States Trust Co., of Terre Haute, of which Mr. Hamilton is an officer. It not only happily illustrates the interest that all the financial institutions of that city and the fifth district of Indiana are taking in the war loan but typifies the wide-awake spirit of the Middle West in regard to the great war in which we are engaged. The poem is as follows:

BUY A "LIBERTY" BOND.

If you want to do your part,
Buy a bond,
So they'll know it's from the heart,
'Cross the pond,
And they'll know that as we're in it
We are bound to fight and win it,
So you must not lose a minute.
Buy a bond.

If you love your native land,
Buy a bond.
It will show them where we stand,
'Cross the pond.
If you are one not fighting fit,
Or your age lets you out of it,
You can surely do your bit."
Buy a bond.

For the honor of our land
Buy a bond,
So they all will understand
'Cross the pond.
Though we may have differed before
About the European war,
We're American to the core.
Buy a bond.

Men of many kinds and types,
Buy a bond,
Will follow the Stars and Stripes
'Cross the pond,
Feeling civilization's need,
"Universal peace guaranteed,"
They will know no class or creed.
Buy a bond.

Dear "Old Glory" seems to say
"Buy a bond,
And we're bound to win the day
'Cross the pond.
Finance the men who follow me
On the battle fields 'cross the sea,
To fight for peace and humanity."
Buy a bond.

Don't forget the debt we owe,
Buy a bond,
To the years of long ago
'Cross the pond.
Our freedom stopped, could not advance,
Independence had little chance,
Until the money came from France.
Buy a bond.

Food Production.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JOHN E. RAKER,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me by the House to extend my remarks on the question of food production, I know of no better matter to present to the House and the country than the report of the resolutions committee of California Practical Farmers, held in San Francisco, May 21 and 22, 1917.

This may be considered as the first practical convention of farmers held in California, if not in the United States, where every delegate had to qualify as a practical operating farmer. The result of the labor of this convention is voiced in the set of resolutions adopted on above-named date and contains much food for thought and consideration. The resolutions above referred to and thus adopted read as follows:

REPORT OF THE RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE OF THE CONVENTION OF CALIFORNIA PRACTICAL FARMERS, HELD IN SAN FRANCISCO MAY 21 AND 22.

Whereas the United States of America has entered into war with little or no food reserve; and

Whereas the President of the United States has issued a patriotic appeal to farmers of America to speed up food production; and

Whereas the limiting elements of increased food production are the inseparable uncertainties of farming as an occupation, such as too much or too little rainfall, indefinite seasons, inferior seed, an uncertain supply of labor, poor distribution, lack of emergency money at low rates of interest, speculation and exchange practices; and

Whereas farmers have not been made members of important national conferences called for the purpose of preparing for defensive or aggressive warfare; and

Whereas the production of food is the most necessary and important industry in which mankind may engage: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, actual farmers in California in convention assembled, hold ourselves in readiness to assist the President of the United States in restoring agriculture to the importance to which it once held so that production will keep pace with the increase in population, and to a position which will render impossible the present serious shortage of farm products, which he can do by lending the weight of his great influence to organizations of practical farmers who are seeking to carry out his desires in solving the food problem.

Resolved, That we recommend that the emergency now existing warrants action by the Government of the United States in extending credit to farmers at low rates of interest necessary for them to undertake increased production, and that in placing such loans, in view of the hazardous character of the work undertaken by the farmers, an arrangement be made for extensions in the event of inability, by means of crop shortage or lower markets, to repay same within one year.

Resolved, That we recommend that legislation shall be made effective guaranteeing minimum prices to farmers for their products during the war period to justify unusual efforts in production.

Resolved, That we recommend immediate legislation that will eliminate the hoarding of food products beyond such storage as is necessary to care for the needs of the people between crops.

Resolved, That we recommend immediate legislation putting into effect a pure-seed law modeled after the pure-food law.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the practical farmers here assembled that this is not the time to try new and uncertain crops and processes.

Resolved, That we urge upon our fellow farmers that patriotic duty, as well as profitable enterprise, renders it important that steps should be taken to increase the numbers of swine, cattle, sheep, and poultry, and improve the quality of breeding animals on the farm.

Resolved, That we recommend that special effort be made to control and prevent injury to crops and animals by disease and insect pests.

Resolved, That in view of the many chimerical visionary plans advanced by theorists that there be included in the National Council of Defense one or more practical farmers.

Whereas it is the consensus of opinion of the delegates here present that a greatly increased food production is retarded by reason of a pronounced labor shortage now existing; and

Whereas this shortage will become more acute during the harvest season, and if the farmers of the State have not sufficient labor to harvest this season's crops it will seriously impair and discourage the planting of the 1918 crops: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That full opportunity be given and earnest effort be expended to make the available California labor supply meet the demand; therefore be it further

Resolved, That the executive committee cooperate with the State council of defense in making representation to the Federal Government of the labor requirements of the State for agricultural and allied interests as indicated by this meeting and by its resolutions, and that they be urged to take such action as is necessary to bring in from time to time a sufficient number of farm laborers from the Philippine Islands or from some other source to meet the growing requirements of the State and Nation.

Whereas the State of California has established a commission having in view the improvement of the marketing conditions, both to the producer and the consumer; and

Whereas we believe that an information bureau should be established with this commission where producers and consumers could register their wants and be furnished quotations and prices: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we strongly recommend the National Government to forbid the use of grains in the production of whisky and other distilled spirits; and that we look upon the saloon in agricultural counties and districts as a distinct menace to the production of food.

Whereas this convention was called for the specific purpose of devising ways and means to increase farm production; and

Whereas the California Development Board and representatives of the California Wholesale Grocers' Association have patriotically cooperated in responding to the call of the President of the United States for such increased production: Now, be it

Resolved, That in order that this convention be made operative and effective for the period of this war, the chairman of the convention is hereby authorized to appoint an executive committee of 11, of which he is to be a member and all of whom are to be actual operating farmers except two members, one of whom shall be selected from the California Development Board and the other from the California Wholesale Grocers' Association; and be it

Resolved, That said executive committee be, and is hereby, authorized to take such steps and make such appointments to elect its secretary and other officers necessary to carry out the purposes of this convention.

Whereas this convention was conceived by the California Development Board and made possible by the liberality and patriotism of representatives of the California Wholesale Grocers' Association: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That as an expression of the appreciation and gratitude of the farmers of California, we hereby tender to each of these organizations our most sincere thanks.

Whereas this convention is organized to carry out a patriotic purpose: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the executive committee be, and is hereby, instructed to cooperate with the President of the United States and the governor of California, and notify them to that effect.

Respectfully submitted.

Prohibition.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS
OF
HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,
OF WISCONSIN,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, our good prohibitionist friends having up to date failed in persuading the people of the United States to adopt nation-wide prohibition by vote are now endeavoring to force the dose upon an unwilling people by various roundabout methods, and especially just at the present time they are trying every devious device that their most ingenious legislative experts can frame to put over some form of prohibitive law.

So much utter absurdity is fulminated by the devotees of this ridiculous propaganda, so much downright falsehood is uttered in the name of science, and there is such a general and abundant fund of misinformation being spread broadcast that I think a little sane and honest knowledge will be welcomed by the great mass of thinking people who wish to form a clear idea of the subject.

I take pleasure therefore in inserting the appended:

[Address of Mr. Julius Liebmann, of Liebmann Sons Brewing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., delivered before the spring meeting of the National Institute of Social Sciences, at the Academy of Medicine, New York City, May 11, 1917. Mr. Liebmann is a member of the advisory counsel on alcohol, of the committee of the department of health of the city of New York.]

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, in 1907 the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences awarded the first and second prize for the best essay on "The Struggle Against Alcoholism," to Dr. L. Viaud and H. A. Vasnier. These two essays were published in one book to which Mr. Cheysson, president of the French league against alcoholism, wrote an appreciative preface highly recommending it.

There is no way of understanding better the difference of views prevailing in this country as against those held abroad, than by reading this French book.

In the very first chapter the author says: "The attack must not be made on the use, but exclusively on the abuse of alcoholic beverages, and above all others on distilled liquors." And he says in the same chapter, "It is even reasonable not to consider the consumption of wine, cider, and beer as a necessary evil and without remedy, but rather to regard the wine habit as an antidote to alcoholism. Being an advocate of wine, I must necessarily be so of cider and beer."

The second chapter of the book is devoted to "Boissons Hygieniques," meaning wholesome beverages, and under this heading the author takes the classification of the French Government which includes among the healthful beverages having slight stimulating quality, wine, beer, cider, coffee, and tea.

In this country the most authoritative work on the drink problem was published by the well-known committee of 50. Last November, during a prohibition fight in the city of Baltimore, one of the five great medical men who wrote the "Physiological Aspects of the Liquor Problem" for the committee, namely Dr. William H. Welch, together with three other physicians of the Johns Hopkins University, signed a statement against prohibition.

In his autobiography, Mr. Andrew D. White, formerly president of Cornell and ex-ambassador to Russia and Germany, devotes a lengthy chapter comparing the drinking habits of the United States to those prevailing abroad. In it occurs this sentence: "The best temperance workers that I know are the men who brew light, pure beer, and the wine growers of California who raise and sell at a very low price wines pleasant and salutary—if wines can be so."

In 1914, I had some correspondence with Dr. White and in a letter which he wrote to me he says: "Far from having changed my opinions, my experience and thought since my former publication of them have only confirmed me in the soundness of the view then presented by me."

I am a brewer and stand for temperance, but I prefer to quote Mr. White before I make the statement myself that the brewing industry in this country has been a factor to promote sobriety.

The best proof that brewing has promoted sobriety can be gleaned from the records of the Internal Revenue Department, which show that in 1860 the per capita consumption of distilled spirits was 2.86 gallons in the United States, which steadily declined up to 1896 to just a fraction of one one-hundredth over 1 gallon. During all this time—from 1860 to 1896—there was no increase of prohibition States in the Union, with the exception of Kansas, for Maine had been under prohibition prior to 1860, and there were few localities made dry under local or county option.

But since the organization of the Anti-Saloon League, in about 1894, and due to its success in making a large portion of the United States dry (they claim 40 per cent is dry now), the per capita consumption of whisky, instead of continuing its downward course, has been increased, so that, because of the addition of many prohibition States, we consume 50 per cent of distilled liquors more per capita than we did in 1896.

In the brewing of beer, alcohol is an incident and is not sought for by the brewer. On the contrary, the brewer is the only purveyor of an alcoholic beverage who has consistently tried and succeeded in reducing its alcoholic strength. The cider maker sometimes adds sugar to his apple juice in order to produce more alcohol for the purpose of preserving the cider. The same is done by the vintner who sells fortified wines and puts in alcohol to help them. The distiller takes the alcohol which is in diluted form in the fermented mash and concentrates it before he presents it to the consumer. The American brewer brews beer of half the alcoholic strength of British beer. The modern brewer needs no alcoholic strength to preserve his beer. He relies upon pure yeast culture, refrigerating machinery, and pasteurization of his unfinished product to produce the most wholesome of all alcoholic beverages.

In all license States we have our choice between fermented beverages like beer, containing on an average of 3½ per cent of alcohol with 96½ per cent of water and malt extract, or we may choose distilled liquors with 35 to 40 per cent of alcohol. Prohibition abolishes this choice, for when breweries are shut down there will be no beer. Beer such as the American people have been accustomed to can only be produced in a well-equipped brewery. But whisky can easily and secretly be made by anyone. Thus national prohibition would place the United States on a whisky basis. You have all heard of a moonshine still but never of a moonshine brewery. [Applause.]

State prohibition has been a failure in this country, and the demand for national prohibition is a confession that State prohibition is unsuccessful. For this reason there has been a demand to amend the Constitution by what is known as the Hobson resolution to obtain national prohibition. Now that the chance for amending the Constitution and thus obtaining national prohibition in a hurry is waning, this war and the necessity for supplying our allies with food furnishes a pretext for demanding national prohibition as a war measure. Some weeks ago a statement was made by the head of an important agricultural station in a western State, that 625,000,000 bushels of grain were used for brewing and distilling. The distillers used less than 40,000,000 bushels of grain and half of what they used was to produce alcohol for industry and munitions and not for alcoholic beverages. Of this amount 35 per cent was returned to the farmer for feeding cattle.

When we brewers showed that we actually used only 70,000,000 bushels of grain, of which 24,000,000 bushels were returned to the farmer as a better milk-producing food than in its original state, we were accused of inconsistency, because we have heretofore emphasized the value of brewing in farming, and we still emphasize it, because we do take a large part, about one-fourth, of the barley that is raised and on account of the high price we pay, we advanced the general price that the farmer gets for his barley. We are not minimizing; we are simply correcting a willfully exaggerated statement. The facts regarding the quantity of grain consumed in brewing and distilling are so readily obtainable from the United States Department of Internal Revenue, to which brewers make monthly reports, that the failure to produce them points to a deliberate suppression of the truth. [Applause.]

As to the necessity of curtailing the use of grain for brewing, we do not propose to set up our judgment above that of the authorities of our Government. But the most competent authority, the Agricultural Department, has refused to make a definite statement before it has all the facts, and it has now received an appropriation of $25,000,000 for the purpose of investigation. It is also asking to obtain unlimited power to control food supplies as may be necessary in any way that the facts warrant. None of us object to that, but we do object to having the facts prejudged by a self-constituted unofficial body of prohibition enthusiasts who are trying to commit the Government to a premature conclusion and to tie its hands irrevocably.

In this week's bulletin of the Health Department occurs a statement about the use of grain. The amount of the grain is exaggerated, but I will pass that. Speaking of protein there occurs this sentence: "No amount of sophistry can overcome the fact of this absolute waste of the essential constituent of food."

I deny this statement, and I base my denial on the evidence of the father of agricultural chemistry—the great Von Liebig—and further on the recent researches of Sorensen on this very question of waste. I doubt very much that anyone in our board of health would care to contradict so noted a scientist. Sorensen, the great Danish physiological chemist, shows that 100 kilograms of barley have an energy value of 371,000 calories. He shows that when barley is fed to cattle for producing beef for human food there is an ultimate loss of 181,000 calories, or 49 per cent of the food value. On the other hand, the food values lost from barley used in beer amounts to 144,000 calories, or only 39 per cent, besides which the ingredients in beer are in the most digestible form.

In other words, the food value of barley used in brewing is not thrown away. It is absorbed by the consumer of beer. If he did not get this food value in beer, he would have to replace it with some other food.

The other reason assigned for the desirability of prohibition in war times is that of promoting efficiency. In this connection the European nations at war are often cited as examples for us to follow. I deny the constant assertion that European nations are practicing what prohibitionists preach. In fact, not one European country, neutral or belligerent, has ever tried the kind of prohibition that prevails in our country—which indiscriminately places in the same category distilled with fermented liquors. All of them make a broad discrimination in favor of wine and the nutritious beverage beer as against distilled liquor.

Some countries, like Spain, Portugal, and Italy, which in consumption of wine next to France are at the head of the list, but lowest as to alcoholism, have no restrictive laws. I doubt if any of you ladies or gentlemen on your travels in these countries just named saw any drunken men. Other States, like Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries, restrict the use of spirits, but encourage the use of beer and wine. Beer in Switzerland is tax free. In Denmark and Norway those below an alcoholic content are tax free, and the others pay the regular tax.

None of the belligerent nations, even after two and one-half years of war, has entirely prohibited brewing. Great Britain during the last year (1916) used for brewing 44,000,000 bushels of malt, besides other cereals, and in its Government-controlled canteens beer is sold. It permits the manufacture of light teetotal beer containing less than 2 per cent of alcohol, which may be sold after nondrinking hours.

The French Government encourages the use of beer, and has recently remitted the "octroi" duties, formerly a large source of revenue. As a result there has been a large increase in the consumption of malt liquors. The war ministry of France requisitioned 132,000,000 gallons of wine for use of its troops in 1916, and has already requisitioned 200,000,000 of this year's wine, besides 40,000,000 gallons of the Algerian crop, for the same purpose, and has taken over special warehouse accommodations for its storage. The French Government classes beer with wine and cider as hygienic beverages, and issues a daily ration to every French soldier of one-third liter (nearly two-thirds of a pint) of wine.

Russia, which upon order of the council of ministers published on December 3, 1914, prohibited the sale of spirits and vodka until the end of the war, did not prohibit the brewing of beer. It empowered local communities to regulate or prohibit its sale. The excise duty on beer has been increased (from 1 ruble and 70 copecks per pood of malt extract to 6 rubles) and the percentage of alcohol has been ordered reduced from 9 per cent to 3.7 per cent. This new beer of low alcoholic content is about the same as American beer; in fact, the average alcoholic strength of American is still lower.

Germany has requisitioned 20 per cent of the total output of its breweries for the soldiers at the front and in an order issued by the army department on January 12, 1916, the central barley purchasing agency has been requested "in order to continue the uninterrupted supply of beer to the troops in the field, the breweries which supply the army with beer are to have the preference in receiving their supply of barley."

In our neighboring Dominion of Canada brewers are permitted to brew beer provided it contains not more than 2½ per cent of proof spirit, and from the United States consular reports just issued the manufacture of beer of greater strength is not interfered with—but the brewers may not deliver it to dealers but only directly to the consumer.

In France and other countries the word alcohol is applied only to distilled spirits. Most continental nations in Europe would no more class beer as an intoxicant on account of its small percentage of alcohol than they would class coffee as a dangerous drug because of its small percentage of caffeine that is in it.

All of the European armies have their medical advisers. Prohibition is difficult to enforce in civil life. It can easily be enforced in an army, particularly at the front.

There have been two and one-half years of war. Certainly if the efficiency of the soldiers could be increased by depriving them of their wine and beer and spirits, the medical men would have recommended prohibition long ago.

Beer and wine have been used by European nations and their ancestry for over 5,000 years. Whisky, on the other hand, is a comparatively modern drink. Columbus could not have used it on his ships. If alcohol diluted in wine and beer is as injurious as so many prohibitionists claim, the countries of the civilized world would be populated by degenerate weaklings. The countries at war prove that the virile fighting men have as much courage, as much stamina and intelligence as was ever shown in any previous war. [Applause.]

I will also insert the following extract from the Sacramento (Cal.) Bee of May 19, 1917, which is well worth reading just at the present time:

CLAMORING FOR A DRY BASIS FOR THE WAR.

The rabid prohibitionists who clamor that this Nation must go to a prohibition basis during the continuance of the war, if the war is to be won, seem to forget that French soldiers are fighting largely on wine, Germany is battling considerably on beer, while England's soldiers are given daily rations of rum.

And while this is being done the United States is asked to decree that while she is sending soldiers into the field as the avowed champions of human liberty and human rights, against Kaiserism and intolerance, she is at the same time to take from each and every man every vestige of his own personal liberty.

These prohibitionists are all for prohibition first and patriotism in the "also ran" class.

They are holding up their hands in holy horror at the sight of drunken soldiers now and then on the streets of San Francisco and San Antonio. And they will be shocked more and more by such sights as the days go on.

It is their own fault and the fault of those who were with them in abolishing the Army canteen. Fully 85 per cent of the Christian race, it is estimated, take alcoholic beverages, at least, occasionally.

It is not to be expected therefore that simply because a man elects to become a soldier and risks his life for the flag he loves that he should forever forswear even light wine or beer. He is going to get it somewhere and somehow, and if he does not get it honestly and fairly and legally in his canteen he is going to take stronger drink on the outside.

That is human nature and all the prohibitive laws from here to the hereafter can not unmake or remake or overmake human nature.

The United States Army, as an army, and the United States Navy as well, are composed of comparatively sober men. But when they get into Presidios in big cities and are treated as though they were little children in a reformatory a goodly number of them are apt to break loose and go beyond the bounds of sobriety.

You don't see sailors from Italian men-of-war or French men-of-war or German men-of-war reeling around the streets of cities they visit. And why not?

Simply because the sailors of the war vessels of Italy and France, instead of being treated as though they were convicts, are encouraged in the temperate use of light wines and beers, and they remain sober throughout the years.

On the other hand, the American sailor, hounded by Secretary Daniels and his fellows in authority, looked upon as a felon if he even takes a glass of wine or beer, treated not as a human being at all, gets a shore leave from his penitentiary ship and it is little wonder if in numerous instances he gets drunk.

There are a great many people that never get drunk who, if treated as the American sailor or marine is treated in our Navy, would do the very same thing occasionally.

I will also append a letter from Mr. T. M. Gilmore, the president of the National Model License League, which contains some very valuable truths plainly if somewhat frankly expressed, and I commend this letter to my prohibitionist friends.

NATIONAL MODEL LICENSE LEAGUE,
Louisville, Ky., June 1, 1917.

Hon. WILLIAM J. CARY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CARY: I appreciate very highly your letter of the 30th, and I regret that the average Member of Congress does not exhibit the moderation and the sanity that is being exhibited by such men as yourself.

It would be just about as easy, in my opinion, to run a dam across the Atlantic Ocean and change the Gulf and other streams as to prohibit the manufacture and use of alcoholic beverages in this country.

Ninety per cent of the people who advocate prohibition are users of alcohol in one form or another, and if national prohibition should be adopted by the General Government it would require an enormous standing army to suppress illicit manufacture, even in part.

Without such an army the moonshiner will flourish like the green-bay tree.

This Government, in my opinion, could not successfully collect a tax of $2 per gallon in the years gone by, and I think it would be a difficult matter in the years to come, but if all competition should be taken from the moonshiner then we shall see moonshine distilleries erected all along the Hudson River, I imagine, and there will doubtless be found very large plants in cellars along Broadway.

Robert Peel expressed the limitations of law when he said in Parliament at one time: "If England makes her tariff too high, the smugglers will underbid her."

Human nature is a curious problem, and the more I see of it the less I know of it. A man takes offense because I express the opinion in a letter to him that the Government should not say to a private citizen or to a soldier, "You shall not have a glass of beer or a glass of wine or an old-fashioned toddy." And, then, perhaps, he whispers to his nearest neighbor or to himself, "As soon as this House adjourns I am going out and get me a drink."

I have known a vast number of prohibitionists, but I have not found one up to the present time—and I have been trailing for 35 years—who would refuse a bottle of good old whisky if I offered it to him properly wrapped up.

Getting away, however, from the question of the demand for alcohol being persistent, it would seem to me that the wealthy men of the East—the Rockefellers and the like—are playing with fire in urging the confiscation, without compensation, of the hundreds of millions that have been invested under the sanction of law by the distillers, brewers, and wine men of the country.

This idea of confiscation is becoming popular in this country, just as it is becoming popular in European countries, and especially in Russia.

If the liquor man's property can be confiscated without any compensation on the ground that liquors are believed by many people to be detrimental to the public welfare, then, why not confiscate the tobacco man's property, and the coca-cola man's property, and also the multimillionaire's property, the latter on the ground that great fortunes are detrimental to the public welfare?

Thanking you again for your letter, I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours,

T. M. GILMORE,
President National Model License League.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time that all who believe in real and effective temperance work should get together and stop this everlasting playing at cross-purposes on a vital subject. Liquor will be made as long as the sunshine and rain ripen the grape and bring the grain to mellow harvest. Men will drink of some form of stimulating beverage as long as they have a thirst to quench and a throat to swallow, and the wise legislator, the true moralist, is he who leads the tastes of man in safe and moderate pathways.

There is no use repeating the old statement that prohibition does not prohibit. Everybody who knows anything knows that it does not. Let us therefore take the advice of St. Paul, who said, "Be ye therefore temperate in all things," and pass laws that will make our boys and men temperate and moderate not only in the using of beverages but in every other function of human life.

Address of Hon. Frank Clark, of Florida, at Arlington National Cemetery on Sunday, June 3, 1917.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. H. GARLAND DUPRÉ,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted I insert in the RECORD the address of Hon. FRANK CLARK, of Florida, a Member of the House of Representatives, delivered at Arlington National Cemetery on Sunday, June 3, 1917.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. FRANK CLARK, OF FLORIDA, AT ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY ON SUNDAY, JUNE 3, 1917.

Commander and members of Camp No. 171 of Confederate Veterans, ladies, and gentlemen, I esteem this opportunity to address you as the proudest privilege of my life. This is the anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis, the beloved President of the Southern Confederacy, and to-morrow will be the beginning of what in all human probability will prove to be the last great reunion of the survivors of those who followed the banner of what is sometimes called the "lost cause." While it is not the purpose of the veterans of the Southern Confederacy, the Daughters of the Confederacy, or the Sons of the Confederacy to keep alive any of the animosities which were engendered during the four years of fratricidal strife, it is our purpose to preserve for posterity the truth with reference to the motives which actuated the soldiers of the Southern Confederacy and the principles for which they contended during that stupendous struggle. The issues which unhappily divided the two great sections of our common country for so many years having culminated in an appeal to arms in 1861, were settled by the stern arbitrament of war in 1865, and the people of the South have no desire to resurrect those issues for further disputation, but having in good faith accepted the result, prefer to contemplate in brotherly love the glories of a reunited, happy, and contented country, while indulging the fervent hope that this great Republic shall forever remain an inestimable blessing to mankind.

While we love the one country and the one flag, we of the South do not need to apologize for the action of the veterans of the Southern Confederacy and their comrades of the sixties. No true son of the South would apologize, and no brave son of the North would respect him if he did. It would serve no good purpose at this time to enter into any extended discussion of the causes which plunged our country into the War between the States in 1861. It is sufficient to say that the country for many years had been divided into two schools of political thought, each contending for the mastery and each endeavoring to have its construction of the Constitution written into the law of the land. Northern statesmen contended that supreme absolute power was vested in the Federal Government; that no State had the right to withdraw from the compact of union; and that the Federal Government had the right to restrain or coerce a State. Southern statesmen took the position that the States were sovereign; that the Federal Government had no power other than such as had been delegated to it by the respective States in the Constitution; and that any State had the right to withdraw from the Federal Union. This discussion raged on the hustings, in the press, and in both Houses of Congress until, by the elections of 1860, Mr. Lincoln, recognized throughout the South as a bitter partisan of the northern idea, was elevated to the Chief Magistracy of the Republic. Believing that the election of Mr. Lincoln and the coming into control of the extreme advocates of absolute power centralized in the Federal Government meant the destruction of State sovereignty, the people of South Carolina shortly afterwards sought to peaceably withdraw from the Federal compact into which they had voluntarily entered. The action of South Carolina was soon emulated by 10 other southern Commonwealths, and these 11 States formed the "Confederate States of America." But these Southern States were not to be allowed to peaceably dissolve their connection with a Government which had become odious to them. The governor of South Carolina demanded of Mr. Lincoln, then President of the United States, that Federal troops vacate Forts Moultrie and Sumter, in Charleston Harbor, and in answer to this demand he started a steamer, the Star of the West, with large reenforcements to Maj. Anderson, then in command at Sumter. The South Carolina State troops demanded of Maj. Anderson the surrender of the fort, and upon his refusal opened fire and soon reduced it, and thus the great struggle began. President Lincoln immediately issued a call for 75,000 volunteers with which to coerce these Southern States, and then the war, destined to be the most fearful the world had ever previously known, was on in earnest.

During the years of discussion of the momentous questions which led to the war, in the thick of the heated debates in the Senate was the tall, slender form of Jefferson Davis, the peer of any man who ever occupied a seat in that historic Chamber. It is a strange coincidence that the two mightiest figures of that greatest military drama of the ages—Abraham Lincoln and Jefferson Davis—were both born in the State of Kentucky and that neither of them entered this contest from his native State.

Jefferson Davis, although born in Kentucky, was transplanted to Mississippi at an early age, and his life's work is closely linked with the history of his adopted State. He was educated at West Point and served in the Regular Army of the United States, but when quite a young man became a planter of Mississippi, eventually drifting into politics. In 1844 he was a presidential elector, and shortly thereafter became a Representative in Congress, from which he resigned in 1846 and went into the Mexican War as colonel of the Mississippi Rifles. In his brief career in the Mexican War Jefferson Davis and his Mississippi Rifles shed new luster on American arms and carried the Stars and Stripes into the very halls of the Montezumas. Shortly after his return from Mexico he was appointed United States Senator from Mississippi by the governor, and then elected by the legislature to fill out an unexpired term. In this great forum he ably and faithfully represented his State, taking part in all the great debates and measuring up intellectually with the giants who adorned the Senate in that day.

In 1853 Franklin Pierce, who had become President, called Mr. Davis into his official family as Secretary of War. In this exalted station he again measured up to the duties of the hour and left in indelible characters the impress of his genius on that great governmental department. Mr. Davis while Secretary of War not only attended diligently to the routine of the department but established improved methods which are still in use, and at the Cabinet table was regarded as the chief adviser of the President. That magnificent structure known as Cabin John Bridge was built under his direction and stands to-day as a silent testimonial to his great abilities; the annex to the Capitol Building was constructed under his supervision, and unborn millions while gazing with wonder and admiration upon that grand Capitol of the greatest Republic on the earth will remember that the genius of Jefferson Davis was the directing force which rounded out and completed the magnificent edifice. His great mind was first to conceive the idea of building as a military necessity a transcontinental railway connecting the East with the Pacific Ocean, and he strongly advocated this, at that time, colossal scheme.

After his brilliant and valuable service as Secretary of War the people of Mississippi again called on Mr. Davis to serve them in the Senate, and for the second time he took his seat in that great legislative body at the most critical period of the country's history. Equipped with both military and civil experience and a broad knowledge of affairs, he was easily the peer of any man in that body of exceptionally brilliant and brainy men. He plunged at once into the debates, not, as his enemies have so often charged, with the purpose of disrupting the Union, but for the purpose of saving constitutional government and preserving the Union. In every speech delivered by Mr. Davis on the floor of the Senate he plead for the Union, the Union of our fathers, the Union under the Constitution. Even in his farewell address, when leaving the Senate forever, he spoke with wonderful tenderness and love for the Union of the "fathers of the Republic." On January 20, 1861, the day before he took leave of the Senate, in a letter to his devoted friend, former President Franklin Pierce, he said, "Mississippi not as a choice but of necessity has resolved to enter on the trial of secession." Again in the same letter he said, "Civil war has only horror for me, but whatever circumstances demand shall be met as a duty," and so forth. Jefferson Davis desired to preserve the Union, but he desired to preserve it as it had been established, on a Constitution which recognized and respected the sacred sovereignty of the respective States. He loved the Union and he loved the flag. He had been brought up to love, honor, and revere the starry emblem of the Republic, and had followed it across the sandy plains of Mexico, offering his life a willing sacrifice upon the altar of his country.

When the delegates from the 11 Southern States met in convention to organize the Confederate States of America, all eyes were turned toward Jefferson Davis as the one man to safely pilot the new government at the beginning of its career, and he was chosen as the first and, as it proved to be, the last president of the Southern Confederacy. No man was ever beset with greater difficulties than he encountered during his chief magistracy of the storm-tossed and battle-rent republic. With no army and no navy, with no munition plants, with no manufacturing establishments, with an empty treasury, without recognition by any government on earth, with practically all our ports blockaded from the very beginning, Jefferson Davis and his associates organized a government and for four long years held at bay a rich and powerful Government, with unlimited supplies, inexhaustible credit, and an army of five or six times the strength of the army of the South. My countrymen, the world can show no parallel to this amazing achievement, and when the last vestige of partisan rancor and sectional hate shall have passed away, and the impartial historian of the future shall come to record the story of the War between the States he will say that the followers of Lee, Jackson, Stuart, and the other immortals of the Confederacy were the bravest men and the most unselfish patriots the world has ever known.

When Robert E. Lee, with the remnants of the proud Army of Northern Virginia, surrendered to Grant at Appomattox the star of the Southern Confederacy went down in gloom, and the "bonnie blue flag" was furled forever. Throughout the southland gaunt poverty stalked where wealth had reigned; disaster was on every hand; blackened chimneys stood as silent sentinels over the ruins of once happy homes; homeless wanderers aimlessly walked through deserted streets; and every home was a house of mourning. Amid the wreck and ruin of this black night of our despair unscrupulous political adventurers from the North swooped down upon our prostrate forms like a horde of hungry vultures and soon intrenched themselves in the places of power. I need not at this time rehearse the story of how these carpetbaggers, with the lately freed and now enfranchised negro as their pliant tool, took possession of our State governments and conducted their carnivals of crime in every southern capital. Our people were disfranchised and helpless, but the God of our fathers had not forgotten us, and soon an invisible government sprang into being, and in a little while the vultures had taken flight, the heel of the negro was lifted from the white man's neck, and the Confederate veteran and his children again came into their own. While all the South suffered, Jefferson Davis, the matchless chieftain of the Confederacy, suffered more than all. When Gen. Lee surrendered, Mr. Davis left Richmond with his Cabinet and archives of the government with the intention of making a stand with the army of Joseph E. Johnston somewhere in North Carolina. He reached Gen. Johnston's headquarters near Greensboro, but after consultation with him it was decided best for Johnston to surrender to Sherman; and then, realizing that this was the end, Mr. Davis decided to try to reach Cuba and then Europe. He felt, and his friends felt, that he would be arrested, probably given a drumhead court-martial, and summarily executed. He was captured near Irwinsville, Ga., transported to and imprisoned in Fortress Monroe. He was incarcerated in this prison and kept there for more than two years charged with being implicated in the murder of President Lincoln and with treason against the United States.

Happily, the brave and patriotic people of the North, when they learned of the cruelties inflicted upon Mr. Davis, did not approve of them, and finally Horace Greeley and other big-hearted, broad-minded Americans became surety on his bond for his appearance in court to answer the charges against him, and once more Jefferson Davis was a free man.

Whether serving his country in the Army of the United States, whether pursuing the peaceful life of a planter on his Mississippi plantation, whether contending for the rights of his people in the Senate of the United States, whether as Chief Magistrate of a great and noble people, or whether suffering the tortures of incarceration in a prison, Jefferson Davis was always the same gentle, able, brave, and chivalric southern gentleman and patriot. He attended the Federal court in Richmond to answer the charges, and the Federal authorities, not daring to go to trial, dismissed the charges, and he walked forth thoroughly vindicated in the eyes of the world. Standing in this presence, here at the old home of the immortal Lee, here in sight of the great Capitol of my country, I solemnly declare to you that Jefferson Davis was not a traitor to his country, and his enemies did not dare put him on trial for treason, because they knew that it would result in a judicial determination by the Supreme Court of the United States that no treason had ever stained his garments.

It has been charged that he and his associates were conspirators engaged in a conspiracy against the United States. I denounce this charge as utterly false. One of the chief elements of conspiracy is secrecy, and the southern leaders proclaimed their intentions and purposes from the floor of the House and Senate, on the hustings, and in the press. Every step was made public, and absolutely nothing was concealed. Let us then hear no more of treason, of conspiracy, and of rebellion. Our people were loyal to the Constitution as they saw it; they were open in all they did; and they engaged in no rebellion. It was a war between the States of this Republic, brought about by reason of a difference of opinion as to the rights of the individual States, which could not be amicably adjusted in the civil forums.

The issue having, by force of arms, been decided against us, we are now again one people, with one country and one flag.

The people of the South to-day need give no guaranty of their loyalty to "Old Glory." No foreign war has ever been fought in which the blood of the South was not freely spilled on every battle field. No battle with a foreign foe was ever pitched but that the sons of the South were found where "thickest fell the red rain of human slaughter," and the time will never come when the descendants of those who "wore the gray" in the sixties will fail to answer the call to defend the flag of this Republic.

We are to-day confronted with danger from the strongest military power in all the world. United as one beneath the ample folds of the Stars and Stripes, the descendants of those who "wore the blue" and those who "wore the gray" in solid phalanx, will soon move across the mighty Atlantic to meet in battle array the legions of the Kaiser, the war lord of the civilized world. While democracies like ours have been pursuing the paths of peace, without a thought of war, this mighty monarch has been preparing for this awful day. His traps have been set, his nets spread, and everything made ready to appease his gluttonous appetite by devouring and absorbing and bringing under his dominion the peaceful countries of the world. James Whitcomb Riley, in what I shall designate as "Riley's Vision of the Spider of Berlin," describes with great accuracy the present situation. He says:

I dreamed I was a spider,
A big, fat, hungry spider,
A lusty, rusty spider
With a dozen palsied limbs.

With a dozen limbs that dangled
Where three wretched flies were tangled
And their buzzing wings were strangled
In the middle of their hymns.

And I mocked them like a demon,
A demoniacal demon,
Who delights to be a demon
For the sake of sin alone.

And with fondly false embraces
Did I weave my mystic laces
Round their horror-stricken faces
Till I strangled every groan.

And I smiled to see them weeping,
For to see an insect weeping,
Sadly, sorrowfully weeping,
Fattens every spider's mirth.

And to see a fly's heart quaking
And with anguish ever aching
Till you see it slowly breaking
Is the sweetest thing on earth.

I experienced a pleasure,
Such a highly-flavored pleasure,
Such intoxicating pleasure,
That I drank of it like wine.

And my mortal soul engaged
That no spider in the pages
Of the history of ages
Felt a rapture more divine.

I careened around and capered,
Madly, mystically capered,
For three days and nights I capered
Round my web in wild delight.

Then with fierce ambition burning
And an awful thirst and yearning
I hastened my returning
With a fiendish appetite.

And I found my victims dying,
"Ha!" they whispered "We are dying";
Faintly whispered "We are dying,
And our earthly course is run."

And the scene was so impressing
That I breathed a special blessing
As I killed them with caressing
And devoured them one by one.

If republics are to survive, if democracies are still to live and bless the people, the webs of the great German spider must be destroyed, and the spiders must be killed. The American people did not want war. The American people do not now desire war, but war has been forced upon us, and if we will hand down to posterity the blessings of this Government we must destroy the enemies of republican institutions, and I feel that when the descendants of the heroes of the sixties set sail for the battle fields of Europe, determined to maintain the honor and the glory of our flag in those distant lands, Davis and Lincoln, leaning over the balustrade of heaven, will smile approvingly on the inspiring scene.

Speech of Hon. Isaac Siegel.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RICHARD W. AUSTIN,

OF TENNESSEE,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] in New York City, May 30, Memorial Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech is as follows:

ADDRESS OF REPRESENTATIVE ISAAC SIEGEL, OF THE TWENTIETH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF NEW YORK, AT STAR CASINO, NEW YORK CITY, ON MAY 30, 1917.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, gentlemen, and children of the public schools of Harlem, on June 14 of this year we will celebrate the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the birth of Old Glory. During all these years it has stood for liberty and justice. It has been the emblem of religious freedom. It has been the symbol of equal opportunity to all men, whether native or foreign born. It is the sign of free speech and a free press. It represents humanity's hope, for to-day we are engaged in the world's greatest and bitterest struggle. We fought for our independence in 1776, and in 1917 we are fighting for the freedom and independence of the whole world's peoples.

It is a fight for God, for humanity, and for our country. Regardless of the cost, we are going to win this war. Success is bound to crown our efforts, for it is a struggle against the autocracies of the world. With justice and right on our side, we live in the devout hope of achieving the ends which we seek. We are not fighting to obtain either land or treasure. We are not battling for material or commercial gain. We are not seeking anything for ourselves, but we are seeking the freedom of the seas and the freedom of mankind everywhere. We are looking forward to the day when the peace of the world can be deemed assured. It can not come and it will not come until we have consecrated ourselves to the great work that is before us. We must go forward with courage and determination to fight the battle, lining up shoulder to shoulder and standing by your President and my President, Woodrow Wilson. Let us in these trying times always remember that when he speaks he expresses the mandate of 103,000,000 people, for this is, indeed, "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people."

All over this great Republic, whether in the Philippines, or in the lately acquired Virgin Islands, in Porto Rico, or Alaska, a free people are standing together ready to make those sacrifices of wealth and life itself in behalf of your America and my America, our common country.

Every citizen of the United States is in one of two classes—either he is loyal to our country or he is a traitor to it. There can not and there must not be another classification. Either a man is for America, which has placed him on the same plane as his fellow men, or is with its enemy. If loyal, he need but be reminded of his duty or obligation to serve her, and he will respond; he will join with all other law-abiding and patriotic citizens in doing his bit. If he can not fight, he will do his share by buying a liberty bond. He will help spread the doctrine of real patriotism and loyalty everywhere. He will denounce with all the vigor at his command those who have temporarily forgotten what citizenship means and who are now engaged by pen and by tongue in creating dissension amongst our people when unity is absolutely necessary for our success.

Let us then appraise and appreciate the value of our citizenship in this critical hour, and let us then learn that the individual must now efface himself and become part of the great entity known as the American Nation, with one thought in his mind, namely, that the old tradition of the United States shall be upheld at all hazards. As in the past so now brave and red-blooded men, women, and children are ready to sacrifice on the altar of liberty all their possessions so that our flag may continue to fly, indicative of the equal rights of all men, regardless of race, creed, or color. Let us then be imbued with the same spirit that actuated Nathan Hale in uttering those ever memorable words, "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." Let us recall the famous utterance of John Dix, "If any man attempts to haul down that flag, shoot him on the spot." Let us ever retain in sacred memory the words of James A. Garfield on the morning of April 15, 1865, when, at City Hall, New York, he said, "God reigns and the Government at Washington still lives." Let there be burned into our memories the words of Edward Everett Hale, who, in the story A Man Without a Country, closes it with this paragraph:

Remember, boy, that behind all these men you have to do with, behind officers and Government and people even, there is the country itself—your country—and that you belong to her as you belong to your own mother.

You are each receiving to-night at my hands, for your respective schools, this flag Remember to guard, protect, keep, and respect it, and, when the time comes for your graduation, hand it down to succeeding classes, pledged not only by sacred memories of the past which it awakens but by all that you cherish and admire to see that it receives the same tender care that you have received from your parents.

Take it, then, and may you be true to it as the generations past have been.

May God grant that it may never again become necessary to defend it with the sword, but if the hour does come I am confident you will do your full duty, the same as the honored dead that we remember here to-day performed theirs.

"Unconditional Surrender" Grant.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAVID A. HOLLINGSWORTH,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I desire to insert a modest poem in memory of a modest soldier and statesman on this occasion, during the week beginning June 4, 1917, which, judging from the daily press of Washington and the speeches and remarks already authorized to be printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings, would seem to be a time of general jubilee for the Southern Confederacy, a final renaissance of southern thought and sentiment at Washington, and of restoration of control of the Government of the United States, long hoped for and prayed for and schemed for by those who stacked their arms at Appomattox after four years of war to destroy the Government, and accepted from this modest soldier and victor terms of surrender more generous than ever given to a vanquished foe on the field of honor.

Besides his great fame as a soldier, he was twice elected President of the Republic, and yet we have seen, during the last few days, pointed out with illy concealed satisfaction an unfinished foundation for a monument to his memory, commenced many years ago and in its present neglected condition a disgrace to the Nation, but in sight of which on to-morrow we are told his ancient foes are to march as if in triumph amid the plaudits of all Washington.

The following poem in tribute to Gen. U. S. Grant, by Dr. Thomas Calver, was read by the author at the exercises celebrating Grant's birthday at the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church, C Street and John Marshall Place, Washington:

GRANT.

When history uplifts her scroll
  Within the beams of Glory's blaze,
Few names are seen upon the roll
  Reflecting fully all the rays;
The stain of selfish thirst for fame,
  Undue ambition's fatal blight,
The itching palm's enclouding shame
  Too often dim the golden light.

But when the shining name appears
  Of one whose strength was truth and worth;
Who no ambition knew, nor fears,
  Save for the country of his birth;
Who had no thought of selfish ends,
  But fought to win his country's fight
And change her foes to loyal friends—
  That name shows full effulgence bright.

The youthful soldier's laurels green;
  The citizen's plain, useful ways;
The victor's glad, yet modest mien,
  When honored with a nation's praise;
The manly heart that could but feel
  Compassion for a fallen foe;
The statesman's patriotic zeal—
  All on his name their glory throw.

The soldier of immortal fame—
  The grandest chieftain of his day—
What title can precede his name
  And not due honors take away?
Oh, may that name throughout all time,
  Desire in youthful hearts implant
To emulate, in worth sublime,
  The soldier and the statesman, Grant!

Correspondence in Regard to the Temperance Question.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES R. MANN,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following correspondence:

CHICAGO LAW AND ORDER LEAGUE,
Chicago, May 29, 1917.

To the honorable, the House of Representatives,
Care Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I have been interested in the temperance question in Chicago since 1873; in one contest in Hyde Park (now a part of Chicago), against gambling, liquor, or vice for nearly 27 years. In 1906, representing the Hyde Park Protective Association, we recommended the raising of the license for saloons in the city of Chicago from $500 to $1,000 a year. Several years ago I recognized that I had made a mistake. I believe to-day the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, and the United States of America ought not to license the sale of liquor. We ought not to take care of the expenses of the city, the State, and the Nation by any tax upon that which is doing the harm that intoxicating liquor does; therefore I beg to petition your honorable body and to urge the Representatives from the State of Illinois not to increase the tax upon intoxicating liquor, but to wipe it out entirely, believing there was never such a time in the history of the Nation when this is not only feasible but in every way desirable, and I trust that the House will see the wisdom of voting for a "bone-dry" Nation, and striking the heaviest blow possible at the social evil not only as a war measure but as a measure of service to every individual in the Nation.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR BURRAGE FARWELL,
President.

CHICAGO LAW AND ORDER LEAGUE,
Chicago, May 29, 1917.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: If it is possible I would be glad to have you arrange that this request shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and if this is done will you kindly send me a copy.

Yours, very truly,

ARTHUR BURRAGE FARWELL,
President.

The 1917 River and Harbor War Measure Is Practically the 1917 Short-Session Bill Defeated in the Senate Last Spring.—A few Statistics Concerning Rivers, Many of Which Are Cared For in This Bill, and an Analysis of the Mississippi River Commerce on Which $150,000,000 Has Been Expended.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 11, 1917.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, in response to predictions and promises of increased river transportation which are now urged in the war measure, I append a few statistics that approximately indicate the public use of waterways furnished free by the Government and particularly the Mississippi River, which has been discussed to-day in general debate.

Over $250,000,000 has been spent on several river and canal projects by the Government in an effort to resuscitate a lost commerce. Deducting floatable timber and sand that floated a half century ago in larger quantities than to-day and do not require expensive waterways, several of these projects are reported to have floated in 1913 approximately as follows:

	Tons.
Upper Mississippi (average upper Mississippi haul, 26 miles, or less than 7,000 tons average continuous haul)	170,000
Lower Mississippi (excluding coal)	200,000
Ohio (95 per cent coal)	2,000,000
Tennessee (includes on Tennessee 78,000 tons coal hauled 16 miles)	200,000
Tombigbee and Warrior (includes on Warrior 32,000 tons coal, distance not stated), average	56,000
Beaufort Canal	65,000
Cumberland	53,000
Missouri	24,000
Hennepin Canal	11,850
Muscle Shoals Canal	5,887
Red River	1,694

Aside from soft coal, as near as can be estimated the average haul was from 30 to 100 miles on the various rivers. The same coal is repeatedly recounted.

THE ABOVE RIVERS GENERALLY RECEIVE 50 PER CENT OF EVERY BILL.

During 1914, 1915, and 1916 approximately one-half of the entire amount given to all waterways was for these few river and canal projects. The balance was divided among about 270 or more projects, of which 20 genuine waterways disclosed 1913 traffic as follows:

10 ocean harbors.	Tons.	10 lake harbors.	Tons.
New York (estimated)	100,000,000	Superior-Duluth	46,875,000
Philadelphia	26,267,335	Chicago-Calumet	13,275,000
Boston (estimated)	20,000,000	Milwaukee	8,647,000
Baltimore	14,781,942	Ashland	5,623,309
Norfolk	17,349,942	Ashtabula	15,743,375
Savannah	3,154,089	Cleveland	16,488,083
New Orleans	6,442,932	Buffalo	18,920,851
Galveston	4,445,088	Erie	3,340,071
San Francisco	9,353,530	Marquette	1,852,229
Portland, Oreg.	7,923,902	Soo Canal	79,714,341

Approximately 200,000,000 tons of waterway commerce was handled at the 10 ocean ports, and, allowing for duplications, one-half that amount at the 10 lake ports. Presumably the commerce was carried on the average 200 to 500 miles, counting ocean and lake traffic, but, like some other waterway statistics, no definite figures are available.

The significance of the comparisons will not be overlooked. Ten ocean ports handled fifty times the actual commerce carried on 10 river projects that annually receive about half of the average waterway bill, and these same rivers floated only about 4 per cent of the commerce counted at 10 lake ports.

COST TO THE GOVERNMENT FOR FLOATING COMMERCE.

The cost to the Government for furnishing a waterway for inland commerce per ton is not definitely settled as to method of computation, and only approximate results can be reached, because the amount properly chargeable to investment interest is variously estimated, although annual maintenance is sure and certain. Excluding floatable timber and sand, usually hauled short distances, the following estimates have been made on the several rivers and canals noted:

	Per ton.
Ohio River (excluding coal, $40 per ton)	$3.00
Ouachita	8.00
Warrior and Tombigbee	12.00
Upper Mississippi	12.00

	Per ton.
Lower Mississippi	$35.00
Arkansas	20.00
Hennepin	36.75
Missouri	40.00
Muscle Shoals (Tennessee)	40.00
Aransas Pass Canal	80.00
Brazos	80.00
Red	100.00
Muscle Shoals (proposed)	150.00
Big Sandy, Ky	350.00

It is interesting to note that in round numbers the following estimate of expenditures per mile have been made by the Government on three waterways with a continued loss in commerce:

	Per mile.
Lower Mississippi, 1,000 miles, at	$100,000
Ohio River to Missouri River, 200 miles, at	86,000
Upper Mississippi, 600 miles, at	40,000
Ohio River 1,000 miles, at	60,000
Lower Missouri, 400 miles, at	40,000

Government canal investments, all indorsed by the Chief of Engineers, are proportionately wasteful:

	Per mile.
Hennepin Canal, 60 miles, at	$126,000
Muscle Shoals, 26 miles, at	175,000
Muscle Shoals, proposed, 26 miles, at	560,000
Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, proposed, 13 miles, at	1,530,000

The above river and canal projects are small waterways that float an insignificant commerce compared with the investment. Can any condemnation of our wasteful, purposeless waterway policy compare with a brief statement of expenditures, past, present, and prospective?

I have set forth statistics heretofore offered on this same subject and here repeated briefly based on an analysis of "commerce reports" contained in the Army engineers' reports. I desire, however, particularly to discuss the commerce carried on the Mississippi River and submit statistics taken from the engineers' reports or as otherwise noted.

THE MISSISSIPPI COMMERCE.

About $18,000,000 of Government funds have been dumped into the 200-mile stretch of the Mississippi reaching from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio. After spending over $86,000 per mile on this part of the river, Senator Burton, the greatest waterway authority in the country, says we had spent more money on this 200 miles of river than the Prussian Government had spent on the entire length of the River Rhine during all the centuries that have passed. Traffic on the Rhine ordinarily reaches 45,000,000 tons annually, or many hundred times the traffic reported on this 200 miles of the Mississippi.

All the faith of waterway lobbyists and river enthusiasts in recent years has been pinned to J. H. Bernhard, the boat builder, who has predicted a rejuvenation of river traffic. Every citizen devoutly hopes Bernhard's prophecy will be realized, but in a discussion by Mr. Bernhard, found in the proceedings of the American Society of Engineers for 1915, occurs this remarkable statement, that is respectfully dedicated to the horn of plenty controlled by Chief Kingman:

To-day the Mississippi from St. Louis to its mouth affords a channel which is the best to be found in any stream in the world * * * and see its emptiness. An 8-foot channel is all that the most efficient service requires. The Government works unremittingly to develop waterways only to see the water-borne traffic grow less as the years go by.

Still the average river man will insist the poor condition of the channels keeps our inland waters idle. This is preposterous; the Rhine could never compare with the Mississippi in its advantages for transportation; its channel is narrower and shallower, more changeable, the current is swifter, and ice is known in the winter over its entire navigable length, yet in 1913 more than 97,000 vessels passed the Dutch and German frontier on the Rhine.

Further along Bernhard submits from official reports a statement of 37,529,153 tons carried on the Rhine in 1913, and it is safe to say this did not include sand, gravel, rock, and brush used in river work or automobiles and cattle ferried across the river, as reported by our own official Government statistician, Chief Kingman.

Senator Burton and Bernhard agree that you can not get commerce on water by idly wasting money in digging shifting, deeper channels. It takes men with freight to make commerce, and they obstinately refuse to ship by water. Yet we are spending $3,000 per mile on this 200 miles in 1915 by virtue of Chief Kingman's allotment.

AN $80,000,000 ARGUMENT.

Seven hundred and eighty thousand acres of land are to be reclaimed between Rock Island and Cape Girardeau. When reclaimed it will be worth from $50 to $150 per acre, according to estimates. That is a plum worth striving for, and the Govment is now being strenuously urged by powerful influences to do the job. It beats "navigation."

A ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLION INVESTMENT.

In order that a clear understanding may be had of startling conditions on the Mississippi River, where we are now annually dumping from seven to ten million dollars, I offer three tables taken from official records of river freight handled at the largest river port on the Mississippi. No through lines run on the river either above or below St. Louis. The absolute worthlessness of Army engineers' reports on "commerce" will be further demonstrated, but the Merchants' Exchange report, at least distantly, relates to actual commerce. After making allowance for duplications resulting from reshipments and observing that the bulk of all freight was presumably soft coal received from the Ohio River, it will be well for the country to ascertain what we are getting for $150,000,000 already spent on the Mississippi, with an annual interest charge of about $5,000,000, apart from seven to ten millions more in annual gifts of new, crisp Government currency for dredgers and contractors, raised in part by direct war-tax assessments.

COL. TOWNSEND'S CONFIRMATION—A REMARKABLE STATEMENT THAT COMMANDS ATTENTION.

Before presenting the Merchants' Exchange illuminating table of commerce I desire to quote briefly from a speech made by Col. C. McD. Townsend, Army engineer and president of the Mississippi River Commission. Incidentally the address was delivered before the $50,000,000 annual river lobby that recently held its annual round-up in this city. He said, page 215, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-fourth Congress:

St. Louis for the past 50 years has been the principal origin or terminus of the traffic on our western rivers, and its records summarize their tendencies. Its river commerce attained its maximum of 2,120,000 tons in 1880, and has since steadily declined to 153,000 tons in 1914. In contrast it may be stated that the commerce at Sault Ste. Marie, the outlet to Lake Superior, in 1880 was 1,300,000 tons, and attained a maximum of 79,000,000 tons in 1913. The commerce of New York Harbor exceeds 125,000,000 tons.

FOUR MILLION WANTED FOR MORE LAND RECLAMATION.

To show what Missouri and Illinois Members are up against I quote briefly from proceedings of the Upper Mississippi Drainage Association as reported in the Globe Democrat of November 9 last:

The chief topic under discussion was a plan to obtain Government aid in completing levees between Rock Island and Cairo. This can be done, according to statements made at the meeting, with $4,000,000. It was pointed out that $60,000,000 has been appropriated by the Government for work scuth of Cairo and a very small amount for the river north of Cairo. It was decided to ask the next session of Congress to appropriate $1,000,000 a year for this work.

Sure. But why stop at $1,000,000 or $4,000,000, when the lower Mississippi has had more than $60,000,000 and nearer $100,000,000 from the Government largely for land reclamation? Why not demand that for every dollar spent on the lower river reclamation work and every dollar spent on the Missouri River reclamation work an equal amount should be spent on the upper river? In short, why not throw open the Federal Treasury doors and take over every land reclamation and private water-power project in the country? If one gets a grab, why not all? Incidentally this is the 780,000-acre reclamation project covered by the resolution just offered.

IS NOT COL. TOWNSEND'S JUDGMENT SOUND?—IT CALLS A HALT ON 58 RIVER PROJECTS. WHY NOT?

Again, I quote from Col. Townsend's remarkable address before the river and harbor lobby which was extended in the RECORD of December 11, 1915. Therein he says:

Specifically the writer would not abandon any navigable stream in the Mississippi Valley that has been partially improved, but would leave 58 of them in their statu quo, confining operations to snagging and the maintenance of existing works and would concentrate appropriations on opening up a channel of the capacity of that existing on the lower and middle Mississippi to Chicago and Pittsburgh * * *.

If the facilities thus afforded by the Government are utilized, the upper Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers should then receive attention.

Col. Townsend calls a halt on the upper Mississippi and the Missouri River improvements until the $100,000,000 Ohio and $275,000,000 lower Mississippi projects are finished, and if these streams are ever utilized (?) then go on with the remaining 58 projects, including the Missouri and upper Mississippi. He is amply sustained in his demand for a halt on the 58 projects.

OFFICIAL STATISTICS.

In order to show how unreliable are statements uttered in debate, boosting the average waterway, I append some striking statistics taken from the Engineers official report of "commerce" on the upper Mississippi, which show the enormous extravagance and waste of money on that part of the river.

Keeping in mind that actual commerce on the river has probably decreased 95 per cent during the past few years, during which time $28,000,000 of Government funds has been dumped into this 600-mile stretch during that period, let us see how the Chief of Engineers excuses an allotment in 1917 of over $1,000,000 in addition to the balance on hand and in addition to approximately $30,000 per mile already spent on this project. Examine his statement of commerce, taken from page 2437 of the Chief Engineer's report for 1914. It will not be found easily in the index.

The report says the quantity of freight carried by all boats, including the rock and brush used in Government work and also including logs and lumber floated down the stream, is as follows, and then follows a table, of which 772,392 tons hauled 9,445,576 ton-miles, valued at $781,897, is for material used by the Government in improving the river.

Referring to the 1913 statement, let us briefly examine the items, which show some remarkable facts.

ENGINEER'S STATISTICS OF COMMERCE (?).

"Commerce" reached 2,145,315 tons in 1913, so the Chief of Engineers reports. Tons of what? Let us see:

	Tons.
Brush for river construction work	82,450
Gravel dredged from river	398,178
Rock for river work	708,000
Sand dredged from river	562,000
Logs that have floated for 50 years	98,268
Lumber and wood barged	64,408
Animals ferried across river	55,322
Automobiles ferried across river	6,034
Total	1,974,660

All could be floated in 2 or 3 feet of water, leaving 170,335 tons of questionable commerce remaining, which was hauled on an average of 26 miles or thereabouts.

What a legislative travesty when eleven-twelfths of the commerce for which $1,000,000 was allotted by the Chief of Engineers is of that character. Who weighed the brush? Who weighed the logs? Who weighed the rocks, gravel, sand, and so forth, used in the river work? Where was it carried and for what purpose? Was it floated 1 mile or 10 miles? Who knows? Why measure Government material for river work, anyway?

A WONDERFUL SYSTEM IN VALUING "COMMERCE."

The Chief of Engineers says that 26,609 tons of horses were carried a mile and a half across the river and their value was $6,540,900, or one-fifth of the total. Other live stock carried across the river, he says, was valued at $5,218,730; and then, to cap the climax, this report adds that 6,034 tons of automobiles ferried across the river were valued at $9,545,950.

Nearly two-thirds of all the glowing commerce valuations on the upper Mississippi, including Government sand, rock, and gravel, turns out to be animals and automobiles ferried across the river.

Again, how much of the remaining 170,000 tons was repair material or Government supplies out of a total 772,000 tons reported? How much was duplicated before it could boost a million-dollar allotment for the upper river?

LOSS IN 1915 COMMERCE.

Last session I inserted in the RECORD a statement of conditions on the upper Mississippi showing that nine-tenths of the money now spent on the river is being wasted, according to the judgment of pilots and captains of boats on the river. I will not repeat that testimony, but for fear it may be construed that the analysis of freight on the river above submitted was an exceptional year, I offer the commerce statement on page 2623 of the last Engineer's Report (1916), wherein the same condition exists, excepting that the so-called commerce on this deserted river decreased about 15 per cent within three years, while the average haul on this 700-mile stretch of river decreased from 26 miles in 1913 to 18 miles in 1915, or nearly 30 per cent.

What can more fully disclose the extravagance of our waterway pork barrel than this project, and it is only one of many heretofore disclosed. Appended is the 1915 commerce report on the upper Mississippi, page 2623, Engineer's Report (1916).

Upper Mississippi River freight statement for 1915.

Designation.	Short tons.	Ton-miles.	Value.

Analyze this so-called commerce, which is made up of 1,300,000 tons of gravel, rock, and sand, hauled from 4 to 12 miles, and ferriage with over 200,000 tons lumped as "miscellaneous," compared to 71,000 three years before, hauled 24 miles.

And for that we have already paid out or appropriated $28,000,000; and $605,000 balance, uncontracted for and unexpended was in the hands of the engineers on March 1 last for this part of the river.

I have heretofore offered an analysis of official statistics on the Missouri, Cumberland, Tennessee, Ohio, and other rivers. On no single river can any appreciable commerce be shown through improvements, but on the Mississippi and some other rivers the commerce has steadily decreased while fabulous amounts have been placed in the rivers.

How any defense of this wasteful practice can be defended in this period of unexampled high taxes is beyond comprehension. This is the time, if ever, to stop waste, and the best way to stop a small part of it is by defeating the pending river and harbor bill, which covers items that carry over $30,000,000 remaining in balances unexpended.

Food-Shortage Warning.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM E. MASON,

OF ILLINOIS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 8, 1917.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article by William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, at Chicago April 26, 1917, on the food question.

The article is as follows:

FOOD-SHORTAGE WARNING.

[By William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago.]

CHICAGO, April 26, 1917.

To the People of Chicago:

In view of the constantly increasing seriousness of the food situation I deem it my duty, as your mayor, to call public attention not only to the present scant supply of foods for domestic consumption, their increasing cost, and diminishing quantity, but also to the more serious danger which, to my mind, the future holds, viz, that hunger and starvation will visit the homes of Chicago before the next winter is over unless provision is forthwith made against such dire calamity.

At the city of Aurora, Ill., August 7, 1915, at a public mass meeting, in an address which I delivered, among other things I said:

"In discussing conditions which are essentially local to the United States and concern our internal policies, I want it distinctly understood that I am not criticizing the foreign war policy of the President. In times like these it is the plain duty of every American citizen to support his Government as against the government of any other country. The course of the administration in adopting and advising a course of strict neutrality is very commendable, and has the approval of every right-thinking American. It is with the utmost respect for the attitude of our Chief Executive and a desire to support the foreign war policy of the administration that I venture to suggest that we have not gone far enough into the middle of the road. This enlightened Nation should take a broader ground and a more advanced position than we have as yet taken or any other nation has heretofore taken.

"There have been times in our history when our people have felt injured because other governments have extended aid and comfort to the enemies of this Republic, although it was clearly within the legal rights of the citizens of such other nations to furnish arms and ammunition for use against us.

"The occasion of the present war in Europe furnishes us a splendid opportunity for a practical application of the Golden Rule to show the civilized world that we are willing to do unto others as we would they should do unto us.

"There is no question in law that our citizens have a right to sell munitions of war to any or all the nations engaged in the mighty conflict; but think what the effect of the action would be if our citizens, voluntarily, and as a contribution to the peace of the world, should say to the war-crazed nations of Europe, 'We will sell you food; we will sell you clothing; we will sell you medicines and hospital supplies; we will sell you anything out of our bursting granaries, enormous warehouses, and depots that would tend to relieve human suffering or distress, but we will not sell you death-dealing implements of war with which to kill, maim, or wound your fellow human beings.' That attitude, I believe, would tend to discourage the dreadful carnage which has drenched the soil of Europe with human blood, brought misery and agony of mind and body to untold millions, and put the blush of shame on the cheek of outraged civilization.

"My plea is to American citizens in their individual capacities—not collectively as the Government—to stop shipments of arms and ammunitions intended for killing and maiming human beings. It matters not to me who may for the time being be in the ascendancy in Europe, and it matters not to me whether one brand or another of the many revolutionary parties in Mexico be the under dog in that fight. There are no exceptions to the divine commandment, 'Thou shalt not kill.'"

My words on that occasion were inspired by the sincere belief that if commercial America continued in its policy of furnishing ammunition and implements of war to some of the belligerents in Europe that we would ultimately be involved in a war with those countries against which our death-dealing supplies were used.

We are now in the great war. Questions and discussions now of how we got in or why we got in are too late, because of the fact that the Congress of the United States, at the solicitation of the President, has formally declared that we are at war with the most formidable military power of history. That fact alone should impel us to pause for contemplation. If America, as is generally believed, has become intoxicated by the unprecedented prosperity which the European war has brought to us it is now time to get sober. Let us chart our present position and lay our course for the immediate future.

Ours is a great country. Speaking approximately, we have 100,000,000 people, a total wealth of twenty-five hundred billion dollars, and $4,000,000,000 in money available for circulation, which equals $40 for every man, woman, and child in the country. Our crop of grains is about five and a half billion bushels per annum.

In normal times there is plenty for all our people and some to spare, but these times are not normal. Since August, 1914, the able-bodied men of Europe have been taken out of the ranks of the producers and placed under arms, with the result that it has fallen to our lot to furnish food not only for millions in arms but largely also to the noncombatant population. In this way we have exchanged our foodstuffs for money and securities until we now find ourselves as a people very wealthy but short of food. Reliable statistics collected by the Government and by private agencies show that an alarming shortage now exists, and this condition is reflected by the soaring prices in the food markets. In 1915, when our granaries were bursting under their golden load, flour was selling at about $6 per barrel; now those granaries are depleted and flour is selling at $14 per barrel. There has been a profound change in the situation.

It was very significant to me that on Sunday, April 22, when lake navigation formally opened, there were four and a half million bushels of wheat taken out of our elevators in 24 hours for shipment to the Atlantic seaboard. That one day's shipment from this market represented the yield in 1916 from 265,000 acres, or 400 square miles.

Congress, at the request of the President, signalized our entry into the war by authorizing a bond issue of $7,000,000,000, the greatest amount of money ever dedicated at one time to war purposes in the history of the world. This first installment of the cost of the war to the people of this country may be appreciated when we stop to consider that it means incurring a debt of $70, with interest, for every man, woman, and child in this country, and the interest alone on it will be $245,000,000 per year, or $2.45 per capita! This is the first step in a financial way; others will probably follow.

In the words of the present Speaker of the National House of Representatives, an attempt is now being made "to bulldoze Congress" into passing the administration bill, under which the young manhood of America could be forced or drafted into the Army and sent into the trenches on the battle fields of Europe. The proposed plan to raise an army of 2,000,000 men in this manner would permit the drafting of 10 per cent of the adult male population of the United States, or one out of every three men amenable to military service, and to us in Chicago it would mean that 50,000 of our young men would be impressed for service. The history of conscription or draft is that it leads to trouble, and it is a drastic measure which should never be invoked until the life of the Republic is threatened. I am unalterably opposed to a draft for the purpose of forcing our young men into the trenches of Europe.

In all this feverish preparation which has for its avowed object the settlement of the trouble in Europe, there is little or nothing said or done about preparing our own country for the problems and situation we must meet. American humanity should be no less dear to us than European humanity! We have 100,000,000 of our own people right here at home, and it is our sacred duty to safeguard them before we go abroad to rescue others. While all patriots agree that the American flag, American rights, and American citizenship should be respected the world over, and should be protected by our Government, let us not forget that our first and paramount duty is to our own citizens at their firesides. It is just as important that American citizens and their property be safe on our Mexican border as on the high seas.

Those who are most enthusiastic in their desire to recruit an army to send to Europe wonder why their efforts have not met with better success. To my mind, the answer is obvious. The American people do not believe that their greatest menace lies beyond the Atlantic Ocean. It comes from other directions and is perhaps now at our very doors. American soldiers have been shot down by Mexicans on American soil; our citizens have been murdered in Mexico, their property destroyed, their treaty rights invaded, our women outraged, and our flag trampled in the dirt. It is for these reasons that I am now raising my voice in opposition to a policy of depleting this country of its men, food, and money and exposing us to a situation more dangerous and more imminent.

Hunger will stalk through our fair land and grim want will visit the homes of Chicago unless Congress puts into effect a policy of conservation under which the exportation of food will be restricted to make it certain that our own people shall not suffer the agonies of starvation and from the disease and pestilence which follow in its wake. A curb must be put upon our export of foodstuffs, which now seems to be limited only by the capacity of the ships that are carrying our food abroad.

In view of the grave situation which confronts this great industrial community of Chicago, and in order to bring it to the attention of our people so that we might relieve to some extent the conditions which seem to be rushing upon us, I joined in the movement known as the municipal garden bureau, which now has its headquarters in the mayor's office, to encourage and assist the people of Chicago to produce all the food possible in all available places. The movement has become widespread, but is pitiably inadequate, although several thousand have taken up the work in an effort to minimize the danger which confronts us.

Therefore, I deem it my duty solemnly to urge the people of Chicago to raise as much foodstuff as possible in our city. Everyone who has a tillable back yard should spade it up and plant it without delay. Community centers should be organized. Vacant lots and other pieces of ground that can not be obtained by citizens themselves may be had through the garden bureau operating in the mayor's office. This bureau will render such other assistance as it can, but this work should be done by the individuals independently wherever practicable on account of the shortness of time in which to organize.

I have issued orders to all department heads, ward superintendents, and other employees of the city of Chicago to cooperate and assist the citizens in every way. Each passing day lessens the opportunity to provide for the future.

Espionage Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MOSES P. KINKAID,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, May 4, 1917.

Mr. KINKAID. While the United States is making war in behalf of the political liberty of foreign nations I can not understand how the cause will be advanced by tearing down a principal bulwark of free government in our own Republic.

If it is not the purpose of section 4 of this bill to override Article I of the Constitution, I respectfully challenge its sponsors to tell what its object may be. In my judgment, viewed in the light of the constitutional inhibition, it carries on its face its own condemnation. Absurd as it seems to me, it is an attempt to enact into law that which the Constitution expressly forbids. If it does not abridge freedom of speech or the rights of the press, it accomplishes nothing; if it does abridge either, it fails to become a law, because expressly forbidden by the Constitution.

The first clause of section 4 reads:

SEC. 4. When the United States is at war, the publishing willfully of information with respect to the movement, numbers, description or disposition of any of the armed forces of the United States in naval or military operations, or with respect to any of the works intended for the fortification or defense of any place, which information is useful to the enemy, is hereby prohibited.

It seems not to be disputed that the full scope of this clause is covered by other sections of the bill; neither is it gainsaid that the law on treason fully covers such cases, so the enactment of this clause would be superfluous. But the second clause, which completes the sentence, is very objectionable to me and, in my judgment, very vulnerable. I am frank to say that it is too new and original, as well as exceptional, for its intended or peculiar province to have been heretofore provided for, as it has been with the first clause.

This second clause reads:

And the President may from time to time, by proclamation, declare the character of such above-described information which in his opinion is not useful to the enemy, and thereupon it shall be lawful to publish the same.

These two clauses, comprising one sentence, are in direct conflict with Article I of the Constitution, which reads:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Section 4 of the bill is intended to accomplish no other purpose than to abridge the freedom of speech and of the press; hence its absurdity and futility, because the result must be essentially that, if we shall pretend to pass such an act, it will be "no law," because, as I have pointed out before, expressly forbidden by the Constitution.

We observe that the first clause prohibits the publication of such matter concerning military operations as "is useful to the enemy." This is very desirable, but, as I have said before, this evil is already amply provided against. But the second clause, to which I earnestly object, prohibits also the publication of what is "not useful to the enemy." Thus the two clauses, taken together, prohibit both what will be useful to the enemy and what will not be useful to the enemy; hence, both what will be harmful and harmless. Further than this, the two clauses, taken together, prohibit the publishing of anything whatever on the subject matter covered. The only justification for making two classes and providing for each separately is contained in the second clause with reference to publishing what "will not be useful" to the enemy in the provision therein that "the President may from time to time, by proclamation, declare the character of such above-described information which in his opinion is not useful to the enemy, and thereupon it shall be lawful to publish the same."

Mark you, it will not be lawful to publish what "is not useful to the enemy" until the President by proclamation permits this to be done. In other words, a citizen shall not orally mention nor a newspaper publish in its columns even what would not be useful to the enemy unless and until the President by proclamation shall grant permission so to do.

But it will be observed that, while the making of such a proclamation is authorized or permitted, it is not obligatory; it is not required to be made and need not be made at all, but nevertheless it will not be lawful to publish even what is not useful to the enemy until such license be granted.

Let it not be forgotten that the "publishing" which is prohibited includes oral as well as written means of disseminating information. Webster defines "to publish," "to make public or known, either by words, writing, or printing, what before was private or unknown." The consequence is that no individual would be allowed even to mention publicly or in private conversation what would not be useful to the enemy until permission be gained by proclamation duly made. It is every individual as well as all the newspapers in the land who would thus be restrained.

We have noticed that in the first clause of section 4 the publication of what "will be useful to the enemy" is unqualifiedly prohibited. On the other hand, very appropriately, the publishing of what is "not useful to the enemy" is not expressly prohibited, but it is prohibited by implication. The question presents itself: If what is not useful to the enemy is to be prohibited, why not say so in language just as direct as that employed in the first clause? Should not the Congress deal fairly with the people in passing penal laws by making the laws so plain that he who runs may read? But to be clearly understood the second clause reads:

> And the President may from time to time by proclamation declare the character of such above-described information which, in his opinion, is not useful to the enemy, and thereupon it shall be lawful to publish the same.

It will be observed that it is nowhere expressly stated that it shall be unlawful to publish what is not useful to the enemy until the proclamation has been made. But the last line states "and thereupon it shall be lawful to publish the same," meaning after such proclamation shall have been made.

For further comment on this phase of the make-up of the second clause I deem it sufficient to quote from a distinguished author, when writing of the progress made in freedom of speech and press during our Colonial period, at the stage when even the laws by which people were to be governed and condemned were not made known to the people, and yet the inexorable legal requirement then obtained, as it does now, that everyone must know the law at his own peril. This author says:

> Even the laws were not at first published for general circulation, and it seemed to be thought desirable by the magistrates to keep the people in ignorance of the precise boundary between that which was lawful and that which was prohibited, as more likely to make them avoid doubtful actions.

It goes without saying that such a governmental condition constituted rank tyranny, which, thanks to the freedom of speech and of the press, has been overcome. The people now not only read the laws when they are made but participate actively in making them by keeping the Congress and legislatures advised as to their sentiments and wishes, and in a number of States, by the process of the referendum vote, actually become the legislators themselves.

In passing it is interesting to note that the first open debate in our Senate took place in 1793; previous to this the Members having observed the injunction of secrecy. In contrast to the Senate the House of Representatives sat with open doors from the first, and it is fitting, in view of this fine tradition, that its Members of to-day stand loyally for this principle of free speech and a free press.

A wonderful evolution has taken place since the seventeenth century, when the people were kept in ignorance of everything that concerned their welfare. The first printers were considered outlaws, and were treated as such, but step by step the rights to free speech and a free press have been gained. Many a record of this progress has been printed in blood, but these records have taught democracy that the press is a power for good, to be fostered and encouraged.

But it is not for the sake of the press that freedom of the word spoken, written, and printed is to be protected; it is for the good of the institution of democracy, for the advancement of education, and the dissemination of knowledge.

It should not be lost sight of that, contained in this same Article I, and coupled with the clauses safeguarding freedom of speech and the press, is the clause intended to insure religious liberty. The clause reads:

> Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

It necessarily follows that if free speech can be abridged by legislative enactment the Congress may supplant the faiths we have now by new-fangled cults or even decree an established religion.

It must be remembered that this very article safeguarding freedom of speech and the press is the first amendment ever made to the Constitution of the United States, an amendment which testifies to the persistent battle for this privilege universally regarded as essential to the existence and perpetuity of free government.

The States have always guarded this privilege with jealous care, as evidenced by their constitutions, a few lines from several of which I shall here quote:

> Maine: Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of this liberty.
> New Hampshire: The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a State; it ought, therefore, to be inviolably preserved.
> Massachusetts: The liberty of the press is essential to the security of freedom in a State; it ought not, therefore, to be restrained in this Commonwealth.
> Connecticut: No law shall ever be passed to curtail or restrain the liberty of speech or of the press.
> New York: Every person may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press.
> Pennsylvania: That the printing press shall be free to every person who may undertake to examine the proceedings of the legislature, or any branch of the government, and no law shall ever be made to restrain the right thereof.
> Nebraska: Every person may freely speak, write, and publish on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.

It ought to be very plain that the exigencies of war should not permit us to override the guaranties of our constitutions, National and State. In fact, it is during great crises that the necessity is more likely to arise for invoking constitutional guaranties. The case of Ex parte Milligan, reported in the Seventy-first Wallace, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 2, presents an instance in point. This case involved the question of the jurisdiction of a military court during the Civil War to try Milligan under circumstances when it was claimed that the United States courts possessed exclusive jurisdiction in such cases. I shall let it suffice here to quote the words used by the very learned and preeminent jurist, Jeremiah Black, counsel for Milligan, who said:

> It is precisely, in time of war and civil commotion that we should double the guards upon the Constitution. If the sanitary regulations which defend the health of a city are ever to be relaxed, it ought certainly not to be done when pestilence is abroad.
> When the Mississippi shrinks within its natural channel and creeps lazily along the bottom the inhabitants of the adjoining shore have no need of a dike to save them from inundation, but when the booming flood comes down from above and swells into a volume which rises high above the plain on either side, then a crevasse in the levee becomes a most serious thing. So in peaceable and quiet times our legal rights are in little danger of being overborne, but when the wave of arbitrary power lashes itself into violence and rage and goes surging up against the barriers which were made to confine it, then we need the whole strength of an unbroken Constitution to save us from destruction.

To abridge the press at this juncture would be to strike down one of our strongest weapons for the war. Think what a wonderful service the newspapers are performing, and gratuitously, in advertising for sale the liberty bonds, and every issue of every newspaper contains a longer or shorter article tending to inculcate and to solidify loyalty to the Stars and Stripes.

History proves that the rate of advancement of civilization and political liberty has been in proportion to the degree of freedom of speech and the press exercised in their behalf, and that without these principal factors we should not have attained democracy or a republican form of government.

The crux of the question is whether we shall preserve our institutions by firmly maintaining the freedom of speech and the press, as safeguarded by both National and State constitutions, or surrender the same and thereby repudiate government of the people, for the people, and by the people.

Address of Hon. David H. Mercer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. DAN V. STEPHENS,

OF NEBRASKA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Friday, June 8, 1917.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, in compliance with permission granted me I insert in the RECORD an address delivered at Fullerton, Nebr., on Saturday, May 12, by Hon. David H. Mercer; I also insert a reference to the program of that day as published in the Nebraska State Journal:

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF NEBRASKA STATEHOOD—HISTORICAL PAGEANT STAGED—180 INDIANS TOOK PART IN FULLERTON CELEBRATION.

FULLERTON, NEBR., May 15.

Ninety historical and patriotic floats, depicting the progress and history of Nebraska, were presented in a grand pageant Saturday led by the Fullerton Band and 180 Indians from the Genoa Indian School and a real Pawnee scout, John Williamson, of Genoa. The town schools and country schools in the entire county, lodges, clubs, churches, and pioneers cooperated under the leadership of County Supt. Chloe C. Baldridge, and succeeded in making this the greatest celebration in this part of the State. The pageant was followed by a folk dance, flag drill, and prairie fire pageant presented by the Fullerton pupils, after which a historical program was staged. David H. Mercer, of Omaha, delivered the main address on the history and progress of Nebraska. The Indian school orchestra of 11 members, under the direction of N. S. Nelson furnished music. J. H. Kemp gave an address on Nance County reminiscences. Mrs. E. B. Penney, one of Nebraska's three school-teacher heroines, told of the blizzard of 1888. Reminiscences of Pawnee Scout John Williamson was read by Mrs. Matson, daughter of Mr. Williamson and the first white girl born in Nance County. Supt. S. B. Davis gave an address on "The Indian of to-day and yesterday," and the delegation of the 180 Indian boys and girls in their school uniforms and their trained orchestra demonstrated the progress of the Indian. Eight primary Indian tots danced the minuet. Twelve hundred men, women, boys, and girls took part in the pageants and program.

ADDRESS OF EX-CONGRESSMAN DAVID H. MERCER.

File 113, by Gaboriau, is the most interesting detective story I ever read. Events in the lives of Daniel Boone, Kit Carson, and our own Buffalo Bill (William Cody) have often thrilled me through and through. To read of the deeds of John Paul Jones, Farragut, Dewey, and other heroes of the sea is to hasten the blood through my veins a little bit faster, while the names of Mollie Pitcher, Nathan Hale, and Joan of Arc excite my patriotic impulses to greater emotions. The monoplane in the air, the submarine under the sea, and the locomotive on land each tell of the genius of man; but most wonderful of all is the earth, the planetary system, and man himself—all the creation of God Almighty.

Once upon a time Nebraska was the arm of a great sea—a salted sea—and it throbbed with animal life. Mollusks, relative to the oyster, were abundant. Shells of large size and great beauty decorated the shore line. Bird life was prolific—all sizes and hues—some as large as an ostrich, and they could fly and swim. Crocodiles of enormous proportions, reptiles, big and little; and many of them could fly. Land lizards 100 feet long and 30 feet tall stalked through the forests. All nature seemed to live in the superlative degree. In the course of time great upheavals of the earth's surface occurred. Mountains and valleys were created, and with them came a radical change in climate and in animal and vegetable life. The sea disappeared, new land formed, and what we now call Nebraska became part of a fresh-water lake over 120,000 square miles in area—a lake much larger than the combined areas of the Great Lakes of America. A semitropical climate then prevailed. Large forests of Sequoias—same as the gigantic trees of California—lined the shores of this lake and nodded their tops to the sun and moon, the tallest ones seeming to woo the stars. The fig, the palm, and the magnolia graced the scene, while the sassafras, oak, linden, pine, and cottonwood thrived in abundance. Eight species of monkeys chattered in the trees, and countless herds of horses fed upon the grasses. The elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, and camel had each a place; and a very large animal, part elephant and part rhinoceros, with four fierce-looking horns—two over its nose and one over each eye—roamed through the forests at will. Wild hogs, in size from the raccoon to a small elk, were as plentiful as jack rabbits in Nebraska 50 years ago. One and three toed horses, otherwise like your Nance County horses, galloped through the country. Much of this life disappeared when earthquakes shook the earth to its very center and volcanoes belched forth lava in places 3,000 feet deep. At this time the plains of Nebraska were lowered many feet, the direction of drainage changed, land became mountains, and lakes were converted into land. Then followed the glacial period, with enormous glaciers, mountainous in proportions, moving a few inches or a few feet per day, crushing everything before them. Huge icebergs floated upon the surface of lakes, and the climate became frigid. Our Nebraska lake filled with mud and similar débris, and the Missouri, Platte, and other rivers drained the country to the ocean. New Rivers, like the Loup, Beaver, and Cedar, were formed, and here and there a lake survived. All these transformations in Nebraska, or what we now call Nebraska, consumed ages of time, and I have only referred to them to show you how interesting the study of this State is and that you may be encouraged to make further investigations. The potash deposits in the lakes of northern Nebraska belong to the story.

In celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of Nebraska statehood we are paying respect to the noble women and men of the nineteenth century who builded better than they knew when they settled here, for by so doing they not only converted a wilderness of prairie into a panorama of gardens, but they transplanted from their various homes to our soil the acme of culture and refinement and laid the foundation of statehood so substantial and enduring that the Nebraska of to-day is one of our foremost Commonwealths in education, morality, agriculture, commerce, and quality of citizenship. While we are only 50 years old as a State, we can boast great antiquity in the field of romantic discovery. Goethe said that tradition ends with the third generation. That may be true, but an historic fact lives forever. To establish the historic fact—"aye, there's the rub." The native races of northern Asia and the Indians of North and South America are classed as of the Mongolian variety of the human race. I have been in China and Alaska and the resemblance of the people one to the other is very marked. At some time in the misty past Bering Sea was land and travel between Asia and America was uninterrupted by water. When Columbus observed land in the Atlantic Ocean in 1492 he thought he had arrived in India, and hence the name "Indian" which he gave to the newly discovered inhabitant—a name that stuck. Long before Christopher Columbus came this way the Western Hemisphere was peopled by aboriginals, who gave way to the Indians. Seafaring Chinese during the fifth century sailed the Atlantic Ocean and touched the shores of North America. Irish monks settled Iceland in the eighth century and 100 years later the Norsemen came. In the year 1000 Norwegians saw the coast of Newfoundland and camped upon land now known as Massachusetts and Rhode Island, and Thorwald, an ancestor of Thorwaldsen, the famous Danish sculptor, was buried on the shores of a Massachusetts bay. In 1492 Columbus, a native of Genoa, Italy, but representing King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain, landed in Cuba and Haiti and the following year discovered Porto Rico. The Cabots came in 1497 and explored the North American coast for hundreds of miles. When the discoveries of Columbus and the Cabots reached Spain the people throughout the kingdom were enthused to explore the New Eldorado. "The life of a Spanish discoverer," says Prescott, "was one long daydream. Illusion after illusion chased one another, like the bubbles which the child throws off from his pipe, as bright, as beautiful, as empty. They lived in a world of enchantment." Spanish expeditions to the New World followed each other in rapid succession. In 1519 Hernando Cortez, with 800 men, lands in Mexico, founds Vera Cruz, and conquers the entire country. In 1539–1543 Fernando de Soto and 600 others journey through what are now Florida, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, and Mississippi, and when near the present site of Natchez the intrepid De Soto, discoverer of the Mississippi River, contracts a fever, dies, and the Father of Waters becomes his tomb. The survivors of this expedition, 300 in all, finally arrive in Mexico, and, for aught we know, some of them may have been the first of the Caucasian race to feast their eyes upon these broad and fertile prairies, because we learn from history that 80 years before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, 68 years before Hudson discovered the beautiful river which bears his name, 66 years before the first settlement of Jamestown, Va., and 23 years before Shakespeare was born Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, a Spanish cavalier, born in Salamanaca, Spain, and in 1540 governor of a province in northern Mexico, gathered unto himself 300 Spaniards and 800 natives and, mounted upon the best horses that gold could buy, started in this direction seeking the seven cities of Cibola in the land of Quivira—cities where the streets blazed with the shops of gold and silver smiths, where rare and precious stones were abundant and without price, where people attired themselves in rich raiment and lived a life of luxury.

Passing through the towns of the Hopi Indians in what is now called Arizona and New Mexico Coronado entered the Valley of the Rio Grande. Here he found many Indian villages, but the people were poor. The expedition tarried in this valley during the winter. The seven cities vanished in gloom, for the winter was very severe. The Indian villages were destroyed and most of the Indians killed. One of the surviving Indians, who received the nickname "Turk" because he wore a turban and otherwise dressed himself to resemble a native of Turkey, informed Coronado that he had visited the land of Quivira, that it was all that had been said of it, and that King Tartarrax ruled its rich and contented people. In the spring of 1541 the quest for gold and splendor was resumed, with Turk serving as official guide. After hundreds of miles of travel through waste and wilderness the expedition reached the banks of the Arkansas and halted. Coronado was so discouraged that he divided his forces. He and 30 of his bravest companions proceeded north, the rest of the party returning to the Rio Grande. Thus far they had seen vast herds of bison or buffalo, which supplied them with food, raiment, and tents, but no Quivira. During the hot days of July Coronado and his brave band ambled along, and 77 days after leaving the Valley of the Rio Grande they crossed the fortieth degree of latitude, which is the present southern boundary of Nebraska, and to quote the late Judge Savage, of Omaha, "Here along the Republican River they found Quivira; here was Tartarrax, the hoary-headed old ruler of the land, but alas for the vanity of human expectations, the only precious metals they saw was a copper plate hanging on the old chief's breast; there was no musical bells, no gilded eagle, no silver dishes, no rosary, no image of the Virgin, no cross, no crown," and I might add that the old king wore fewer clothes than are usually seen on an Hawaiian dancer. The seven cities of Cibola went the way of all air castles; Quivira returned to dreamland and Coronado appeased his wrath by hanging Turk to a wild plum tree. For 25 days the Coronado party traveled the country between the Republican River and the Loups, giving special attention to its flora and fauna. They report many Indian villages along the way, which leads me to believe that at one time they may have dined upon buffalo steak not far from where we now stand. Coronado returned to Mexico a disappointed man, but he misjudged his discovery, for in reality he had found Quivira when he traversed what is now Nebraska, because our gold and silver are in the soil and not in mines, as last year we produced more wealth from our soil than was taken from all the gold, silver, and diamond mines in the world. One-half our people live on farms and the value thereof is almost $3,000,000,000—equal to the present gold supply in America. Last year we received over $8,000,000 for our dairy products, and our poultry and eggs brought in as much more. We raised over 200,000,000 bushels of corn, 70,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the same amount of oats. In acreage Nebraska is first in wild grasses, second in alfalfa, third in hay, and eighth in sugar beets. She stands fourth among the States in the number of cattle and hogs and sixth in the number of horses. Verily, this is Quivira, and the Coronado dream was true.

In 1682, 141 years after the Spanish cavalier left this beautiful country, 150 years after De Soto discovered the Mississippi River, and only 9 years after Joliet, a fur trader, and Marquette, a Jesuit missionary, had paddled their canoes down our greatest river to the mouth of the Arkansas, another famous explorer, La Salle, appeared upon the Mississippi, and he and party floated in their canoes to its mouth. La Salle, like the other representatives of France, entered this country by way of the St. Lawrence, while the Spaniards came from the Mexican frontier or via Cuba. La Salle, in the name of his sovereign, Louis XIV, immediately made claim to the vast empire drained by the Mississippi and to the west of it, and in honor of his king named the new possessions, Louisiana, a domain extending westward to the summit of the Rockies. Prior to this event Louis XIV had achieved a reputation as a "land grabber," but this La Salle deal made him "King of the craft." In 1762, France and England being at war, the former country ceded Louisiana to Spain, the formal treaty being signed by England, France, and Spain in February, 1763. In the same treaty France ceded to England Canada and all her territory east of the Mississippi, and Spain gave Florida to England in exchange for Habana. In 1799 Napoleon Bonaparte, who had overthrown the Directory, settled the existing differences between the United States and France, and in 1800 secured from Spain the retransfer of Louisiana to France.

You will remember that the kings and queens of Europe have always been in the real estate business, and at no time have they been particular about title or consideration. In fact, the awful and inexcusable war now going on is founded upon inordinate greed for land and commerce. The downfall of all kings is about due. Hasten the day.

In 1803 England was making it uncomfortable for France, and Napoleon, rather than lose Louisiana to an enemy, sold it to the United States for $15,000,000—a bargain price, for we gave $5,000,000 for Florida, $7,200,000 for Alaska, and $25,000,000 for the Danish West Indies. The purchase of Alaska really represents our gratitude to Russia for the aid she gave us during the Civil War, the $7,200,000 just about covering the expense of the Russian fleets in Atlantic and Pacific waters. Alaska was then considered worthless. She has turned out to be priceless. When Napoleon concluded the sale of Louisiana to us he said, "I now give England a maritime rival which sooner or later will humble her pride." Prophetic words, for the War of 1812 followed, and to-day, without our assistance, both England and France would be vanquished instead of victors. Thomas Jefferson was President when the Louisiana deal was negotiated, and desiring to know something of the land we had bought "sight unseen," he organized the Lewis and Clark expedition, and instructed it to navigate the Missouri River to its source and hence find a waterway to the Pacific Ocean, making excursions or explorations inland as seemed advisable to Lewis and Clark, who were officers in the Regular Army and competent surveyors. In July, 1804, this expedition was at the mouth of the Platte River, sojourned a few days at Belleview, held a council with the Indians at what is now Fort Calhoun, and made a pilgrimage almost to Nance County.

John C. Calhoun, Secretary of War, sent Maj. Long on an exploring expedition through this country in 1819. At Belleview he made treaties with various Indian tribes, one of which, the Pawnee, then numbered 6,000 people. Long ascended the Platte to the confluence of the North and South Loups, and most likely tramped across a part of what we now call Nance County. In 1834 Congress declared this part of the west "Indian country," and made a treaty with the Pawnees that thereafter they should reside north of the Platte River, since which time they resided in this vicinity until their removal to Oklahoma. In 1842 John C. Fremont, then 29 years of age, accompanied by Kit Carson as guide, led the first of his five expeditions across the continent, little dreaming that some day he would be a major general in the United States Army, a United States Senator from the State of California, and the first nominee of the Republican Party for President. I remember him well, for he was the guest of Nebraska at the Republican national convention at Chicago in 1888, and in my charge. He was then 75 years of age, but his mind was active and he delighted us with what he saw and did in this wonderful West long before Nebraska was even dreamed of as a State. On this expedition Fremont ascended the Missouri River from St. Louis, thence up the Big and Little Blue, until he turned north toward a large island in the Platte to the westward of the present site of the city of Grand Island. The Fremont expeditions were all interesting, and each one is a story by itself. While he may not have visited this spot in 1842, two years afterwards, where Fullerton now stands or very near here, a real Fourth of July celebration took place, for Mrs. Elvira G. Platt, who was a participant, writes:

> That a settlement of white men with their wives and children went out, accompanied by a school, with banner and song to celebrate the day. We of Plum Creek were off early in the morning for a ride to the Mather's farm for breakfast; the picnic ground was Cedar Bluffs, overlooking the Willow (Cedar), where Fullerton now stands. L. M. Platt read the Declaration of Independence; Long, "America"; an oration by James Mather; an original poem and prayer completed the program.

Thus you see that the seed of patriotism was planted in this soil long before Nance County was born, and your magnificent parade and pageant to-day shows that the seed still blooms most profusely. In the same year the Mormons were driven out of Nauvoo, Ill., and they then began those remarkable pilgrimages to the West, which finally terminated in the Great Salt Lake country. For many months over 15,000 of these venturesome people dwelled where Fort Atkinson once stood and now known as Fort Calhoun, while another large colony was at Kanesville (Council Bluffs), Iowa. Brigham Young was of this settlement. In 1847 the Mormons left their homes along the Missouri River and joined other disciples westward, bound to the promised land in far-off Utah.

The Platte Valley was the only natural highway leading from the "Big Muddy" to the great West, and it was thronged with Mormons in 1847, followed two years later by an army of adventurers seeking gold in California. Over 100,000 men and women traveled the California or Mormon Trail along the north side of the Platte and the Oregon Trail, which extended along the other bank of this interesting river. This vicinity was not on those beaten paths and only a few stragglers came here, but when the gold fever subsided and people sought soil instead of mines your immigration began, and, strange to relate, your first permanent settlement was made by a Mormon colony of 100 people in 1857. These people first located in what we now call Platte County, but the land selected being claimed by Leander Gerard and his friends, they gave up their "squatter rights" and settled near the present site of Genoa, occupied 2,000 acres of land, 1,200 of which was cultivated, the entire tract being surrounded by ditches and sod fences. This colony, after months of deprivation and destitution, began to prosper. Then the Pawnees came. For three years these brave, industrious Mormons "held on," but the incessant fighting between the Pawnees and quarrelsome Sioux so terrified them that they moved away. Had I the time I could describe in detail the expeditions of Lieuts. Pike, Warren, and other officers of the United States Army, beginning in 1806 and ending in the sixties; the explorations and commercial ventures of the John Jacob Astor Fur Co.; the romantic careers of Manuel Lisa, Peter Sarpy, and Logan Fontenelle; the heroic and self-sacrificing deeds of a host of missionaries like Moses Merrill, Samuel Parker, and Father Pierre Jean De Smet, all doing their "bit" in a territory which afterwards became the State whose fiftieth anniversary we are celebrating to-day, for the benefit of civilization and the upbuilding of an ideal Republic. I also regret that I can not refer at length to the acts and deeds of that noble band of pioneers who came here in the fifties and sixties, for what they did has never been excelled here or elsewhere. God bless the pioneers of Nebraska.

When Congress passed the Kansas-Nebraska act in 1854 and President Pierce approved it on May 30 slavery in America was given a death blow, the Whig Party as a political organization was disrupted, the Republican Party was born, and a Civil War was assured. This act made null and void the so-called Missouri Compromise of 1820, which had held the North and South from each other's throats for several decades; it killed the presidential chances of Stephen A. Douglas, sent his senatorial rival, Abraham Lincoln, to the White House, and paved the way for the emancipation proclamation, which liberated 4,000,000 slaves. This act was productive of more benefits to mankind—indirectly rather than directly—than any other piece of legislation given to the people by Congress. The Kansas-Nebraska bill passed the Senate by 35 to 13 and went through the House of Representatives by 113 to 100, and gave the Territory of Nebraska 351,558 square miles—an empire, extending from the present southern boundary to British possessions on the north and from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains, an empire out of which has been carved the two Dakotas, most of Montana, nearly all of Wyoming, and a large part of Colorado and Idaho; an empire larger than the combined areas of Germany and Japan.

Francis Burt was our first Territorial governor, and he came from South Carolina. He arrived at Belleview October 7, 1854, and 11 days later, died. He was succeeded by the secretary of the Territory, Thomas Cuming, of Iowa—a change in office that made Omaha and not Belleview the metropolis of Nebraska. The official headquarters of the Territory remained at Belleview until the legislature convened in Omaha January, 1855, when that city was declared to be the capital. There were eight counties in the Territory, to wit: Burt, Washington, Dodge, Douglas, Cass, Pierce (Otoe), Forney (Nemaha), and Richardson. Napoleon Bonaparte Giddings was the first Territorial Delegate to Congress. In 1857 the legislature passed a bill moving the capital from Omaha, but Gov. Izard vetoed it. On March 5, 1860, the people voted against statehood by 2,094 yes to 2,372 no, and those were stormy times. Every family had a politician and a row. On April 19, 1864, Abraham Lincoln approved an act of Congress enabling the people of Nebraska to form a State constitution and government, and on June 2, 1866, the vote for statehood carried by 100 majority. The campaign was bitterly contested and left so many sore spots that they were not healed in a generation. The first governor of the State, David Butler, was declared elected over J. Sterling Morton by 45 majority, and Lorenzo Crounse had 6 majority for the office of supreme judge. Thomas Warren Tipton and John Milton Thayer became our first United States Senators and Turner Martin Marquette our first Congressman, although he served but two days. To quote Marquette, "I ran twice for Congress in one year, was elected both times, and served two days and really two nights, but I never charged anything for that." In this hotly contested election the vote in Rock Bluff precinct, Cass County, was not counted, because the election officials, in violation of the law, had not remained in sight of the ballot box from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. on election day, hunger having tempted them to dinner 1 mile away. The vote in this precinct was Democratic 107, Republican 49. Those were straight-ticket days. The majority in Rock Bluff precinct against the adoption of a State constitution was large enough to offset the majority given it in the entire State. Had this vote been counted J. Sterling Morton and the rest of the Democratic candidates would have been elected. Thayer and Tipton would not have gone to the United States Senate and the early history of the State would have been radically changed.

In July, 1866, Congress voted statehood to Nebraska, but President Andrew Johnson blocked the legislation with a pocket veto. On January 9, 1867, statehood won in the United States Senate by a vote of 34 to 15, and one week later passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 103 to 55. On January 29 President Johnson vetoed this bill, but Congress passed it "over his head" by a vote in the Senate on February 8 of 31 to 9, and in the House on February 9 by a vote of 120 to 43. One of the conditions of statehood was that the word "white" should not remain in the constitution as adopted by the people on June 2, 1866. Alvin Saunders, our last Territorial governor, summoned the legislature in special session at Omaha February 20, 1867, and on that date all conditions for statehood prescribed by Congress were complied with.

President Johnson, on March 1, 1867, issued a proclamation declaring Nebraska a State. Its star was added to the flag July 4, 1867, the thirty-seventh in the constellation. Thus, during a period of 325 years the land now constituting Nebraska was claimed by Spain and England in the sixteenth century, although the latter country never assumed ownership; by France in 1682; ceded to Spain in 1762; receded to France in 1800; sold to the United States in 1803; attached to the Territory of Indiana in 1812; had no government from 1821 to 1854; then became a Territory in her own right and arrived at statehood March 1, 1867, just 50 years ago March 1, 1917; and during these 325 years only the flags of Spain, France, and the United States floated over our soil. The union jack, so familiar to our forebears east of the Mississippi for so many years, was never a badge of dominion and authority "in these parts." I have given you the history of Nebraska in a very brief form from the time it was "no man's land" to a period when everybody is hungry for any part of it, and, in conclusion, I desire to call your attention to a few salient facts that should not be overlooked, my only regret being that I can not, for lack of time, cover all the interesting history of Nebraska. The subject is too large. I have a fund of information relating to Nance County, but I will leave that recital to your distinguished citizen, Hon. J. H. Kemp, who, some day, will make history for this Commonwealth as its governor, for he, like your very efficient county superintendent, Miss Chloe Baldridge, is competent for any service to which either may be called. Miss Baldridge by her work to-day has demonstrated beyond cavil that woman has a place in the sun; that her domain is in the field of man; and that there should be no limitations in the pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness under God's heavens because of sex. Miss Baldridge, our hats are off to you, and the State superintendency of schools should be your next goal; and permit me to say in this connection that the veterans of the Civil War seated upon this platform remind me that Nebraska, both as a Territory and as a State, has always been foremost in patriotism and love of country, and freely gave of her sons and daughters in times of stress. She successfully defended herself against the Indians; her record in the Civil and Spanish Wars is equal to that of any State in the Union; and to-day she is offering more than her quota of men and women for service in the world war in order that our national honor may be preserved and that democracy may prevail over autocracy and that liberty and freedom may have an abiding place forever and a day among all the peoples of the earth.

Our first newspaper was the Nebraska Palladium, at Belleview, November 14, 1854, the issue of this date being No. 16, the previous 15 numbers having been printed at St. Marys, Iowa. The Omaha Arrow was printed in the Bugle office at Council Bluffs, Iowa, until November 28, 1854, when its Omaha issue appeared. The Arrow survived until near Christmas, 1854, while the Palladium died in April, 1855, to be succeeded by the Nebraskan, which lived until 1863. At one time the Arrow received for services rendered—nature of service not stated—a deed to the second lot on Douglas Street west of Sixteenth, facing north, and now part of the land occupied by the great Brandeis stores. That lot to-day is worth over $100,000. The Nebraskan was founded by Bird B. Chapman, a Delegate in Congress from this State, 1855–1857. The Nebraska City News came from Sidney, Iowa, where its first Nebraska issue was set up and printed on November 14, 1854, the same date carried by the Palladium in its first issue west of the Missouri River. In my opinion, the News of Nebraska City, which survives and shines to-day, is entitled to the honor of being Nebraska's first newspaper. It is also entitled to the honor of being a first-class newspaper from 1854 to 1917. The Mortons, Thomas and J. Sterling, E. D. Marnell, J. Stilson Porter, and others made it first class.

The legislature of 1855 gave the Territory a very drastic prohibition law, which remained upon the statute books until 1858, when high license came. We have returned to the status of 1855, so far as the flowing bowl is concerned.

On the suffrage question, we started with the word "white" in our constitution. We eliminated that to save statehood, then we refused votes to women by popular vote more than once, but the present legislature has broken down a few of the barriers in the way of equal suffrage and the remaining ones will fall at the next election, for our women have so decided and the men are too gallant and sensible to say them nay.

We secured our first railroad when the great Union Pacific came. On July 1, 1862, Abraham Lincoln signed the Union Pacific act and later located the eastern terminus at Council Bluffs. The first shovel of dirt was thrown in Omaha, December 2, 1863, and the first rails laid in that city on July 13, 1865. The road was finished to the Great Salt Lake May 10, 1869. When cars began running it took 19 hours to go from Omaha to the present site of Kearney and the fare was $19. By the way, Abraham Lincoln, after whom our State capital was named and who had so much to do with our early history, never paid us a visit. He came west as far as Council Bluffs, were he delivered a speech in Bayliss Park.

In 1858 the State board of agriculture began as a Territorial organization, the first Territorial fair being held in Nebraska City in 1859, and the first State fair in the same city in 1868.

In 1859 the Nebraska City News, Brownville Advertiser, Plattsmouth Sentinel, Falls City Broadaxe, and Omaha Republican formed a press association, the forerunner of our present State press association.

August 29, 1860, the first telegram ever sent to or from Nebraska went from Brownville to the Associated Press of America.

In 1867 we adopted a seal of State. Pupils in our schools should study it. Every line has a meaning. In the same year, on July 29, the capital was moved from Omaha to Lincoln.

In 1868 the State Medical Society was organized and in 1869 came the State Horticultural Society. In 1871 we held our first constitutional convention, but the people refused to ratify its work by 641 majority. In 1874 Gov. R. W. Furnas issued an Arbor Day proclamation, the first of its kind in any State. In 1875 a second constitutional convention, duplicating most of the work of the 1871 convention, submitted to the people our present constitution, and it was ratified by 24,728 majority. The State Bar Association came in 1876 and the State Historical Association in 1878, while in 1895, in the face of sneezing opposition from hay-fever victims, the golden rod was made our State flower; but to my mind one of the most important and beneficent acts of our State solons was the establishment of Arbor Day in 1885, and making that day a holiday. State after State has followed this precedent, and the idea leaped two oceans to find a lodgment in many foreign countries. J. Sterling Morton is the founder and father of Arbor Day, and the legislature recognized this fact by designating April 22 the anniversary of Morton's birthday, as Arbor Day in Nebraska. For this idea Morton will live in the memory of man long after his associates, their children and grandchildren will have passed away; and we owe it to Morton and to posterity that Arbor Day be observed as Morton, were he here, would have it observed, by the planting of trees. Each boy and girl in Nebraska should plant a tree on this day and each tree should be tagged with the name of the planter and date of planting.

The free-homestead act was of incalculable benefit, for it accelerated settlements in Nebraska; but that act concerns you indirectly, as Nance is the only county in the State where the homestead right was not exercised, as your land was sold. Not a homestead, tree-claim, or preemption right was secured here. You had squatters, but they were obliged to protect their claims by purchase.

On May 20, 1862, Abraham Lincoln approved the free homestead act, to take effect January 1, 1863, and Daniel Freeman, a Nebraska soldier, obtained claim No. 1. He selected 160 acres near Beatrice. This patent is numbered 1 and is recorded in volume 1 on page 1 of the records of the General Land Office at Washington, D. C. Freeman attended a dance at Brownville on the night of December 31, 1862, and expected to join his regiment next day. A Government land office was at Brownville, but the officials intended to observe New Year's Day as a holiday. When Freeman explained his status the land-office officials came to his rescue, and, with claim No. 1 in his hand, Freeman returned to the dance shortly after midnight for a Virginia reel. Before sunrise January 1 he left for his regiment.

Nebraska has six Congressmen, her representation having doubled after the census of 1890. Hon. DAN V. STEPHENS ably represents this, the third district, consisting of 18 counties.

Last, but not least, whence the name "Nebraska"? In 1738 two brothers, Paul and Pierre Mallet, Frenchmen from New Orleans, came up the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers to what is now Dakota County, and they then traveled overland diagonally across what is now called Nebraska to Santa Fe. When they arrived at a very wide river they gave it the French name "Platt," meaning "broad." Fremont, in 1842, called the same river "Nebraska," and in 1844 William Wilkins, Secretary of War in the Tyler administration, said, "The Platt or Nebraska, being the central stream leading into or from the great South Pass, would very properly furnish a name for the territory which I propose suggesting to be erected into a Territorial government." The first bill introduced in Congress named the new Territory "Platt." This was in 1851. Subsequently another bill was introduced, and when the Territory was legally organized it received the name "Nebraska," thus preserving Indian nomenclature, for Nebraska is a Sioux word meaning "broad water"—"ne" or "ni" meaning "water"—hence Nebraska, "broad water"; Niobrara, "running water"; and Niagara, "falling water." The Sioux Indians and the Mallet brothers looked upon the Platte River as broad water, and the names given it had the same meaning. Platt in French and Nebraska in Sioux. The Platte River went by the name of "Nebraska" for a great many years, but when the Territory was organized and took the name "Nebraska" the river had the name "Platte" fastened upon it.

Who can prophesy the future of Nebraska? Our climate is of the best, because our range of latitude and longitude, together with our elevation above sea level, running from 800 feet to over a mile in height, makes it so. Our topography and climate, with a sufficient annual rainfall and almost continuous sunshine, insure bountiful crops. We have more square miles within our boundaries than can be found in Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, and Serbia combined, and those countries have a population of 23,000,000. God certainly smiled upon Nebraska.

In Opposition to the Espionage Bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. FREDERICK C. HICKS,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Thursday, May 31, 1917.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, when Gutenberg invented movable type, nearly five centuries ago, a revolution in the dissemination of knowledge was inaugurated. Since that day the discussion of public questions through the medium of the press has gradually, and in later years with increased rapidity, superseded in a large measure the more costly and difficult distribution of pamphlets and circulars and the restricted agency of public meetings.

In every treatise on government no greater emphasis is laid upon any factor which contributes to the maintenance and perpetuity of representative democracy than upon the right of freedom of discussion—comprehending freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, and freedom of the press. De Tocqueville, in his "Democracy in America," gave utterance to a truth which can not be denied. "In countries where the doctrine of the sovereignty of the people prevails, the censorship of the press is not only dangerous but absurd. When the right of every citizen to a share in the government of society is acknowledged, everyone must be presumed to be able to choose between the various opinions of his contemporaries and to appreciate the different facts from which inferences may be drawn. The sovereignty of the people and the liberty of the press may therefore be regarded as correlative, just as the censorship of the press and universal suffrage are two things which are irreconcilably opposed, and which can not be long retained among institutions of the same people." When our forefathers, after seven years of war for freedom, promulgated that great charter of democracy to "secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," they ordained in the first amendment to the Constitution that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

In this time of stress and danger, Mr. Speaker, let us harken to the mandate of that covenant of human rights; let us hold steadfast to the principles embodied in that immortal document. For a century and a quarter the Constitution has been equal to every emergency which has confronted the Republic. Maintaining our course true to its doctrines, we have repelled foes from without and upheld its sanctity when secession thundered within our borders. Under its beneficent provisions every citizen has enjoyed the freedom of voice and pen, every hamlet the opportunity of assembly, while from forum and pulpit and press has come the expression of public opinion emancipated from fear and restraint. Free speech and a free press are the bulwarks of civil and religious liberty—the fundamentals of all republics. While we are battling to extend the blessings of democracy in the Old World, we should not destroy the principles of democracy in the New by undermining the very foundations upon which rest all representative governments.

Freedom of discussion does not mean and can never mean unbridled license to speak or print that which will endanger the public welfare or violate the rights of others, and any newspaper that divulges information which would give aid to the enemy should be suppressed and its editors punished to the full extent of the law.

When this Nation was calling forth all the resources of the North for the preservation of the Union, President Lincoln was urged, on the ground of extreme military necessity, to set aside temporarily the constitutional guaranty of free speech. Despite the fact that a considerable portion of the press was disloyal, our martyred President even in that time of national peril would not consent to violate the mandates of the Constitution. President Wilson, in his memorable war address to Congress last April, said, in discussing the spy system of Germany: "Such designs can be successfully worked out only under cover, and where no one has the right to ask questions. They are happily impossible where public opinion commands and insists upon full information concerning all the Nation's affairs."

The enactment of such a law as here proposed would be without precedent. It would be unwise, unjust, and dangerous. It would vitally effect the liberties of the people, for the press is but the agent of the people—the established and convenient method for the exchange of facts and opinions. It is not the publisher or the editor who would suffer under a rigid censorship but those who have the right to know and discuss the facts of Government and criticize their own public officials. The hand of the Government is made infinitely stronger when sustained by the enlightened thought of the people, and this cooperation can not be given unless the people have knowledge of the facts. The Government can not carry on this war successfully without the constant support and sympathy of its citizens, and their enthusiasm and assistance can only be secured by taking them into the confidence of the Government. To do otherwise would be tantamount to saying that they can not be trusted with knowledge of their own affairs.

The people are entitled to know what their Government is doing. Give them the truth; it is the only way to obtain united action. Mystery and concealment engender suspicion and lead to discontent and distrust. "War is not entirely a matter of armed force. Public opinion is a factor in victory no less than ships and guns, and the creation and stimulation of a healthy, ardent national sentiment is the kind of fighting that the press can do." The people of the United States intend to stand by the administration in this crisis, but they want to do it intelligently. They do not want published anything that will handicap the Government in the proper and successful prosecution of the war or which will aid the enemy.

The press is patriotic and I have such faith in the loyalty of the newspapers of America that I am confident they will act as their own censors and prohibit the publication of any information which would profit our enemies or jeopardize the national welfare. The service being rendered the country by the press is incalculable. They have given effective support to the administration in its war measures; they have placed their columns at the disposal of the Government in its appeal for subscriptions to the liberty loan and for the dissemination of information which will conserve and foster our resources; they have awakened us from a false sense of security and inspired our people with the spirit of national obligation.

The huge appropriations we have placed at the disposal of the administration should be expended economically and with strict business integrity, but unfortunately war breeds recklessness and waste. In its wake stalks greed and avarice, venality and corruption. The press of the Nation will perform a great service to the country by bringing to the light for public censure and condemnation dishonest contracts, graft, extravagance, and unfair practices, should they exist, and only a press free and independent, aggressive and uncensored, can render such service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. CARY,

OF WISCONSIN,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 9, 1917.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that it is necessary to call attention to a most detestable and vicious form of know-nothingism that has reared its ugly head within the last few days. I am somewhat tired of repelling the unwarranted charges of disloyalty that have so frequently been made against Americans of German birth or descent, and I would not now go into the subject again, but when a Senator from Wisconsin and an editor from Milwaukee seek to cast reflections on the State I am a citizen of and the city of my birth; when they attack the patriotism of the people I have lived amongst all my life; when they spew the vicious venom of malicious spite on my friends and neighbors, I think it is high time to call the bluff and require the "ill birds that foul their own nest" to furnish a bill of particulars, and I have therefore introduced the following resolution:

Whereas a Bulletin, a publication issued daily in the city of Washington, contained on Thursday, June 7, 1917, the following item: "L. W. Nieman, editor of the Milwaukee Journal, and Senator HUSTING laid before the President this afternoon evidences of German intrigue in Wisconsin"; and

Whereas said publication implies grave charges against the people of the State of Wisconsin and reflects upon the fair fame of the State; and

Whereas on June 5, 1917, the people of the State of Wisconsin, and especially of the city of Milwaukee, demonstrated their loyalty to the country of their birth or adoption by responding gallantly and overwhelmingly to the call of the President for the defenders of our flag; and

Whereas the so-called liberty loan of the United States will be largely oversubscribed in the city of Milwaukee and State of Wisconsin: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives such information as he may have in his possession relating to the charges implied in the above-mentioned publication, if not incompatible with the public interests.

"By their works ye shall know them." There has been a lot of cheap talk all over the country. There have been big parades, meetings galore, and speeches a plenty, and there has also been a whole lot of superficial twaddle and bombastic buncombe about plots and conspiracies in some sections of the country, especially Wisconsin, and more especially Milwaukee County; and now, when the test comes, what do the results show?

Here is a telegram I received from one of the most prominent citizens of Milwaukee, a man of reputation and of unimpeachable character, whose word has always been as good as his bond:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June 6, 1917.

Congressman WILLIAM J. CARY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The press for months has been questioning loyalty of Milwaukee. Eastern papers and some ignorant speakers have been especially abusive. Total registration Milwaukee County last presidential election, 77,691; registration on duty day, 55,969; no arrest; no trouble, except overenthusiasm and crowding of booths. Press reports riots in New York and trouble at various points all over the United States. New York beats Milwaukee in preparedness parade, waving flags and shouting, but Milwaukee will do more than its share with fighting men ready to go to the front just as stated in my Times-Picayune (New Orleans) interview of April 7. Ask the Associated Press to give equal publicity to Milwaukee's honorable record on June 5 as they have given to scurrilous statements against us. Liberty loan will be oversubscribed here.

GEO. H. RUSSEL.

I also insert here a clipping from the New York American of June 8, 1917, which is somewhat amusing when you compare the charges in the beginning with the results as described toward the end:

Charges of an organized plot in the State of Wisconsin to defeat the draft were laid before President Wilson by L. W. Nieman, editor of a Milwaukee newspaper. He declared influences were at work to overthrow the entire military program of the Nation.

The Wisconsin plot, as disclosed by Editor Nieman, included the use of pro-German newspapers in carrying on the propaganda against the draft. He was introduced to President Wilson by Senator HUSTING, of Wisconsin, and presented for the President's inspection a list of charges and evidence to bear them out.

WISCONSIN FIGURES LARGE.

The plot, according to Nieman, went beyond the mere urging of men not to register; it is designed to render the United States powerless and impotent in the war.

Agents of the Department of Justice and United States Secret Service already are working on the case, it was indicated at the Department of Justice, and early arrests are likely.

It was pointed out, however, that in Wisconsin itself the alleged plot apparently did not gain much headway, so far as registration was concerned, as complete figures for that State received at the War Department to-day showed it to have exceeded the census estimate by 15,000 names, or 7 per cent. The total State registration was 245,758, against an estimate of 229,597.

Compare these results with the figures from other States. Compare them especially with some of the States and cities that have been the most blatant shouters for war. I am willing to stake my reputation for veracity on an unqualified challenge that the State of Wisconsin, Milwaukee County, and the district I represent will furnish as good a quota of husky, patriotic soldiers as any section of the country and will go a lot of sections some better.

We still sing the Star-Spangled Banner out my way; we still celebrate the Fourth of July and believe every line of the Declaration of Independence, and in spite of all that slanderous tongues may say or evil minds imagine the "boys of the Badger State" will give the same good account of themselves in 1917 as they did in 1861 and in 1898.

Conservation of Our Food Supply.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. ADDISON T. SMITH,

OF IDAHO.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me by the House to extend my remarks on the importance of the conservation of our food supply and the necessity of enacting legislation to prohibit the use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, I submit for the information of the Members of this House a paper which has been carefully prepared by Mr. Deets Pickett, research secretary of the board of temperance, containing the opinion of noted authorities in this and foreign countries on the injurious effects, both mental and physical, upon those who are in the habit of drinking beer:

BEER CAUSES THE CONSUMPTION OF MORE ALCOHOL THAN DOES WHISKY—IT HAS NO APPRECIABLE FOOD VALUE—ITS RAVAGES UPON THE BODY ARE FEARFUL—IT PRODUCES THE "BEER PHILISTINISM" WHICH IS THE BLIGHT OF GERMANY—IT HAS ALWAYS FAILED AS A SOLVER OF THE LIQUOR PROBLEM—IT CAUSES MORE DRUNKENNESS THAN ANY OTHER SINGLE LIQUOR.

The growth of the beer habit is cursing the world with a very flood of poisonous liquor.

It is estimated that the production of beer in the world in 1913 was 282,078,000 barrels, which is equivalent to approximately 8,750,000,000 gallons. The immensity of these figures is not intelligible until we begin to compare this volume of beer with other large aggregations of liquid.

The world's production of beer would make a river 6 feet deep, 10 feet wide, and as long as the Mississippi. It would fill the Panama Canal or keep Niagara Falls going for several hours. In Scotland it would fill Loch Lomond, or it would keep the many fountains of the city of Paris running six months.

It required 27,648 breweries to manufacture this flood of liquid refreshment, producing on an average 10,200 barrels. The United States leads the world in the production of beer, being responsible for slightly more than one-fifth of the world's output.

HOW BEER CONSUMPTION HAS GROWN.

The period of the greatest increase in the consumption of liquors has corresponded closely with the period of greatest growth in the use of beer. In 1850, when practically no beer was used in America, the consumption of spirituous liquors in the United States was 2.24 gallons per capita, and in 1910 this had been reduced to 1.42 gallons. But the per capita consumption of absolute alcohol has increased, since 1850, 37 per cent. In other words, the amount of alcohol contributed to individual consumption by spirits decreased 35 per cent, but the amount contributed by beer increased 1,000 per cent, so that at the end of the period the average American was using 37 per cent more of pure alcohol than before beer drinking became common in America.

A VICE OF THE CITIES.

The vice of beer drinking is peculiarly a city vice in the United States. "Probably nine-tenths of the beer is consumed by the adult male population in urban communities," said President Edward A. Schmidt, of the United States Brewers' Association, in speaking to the convention held in New Orleans. Inadvertently, in this statement President Schmidt admitted that nine-tenths of the beer is consumed in

BEER NOT WHAT IT SEEMS TO BE.

A great effort is being made in America just at the present time to convince the people that beer is not an alcoholic beverage in the sense that whisky and other spirituous liquors are, that its so-called "moderate" use is harmless, that it has food value and that a permanent solution of the drink habit can be found in the prohibition of whisky and similar drinks and the encouragement of beer and light wines.

These statements are not supported by the facts as established by the experience of America and Germany, by the medical and chemical professions, and by the records of "keep-beer-prohibition" experiments.

"The result of extolling beer as the mightiest enemy of whisky and brandy has been that the consumption of the distilled liquors has changed very little while to these liquors has been added beer, the use of which has led to a great and still increasing beer alcoholism. The brutalizing effect of beer-alcoholism is shown most clearly by the fact that in Germany crimes of personal violence, particularly dangerous bodily injuries, occur most frequently in Bavaria where there is the highest consumption of beer," said Dr. Hugo Hoppe, the famous nerve specialist of Konigsberg, Germany, and Dr. Charles Gilbert Davis, of Chicago, evidently agrees with him, for he arraigns beer in the following vigorous language:

"It is my professional opinion, after observation of many years in the practice of medicine, that beer is doing more harm to humanity than all other alcoholics.

"Beer produces disease of the stomach, kidneys, heart, and blood vessels. Owing to the diuretic effect of the hops, the alcohol in the beer is diverted toward the kidneys, which probably accounts for its destructive action on those organs. It causes a deposit of morbid fat in the body, especially around the heart, enlarges that organ, and increases the work of the heart and blood vessels, manifested by the fatigue and shortness of breath of all beer drinkers.

"A man can not use beer daily for any great length of time and not manifest some physiological deficiency.

"Prof. Stengel, in his great work, a translation from Jügensen, of Tübingen, and Schrötter, of Vienna, draws attention to what he calls the 'beer heart.' He says: 'Bavaria, especially Munich, is its home par excellence, and the people in that country in every class of society fall victims to this form of heart disease.'

"Beer deposits fat around the heart, weakens the muscular walls, thickens and enlarges the ventricles, and, if continued, ultimately cuts short the life of the individual.

"All of this has been proven time and again by the post mortems of Bollinger, who has examined and weighed the hearts of many beer drinkers. This is a terrible scientific arraignment of beer, but it is the truth, and truth is the voice of God."

Dr. John M. Dodson, dean of the medical department of the University of Chicago, gave as his opinion that beer is even more deleterious to health than the stronger drinks.

Dr. Struempell, a German physiologist of high standing, does not tolerate for a moment the suggestion that beer is less of a social enemy than other liquors, for he says:

"Nothing is more erroneous from the physician's standpoint than to think of diminishing the destructive effects of alcoholism by substituting beer for other alcoholic drinks, or that the victims of drink are found only in those countries where whisky helps the people of a low grade of culture to forget their poverty and misery."

THE BEER DRINKER GETS MORE ALCOHOL.

The belief that beer should not come under the condemnation so frequently meted out to whisky is traceable to the common impression that beer drinkers consume much less alcohol than whisky drinkers. But those who believe this overlook the fact that the man who drinks four per cent beer usually takes ten times as much as a man who takes 40 per cent whisky. The United States Internal Revenue Commissioner, on page 675 of the Statistical Abstract, gives the per capita consumption of distilled spirits and beer in 1914 and their respective alcoholic contents as follows:

	Gallons used.	Gallons of alcohol.
Distilled spirits	1.45	0.584
Malt liquors	20.51	.820

It will be seen from this that the per capita consumption of alcohol by beer drinkers in 1914 was 40 per cent greater than that by whisky drinkers.

Prof. Kraepelin, of the University of Munich, says that at one banquet of professional men in Berlin there was consumed during the evening, by 4,000 persons, 15,382 bottles of wine, 4,646 pints of beer, and 300 bottles of cognac. Prof. Kraepelin has also stated that 13,000 persons become victims of alcohol each year in Germany, and that one-fifth of all mental disorders are attributable to alcoholic liquors.

Nor must it be thought that the less concentration of alcohol in beer makes that beverage less dangerous. During a recent court trial in Chicago a medical witness was asked:

"Does the rate or degree of oxidation depend upon the concentration of alcohol?" He answered: "Not at all on the concentration." To the further question, "Would the stimulant and narcotic action of 48 drops of alcohol be greater or less if given in 20 per cent or 55 per cent dilution?" "It would be indistinguishable," he answered, "just as the narcotic and stimulant effect of the same dose of alcohol is indistinguishable whether it is given in the form of whisky or in the form of beer."

BEER VALUELESS AS A FOOD.

An extensive beer advertising campaign is under way, designed to create the impression that it is an article of food and that it is always "pure." As a matter of fact it has no appreciable food value. The statement so often attributed to the famous German chemist, Baron Von Liebig, "Beer is liquid bread," can not be located in any of Von Liebig's scientific works, and in Letter VI of his Letters on Chemistry, to be found on page 22 of his Complete Works on Chemistry, he says:

"Beer, wine, and spirits furnish no elements capable of entering into the composition of the blood, muscular fiber, or any part that is a vital principle."

And he says:

"Nine quarts of the best ale contain as much nourishment as would lie on the end of a table knife."

And still again:

"If a man drinks daily 8 or 10 quarts of the best Bavarian beer, in the course of 12 months he will have taken into his stomach the nutritive constituents of a five-pound loaf of bread."

Prof. G. O. Higley, of the department of chemistry, Ohio Wesleyan University, published a very elaborate study of the food value of flour and of beer. He found the ratio of proteids in beer to proteid in flour as 1 to 80, of carbohydrates as 1 to 61, and of fats 0.0 to 0.28. To furnish a hard-working man with the amount of proteid needed each day it would be necessary to give him 108 glasses of beer, costing $5.40, as compared to 37.9 ounces of flour, costing 6.8 cents. To supply him with the carbohydrates needed for his daily ration it would be necessary to give him 52 glasses of beer, costing $2.60, or of flour, costing 4.3 cents.

The same money expended for beer and flour would yield 94.05 calories in the case of beer, and 2,785.84 calories in the case of flour. The calorie is the unit of measure of nutritive value.

Prof. Higley made a similar comparison between milk and beer with similar conclusions.

THE "PHILISTINISM" OF THE BEER DRINKER.

Prof. Rudolph Eucken, possibly the greatest philosopher Germany has produced, declares that his country must give up beer, which "breeds the wretched type of beer Philistine with which everyone is familiar."

The term "Philistinism," as describing the intellectual desolation and brutalization resulting from the beer habit, is now universal. The Scientific American says:

"The most dangerous classes of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Intellectually a stupor amounting almost to paralysis arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger, senseless and brutal," and it also continues its unflattering remarks as follows:

"In appearance the beer drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. A slight injury, a severe cold, or a shock to the body or mind will commonly provoke acute disease, ending fatally. Compared with other inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. It is our observation that beer drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity."

Dr. Flessinger, editor of a Paris medical periodical, declares that "Beer makes people ferocious and beastly."

The Pacific Medical Journal of this country supplements this testimony: "Of all intoxicating drinks, beer is the most animalizing; beyond all others it qualifies for deliberate and unprovoked crime."

The fact is generally acknowledged. Said one wife, "When my husband drinks whisky, he soon gets stupid; but when he drinks beer, he runs after me with a knife."

A woman of 45, with an 11-year-old boy, was found by the police, near Hoboken, N. J., nearly dead from exposure. There was a hotel near by where she might have had shelter, but she refused it because there was beer on the premises. This illustrates in a striking way the popular recognition of the beastly qualities imparted by constant use of beer.

THE EXPERIENCE OF GERMANY.

Kraepelin, one of the best known of German scientists, in speaking of Munich, says: "The daily amount of beer there runs from 4 to 8 quarts, and about 40 per cent of these beer drinkers add small amounts of distilled liquors, and some men drink daily 10, 15, and 20 quarts." This certainly does not indicate that beer tends to create "temperance" in that Province.

Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton, in the Survey for February 24, 1917, calls attention to the fact that beer has been found to be the chief alcoholic cause of disease in Germany. She says:

"Noted investigators of this disease maker were Bauer and Bollinger. They found that out of 5,700 autopsies conducted in a series of years in the Pathological Institute, of Munich, only six women (the more temperate sex) had died of that enlargement of the heart afterwards called beer heart. But 1 out of every 16 males had died of it. Sendtner, following up these researches, found that while the general death rate elsewhere (according to the Gothaer Life Insurance) was 5.8 from heart disease, in beer-soaked Munich it was 11.9. He also found that brewery hands in Munich had an even higher death rate from heart disease than did the Munich population in general."

Prof. Von Struempell, above quoted, expresses himself at greater length, thus:

"Formerly whisky and brandy were the universal evil-doers, the only despised drinks as against 'noble' wine and 'harmless' beer. At present we know that in practice the injurious effects of beer are at least as frequent, if not, indeed, more frequent, than those of distilled liquor.

"For although the percentage of alcohol (beer 2 to 4 per cent) is not especially high, yet this low percentage is counteracted by the great quantity drunk; 100 cubic centimeters of beer contain only 3 grams pure alcohol, but a liter contains 30 grams. A moderate beer drinker who daily drinks his 5 liters thus gets every day 150 grams of absolute alcohol into his body. Finally, it must be noted that perhaps beer contains besides alcohol other injurious substances from the hops, whose effect is also to be taken into account."

Other eminent European scientists and doctors speak as follows:

Prof. Emil Kraepelin: "In the production of alcoholism in Germany beer undoubtedly plays the chief rôle. It must be conceded that beer is capable of producing typical delirium tremens."

Prof. Gustav von Bunge: "No other drink (referring to beer) is so insidious. It has been in Germany worse than the whisky pest, because more apt to lead to immoderate drinking."

Prof. Möbius, Leipsic: "I know little of whisky and wine drinkers. With us it is beer that ruins the people."

Dr. Johannes Leonhart, a distinguished scientist: "The question concerning alcohol is not whether Smith or Jones believes that he can take two or three glasses a day without harm, but how is it possible to diminish the immense amount of injury from it that the whole German people suffer?"

Prof. Forel in the American Journal of Insanity (1900):

"One only needs to study in Germany the 'beer jokes,' beer conversation, and beer literature. They have stifled in young Germany the idealism, the taste for the classics and the finer mental pleasures throughout broad parts of the nation and in both sexes, to an extent that makes one cry for help. Among the academic youth of Germany the drinking of beer has truly killed ideals and ethics and has produced an incredible vulgarity."

Similar opinions are held in other countries where they consume beer and "light liquors." Sully-Prudhomme is responsible for this statement, which hardly jibes with what the brewers tell us:

"All in all, my opinion as to alcohol in all its forms is that it is fitted, thanks to the devastation it brings about in the nervous system, to animalize people in all grades of society and, sooner or later, to annihilate the superiority which man has slowly acquired over the anthropoid ape."

And Prof. Nothnagel, of Vienna, says:

"It is a sin to give children wine or beer. It is criminal to teach that wine nourishes. The dreadful neurasthenia of our day is due just to this early use of alcohol. Those who say that alcohol is a poison are wholly right."

A recent testimonial comes from a source that can by no means be said to be prejudiced to prohibition. England found soon after the outbreak of war that she must curb the ravages of the liquor traffic, so the Government put the entire matter into the hands of the British Board of Control, of which Lord D'Abernon is chairman. In October, 1916, he made this statement:

"In London at various periods in the early part of 1916 a total number of 903 cases of drunkenness were analyzed, of whom 566 were men and 337 women. Dividing the cases according to cause of drunkenness, it was found that 40 per cent had become drunk on beer or stout, 35 per cent on spirits, excluding rum, 8 per cent on rum, 10 per cent on spirits and beer, 4 per cent on other drinks. The remaining 17 per cent did not know the nature of their drink.

WHY BEER IS STUPEFYING.

Beer derives from hops a bitter-tasting, sticky substance which forms the active element of the oriental narcotic—hasheesh. This discovery, credited to Prof. Reinitzer, of the Polytechnic at Graz, is declared by other European scientists to account for the "undoubted stupefying effects of beer."

Judge Lang, of Zurich, says: "Brandy makes a man sick, but beer makes him stupid"; and Dr. Delbrueck declares that all civilization must send for the slogan, "War on beer."

Hasheesh is a narcotic made by the natives of India, Turkey, and other countries from the leaves, flowers, and stalks of the hemp plant. Long ago it was the custom of eastern despots, when assigning to servants the duty of assassination, to intoxicate them with hasheesh, and from the similar sound we are said to derive our word "assassin." The drug has a peculiar, brutalizing effect. It pulls in the nerves from the finger tips to the inner recesses as a cat draws in its claws. The victim is left unperceptive, unresponsive, and in time is degraded to the level of the grunting hog.

Hops is very closely related to hemp. Says Prof. Reinitzer, "In the female blossom of the Indian plant, as in the female blossom of the hops, we find glands holding a narcotic, bitter-tasting, sticky substance which forms the active element of the hasheesh from Indian hemp. This is used by the various Mohammedan people of South and West Africa as opium elsewhere for narcotic purposes."

THE "PHILISTINISM" OF THE BEER DRINKER.

To the hops rather than to alcohol Prof. Reinitzer attributes "that stupefaction which marks the 'beer Philistine.'" He further says, "Such an expression as wine or whisky Philistine is inconceivable. Beer drinking has apparently a special action on the nervous system which leads to that clumsy, provincial heaviness of mind one can observe most strikingly in the beer drinker. Also, the hops contributes to the pathological, burning thirst of the beer drinker and to the injurious effects on the kidneys."

The now benighted ones who still imagine that in Europe, and especially in Germany, there is no prejudice against the use of "light drinks" may read with very great profit the above expressions from eminent Germans.

American medical opinion is well expressed by Dr. Howard A. Kelly, of Johns Hopkins University. Dr. Kelly is one of the most eminent surgeons of the United States, and he makes this statement: "I consider, with eminent German authorities of enormous experience, that beer is exceedingly injurious and dangerous as a beverage. It has no scientific medical indorsements of which I know."

THE PROGRAM OF MODERATION.

The brewers and saloon keepers tell us that beer will make Americans "moderate-drinking people." The St. Louis Star has located a saloon advertisement in that city which tells how they intend to do it. Here it is:

"Free! Free Free! To introduce our large beers we will give one free to anyone who buys and drinks four bar beers in 10 minutes. Our beers hold 40 ounces, or three 5-cent bottles. No glasses are large enough to hold one of our beers. The capacity of the human stomach is 1 gallon. You can have your capacity filled best at the New Home Liquor Store, 1525 Market Street."

The former editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate says that recently while sitting beside a police judge whose court was in session he asked that each one appearing on the charge of drunkenness, or assault due to drunkenness, should be questioned as to what he had been drinking. Out of 18 cases 15 said they had been drinking beer. Three old topers had been using whisky. About half of the beer cases involved assault and battery or destruction of property.

It is suggested that the next time anyone points to beer drinking in Germany as a solution of the liquor problem this quotation from Dr. Von Bunge, of the University of Basel, Switzerland, be submitted for further discussion:

"Such horrors as a great modern joint-stock brewery perpetrates are unrivaled in the whole world's history. Men in past centuries were made chattel slaves. But the slaves kept their health. Men have been killed by thousands, but the children of the murdered remained strong. Now they make slaves of them and murder them at the same time. They kill them, together with their children and children's children. They kill them slowly; they torture them slowly to death."

The quotation is from "Alkoivergiftung und Degeneration" and seems to evidence a lack of appreciation of this "temperance" beverage.

"KEEP-BEER-PROHIBITION" EXPERIMENTS.

Mrs. Tilton, already quoted, discusses thoroughly "keep-beer-prohibition" in her Survey article in a most illuminating way:

"In 1830 England decided to woo men, if possible, from drinking distilled liquors by allowing beer saloons without license fee. These sprang up like mushrooms, the result being (Delbrück, Alcohol and Hygiene, p. 542) that beer consumption rose 25 per cent in the next five years, while at the same time spirits consumption rose 8 per cent. England found that temperance in drugs was an impossibility, and the whole scheme was finally pronounced a fiasco. Early in the history of the bill, Sydney Smith wrote: 'The new beer bill has begun its operations. Everybody is drunk. Those who are not singing are sprawling. The sovereign people are in a beastly state.'

"A beer experiment was also tried in Iowa. In 1855–1858 Iowa was under prohibition. In 1858 the law was amended to allow beer and certain wines. The great trouble was that the beer saloons would sell whisky under the guise of beer, and there seemed no betterment in it. (Canadian Sessional Papers, No. 21, p. 255.)

"Massachusetts tried a beer experiment between 1870–1873. In 1869 Massachusetts was under prohibition. In 1870 the law was amended to allow ales, porter, beer, and cider. Records of the increase of drinking in places where the beer saloons were opened may be found in the report of the (Canadian) commissioners to inquire into the workings of the prohibitory law, Ottawa, 1875. Drunkenness and crime increased, and everywhere we hear the complaint that the beer saloon would sell whisky under the guise of beer. In New Bedford, 1872, the year in which beer saloons were opened, the number of crimes increased over 68 per cent and cases of drunkenness over 120 per cent."

Georgia's recent experience is too well known to need comment.

Decoration Day Oration by Hon. Ernest Lundeen.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. EDWARD C. LITTLE,

OF KANSAS,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 9, 1917.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the Memorial Day oration by Congressman ERNEST LUNDEEN, of the Twelfth Minnesota Volunteers, at Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D. C., on May 30, 1917.

The oration is as follows:

MEMORIAL DAY ORATION BY HON. ERNEST LUNDEEN, OF THE TWELFTH MINNESOTA VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. Chairman, comrades, and you, my fellow citizens: Comrade Comstock, of the Grand Army, was chosen to deliver your Memorial oration to-day. He was my colleague in the House of Representatives—a true American, always on guard with lessons of patriotism. To-night he sleeps beneath the stars. I am only a soldier of a little war—his supernumerary. A record of courage and loyalty makes fragrant his memory.

In the midst of world war we pause to honor our heroic dead. This day is sacred by the tears of a million mothers—hallowed by the sacrifice of unnumbered lives.

The horizon is red with the fire of conflict. The soldiers of the sea add new terrors to the deep. "The nations' airy navies" are "grappling in the central blue." Man is mad with war. Plowshares and pruning hooks are hurriedly beaten into swords. Nation struggles with nation; peoples against peoples; race against race—in one seething, reeling caldron of death and destruction.

Into this great world war we plunge ourselves. Where others grow weak and weary we are called on to hold high their standards. The Nation is about to be tried and tested as never before.

Our banners have never suffered a final defeat. In the end in every war Providence has protected and prepared us for the day of victory. And now, as we go forth to new and fiery trials, the Nation breathes again the prayer:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

THE VETERANS OF TO-DAY.

The finest example of devotion, of self-sacrifice ever given to the world was made by you of the Grand Army, the veterans of an hundred battle fields. In a lesser but equally loyal way the veterans of the Spanish-American War proved up their patriotism. In war the Nation had its birth; in war it was preserved and grew greater; in war the pure gold shall be separated from the dross.

The men who cemented our noble structure of ideals and of patriotism into the world's finest and best temple of liberty remain immortals in the halls of time. For them we have tears and gratitude—"the fairest flower of the human heart."

Our fathers before us solved every problem confronting them. They feared God and loved liberty. To them we turn for advice and inspiration to-day. Though they sleep in the narrow trenches of death, their spirit lives in the American of to-day and of all future years.

They fought and died that we might be free; that our flag might be unspotted and unstained; that all men underneath its folds should bear no chains nor sigh for freedom while a single star still shines in the heavens.

As long as the firmament domes the sky there is one debt the Nation can never cancel, and that is the debt we owe our defenders.

For you, the living, we have cheers and never-ending praise. You are the living symbols of patriotism, a guide by day and by night in these strenuous times. The fires of liberty will never die on the altars of our country while yet one brave soul among you remains to bless our land.

The little bronze button is not so often seen to-day, but it still stirs our hearts. We take off our hats to you, our comrades of the Grand Army, as you pass. No finer sight in all the world than your regiments marching to martial music—strong, erect, fearless, practical patriots, who took orders only from a free Government.

The American volunteer was the most heroic soldier the world has ever known. Their blazing swords were unconquerable, and they were volunteers. Were the world to-day to follow in your footsteps there would be no kings, no czars, no emperors, but only a sturdy citizenry where every man is a citizen king.

Comrades you are! On earth there is, there can be no stronger word from man to man than "comrade." Once in war, now we are comrades in the great army of citizens. We dedicate ourselves anew to America in this hour. When for us the roll of drums shall come, we stand ready.

A tide of tender memories is ours to-day. Business halts. The American people everywhere pay tribute to the men who saved the Republic. Our "deathless dead" are a lesson in patriotism for present and future generations. Every forward step they trod among thorns and every sigh was "jeweled with a tear." My friends, our sleeping heroes paid in full the price of progress. The last of that great army is now silhouetted against the evening sky. One by one they drop out of sight. Soon all will sleep beneath the stars "on fame's eternal camping ground."

THE SOLDIER'S PLACE IN HISTORY.

The soldier holds the foremost place in history. Constitutions, laws, and forms of government are carried forward on the bayonets of patriots.

Statesmen and Presidents! What are they beside the soldier? The soldier's sword carved liberty out of the mountains of despair. Many mottoes are abroad in the land to-day. None surpass "Our Army, our Navy, and our country forever."

WOMEN IN WAR.

The widow and the orphan is our special charge; they helped in an evil day. The splendid women of America never stand back in a crisis. They steadied the temple of liberty; they march in the front rank of patriotic activity. To-day, again, they are called to the colors, to take up many a burden where their brothers left them; to bind up the wounds; to cheer the lonely; to pray over the fallen. Their touch of tenderness brings a smile to the dying and happiness to the weary. They are our better angels in every land and in every clime.

THOSE WHO SLEEP BENEATH THE STARS.

These hallowed dead who rest about us were men of heart as well as brain. It is the heart that marks a man. They were men of courage and of good cheer. They marched, and as they marched they sang the songs of jubilee. They cheered and stormed the battlements. They knew how to die, and no one can say they feared to go.

They battled through the Revolution, through a second war with the world's greatest empire, through the Mexican War to Chapultepec. They saved the Union.

On the anvil of civil strife was hammered out our national destiny. In what a heat, in what a fire, was welded our fate. Now one evermore before all the world, we stand humble before God, equal to our rightful tasks.

Again and again our ideals were tested in fire. We made war in ninety-eight that liberty might be recognized fully and completely in the Western Hemisphere. We remembered the Maine, as the Grand Army before us remembered America.

And in all these wars all endured, all suffered privation, placing America before all. The blue and the gray are one; the Nation stands supreme; the triumph of national unity is complete.

Standing here upon sacred ground, in the presence of the dead, we feel our limitations keenly. You who died for liberty, you who faced death without fear, you who placed the Nation first, you who with living deeds gave to the future the best motto of to-day—America first—in your presence we renew our faith in democracy, we place our trust in God, and pledge anew our lives and our fortunes to the land we love. The world's greatest epitaph is yours—"He died that the Nation might live." We strew earth's fairest flowers upon your graves and go away, but you are enshrined in our hearts forever. "The end of the road is a door to God."

THE SPIRIT OF AMERICA.

The Vikings of old tell the story of a soldier, a color bearer, who fought with might and main for home and country until sorely wounded, and as he fell he thrust his standard into the ground, saying to his comrades, "I may go down, but my country's flag shall never go down!" That, my friends, is the spirit of America to-day. Whatever our fortunes, whatever our fate may be, our country, even though we go down, shall survive all the terrors of war. It can not be otherwise. On a thousand battle fields the American soldier has gone down, but his comrades, invincible in free America, kept the flag flying in victory, sun kissed and liberty crowned.

A Hundred Thousand Aeroplanes Are Needed From America for the Western Front.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. F. H. LaGUARDIA,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 9, 1917.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article by Frank A. Munsey which appeared in the New York Evening Sun of June 8, 1917, entitled "A hundred thousand aeroplanes are needed from America for the western front." This appeal is so timely and well founded that I feel it should be brought to the knowledge of this Congress and the American people.

The article is as follows:

A HUNDRED THOUSAND AEROPLANES ARE NEEDED FROM AMERICA FOR THE WESTERN FRONT—WITH 100,000 MACHINES ADDED TO THEIR OWN OUTPUT THE ALLIES CAN DESTROY THE ENEMY AIR SQUADRON, AND WITHOUT AEROPLANES GERMANY WOULD BE WITOUT MILITARY EYES—AMERICA HAS THE GENIUS AND THE MONEY TO MEET THIS CALL, AND SHOULD MEET IT.

France needs 100,000 aeroplanes from us far more than she needs our soldiers at the present time, even as France needs our engineers, our artisans, our captains of industry, far more than she needs our soldiers at the present time. Indeed, France and England are not now suffering from a shortage of men on the battle front. In both England and France the pinch for men in the industries, in the munition shops, in aeroplane factories, in shipyards, in engineering fields, is much greater than on the battle front.

This is the situation to-day; a year from to-day it may be entirely different. Then our men may be needed to strengthen the decimated and worn forces of France and England.

But the men in the trenches and the big guns back of them can not alone win this war. After finding herself forced to the defensive by the allies on the western front Germany turned to the submarine, staking her hopes of triumph on it. Meanwhile the aeroplane has come to be a bigger factor in the war than the submarine.

The submarine, our own devilish creation, will be and must be neutralized and eliminated by America. And with 100,000 aeroplanes added within the next 12 months to the British and French squadrons of aircraft we can crush another of our inventions now doing deadly work in the hands of the enemy.

France and England combined have in operation on the western front approximately 4,000 aeroplanes. Back of the lines they have in reserve and ready for the front, and also for training purposes, 3 machines to every 2 on the front. The best advices are that Germany's numerical strength in aeroplanes is just about equal to that of France and England combined, and some reports indicate that Germany has so far improved her machines that they are again superior to those of the allies.

In the early part of the war Germany was immeasurably stronger in aeroplanes than France and England. Gradually the latter so improved this branch of their service that their aircraft were superior to those of the Germans. Lately the Germans have applied themselves with redoubled force to the production of aeroplanes and their higher development in speed and other respects.

The average life of an aeroplane on the front is about two months. This would mean a mortality on the western front alone, in English and French aircraft, of 24,000 machines in a year. Of course not all this mortality is due to destruction by the enemy. It comes from many causes—breakage, wear and tear, imperfections in material, and from the loss due to the natural hazards of aviation.

I have not been able to learn the measure of loss to the aeroplanes back of the lines, those used for training, but it must be large, especially as they are operated by green men. If this back-of-the-lines mortality were to aggregate, say, 6,000 machines a year, the total mortality on the present scale of aerial operations would be 30,000 machines.

While England and France are steadily increasing their output, they are not increasing faster than Germany, so if they are to become strong enough to gain control of the air, to subdue or destroy the enemy fleet, the allies must have a minimum of three machines, and better, five, to every German aeroplane.

So, if America were to add within the next 12 months 100,000 aeroplanes to the production of England and France, they would be equipped to wipe out the German air squadrons, without which Germany couldn't hold her own in the trenches.

And this is something that America can do within the next year for the western front. We have the genius for organization; we have the trained artisans in our automobile factories and machine shops, and if the Government were to go at the job with a will, commandeering all these resources, human and otherwise, necessary to the production of 100,000 machines within the next 12 months, they could be built and delivered.

France and England, I repeat, need these machines more than they need our soldiers on the front just now—need these machines as they need our money, our foodstuffs, our munitions, our materials from which to make munitions and other products that they can not now produce for themselves in sufficient quantities. Let us furnish these machines, and furnish the money and the munitions, the foodstuffs, and all that, and in addition drive out the submarine, and we shall have struck hard for the freedom of the world, shall have sent home a blow to Germany that will mean the end of this unspeakably horrible carnage.

FRANK A. MUNSEY.

Prussia Crushed German Liberty.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM GORDON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 9, 1917.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include an article from the Louisville Evening Post of June 7 entitled "Prussia crushed German liberty."

The article is as follows:

PRUSSIA CRUSHED GERMAN LIBERTY—BISMARCK, BUILDER OF THE WAR MACHINE, SCORNED "WHAT IS THE GERMAN FATHERLAND?"

If there still remain among the naturalized citizens of this country men whose patriotism is diluted by memories of the River Rhine or the Danube, and who find apology for their lukewarmness in what they deem are natural sentiments of affections for the Vaterland, let them but turn back again the pages of history and read, in the afterlights of a half century or more, the story of the struggles of the German people for a government of, for, and by the people, and how their own hopes and aspirations were crushed by the militaristic blood-and-iron policy of the Prussian dynasty. Then, perhaps, they will be less inclined to mingle their love for their native land with a fancied obligation of loyalty or duty to the war lords who are now exploiting the German nation in the furtherance of a ruthless absolutism that is as little in harmony with the true spirit of the home-loving German people as would be the gladiatorial contests of ancient Rome. And that history and all that it implied may be read in the life, letters, and speeches of one man—Otto Eduard Leopold von Bismarck, more familiarly known as Bismarck, the Iron Chancellor.

It is not difficult to conceive how the Teuton whose native land, or that of his forebears, was within the confines of the original Prussian Kingdom may be moved to keep alive his hero worship of the name of Bismarck, as the greatest exemplar of Prussian ideals of government, but it is a little hard to understand how the descendants in this country of Germans native to the countries outside of Prussia that now comprise the German Empire can expend any sympathy for the achievements or the fate of the military machine that precipitated the present world war and opened the floodgates of peaceful nations to a deluge of blood. It was Bismarck that built up that military machine and infused it with the spirit of autocracy. And it was Germans themselves who first felt the remorseless force of it. German readers of the pages of their own country's history that record the various stages of Bismarck's career will find much, perhaps, that will command their respect for his ability as a diplomat and the great dynamic intellectual power of the man, but if they look to him for a basis for their sentiments for the Vaterland, they will be reckoning without their host. The Germany of Bismarck was not the Germany of Goethe, of Schiller, or Arndt, or the "plain people" of the Vaterland.

BELIEVED IN "BLOOD AND IRON."

For the non-Prussian German ideals Bismarck had nothing in his heart but contempt. He was of the military nation of Prussia, bred from his cradle to its traditions of arms and conquest—of might as the main reliance of nations—of blood and iron as the most convincing arguments for the people To him the present Kaiser owes the establishment of the partnership between the Prussian State and God—to him he owes that propaganda of hatred of foreign peoples, which evolved the doctrine that "Germany is a nation entirely surrounded by enemies." Bismarck was the greatest of the junkers and rejoiced openly and avowedly in being one. Away back in the republican days of 1848, when the German people were struggling to establish a constitutional government and Bismarck was a member of the first Parliament that assembled at Frankfurt, he sounded the keynote of his future policy and incidentally gave the German people to understand what he thought of the Vaterland sentiment He said:

"The army has no enthusiasm for the tri-color (the emblem of republicanism). In it, as in the rest of our people, will be found no longing for national regeneration. The name of Prussia is all sufficient for it. The accents of the Prussian national anthem, the strains of the Dessau and the Hohenfriedberg March are well known and beloved among them; but I have never yet heard a Prussian soldier sing 'What is the German Fatherland?' The nation whence this army has sprung and of which the army is the truest representative, in the happy and accurate words of the president of the first chamber, Rudolf von Auerswald, does not need to see the Prussian monarchy melt away in the filthy ferment of south German immorality. We are Prussians, and Prussians we desire to remain. I know that in these words I utter the creed of the Prussian Army, the creed of a majority of my fellow countrymen, and I hope to God that we shall continue Prussians when this bit of paper that I hold in my hand is forgotten like the withered leaf of autumn."

And perhaps his hope was a prophecy. With Bismarck the Prussian nation and Prussian ideals were all sufficient, they had nothing in common with foreign nations or foreign ideals. The only German Empire that he would take a hand in molding must be an empire based upon Prussian ideals or not at all. In another of his speeches of that early formative period of imperial history he said:

"BY THE GRACE OF GOD."

"Parallels with foreign countries have always something disagreeable. At the revolution the English people were in a very different condition from that of Prussia to-day; after a century of revolution and civil war, it was in a position to give away a crown and add conditions which William of Orange accepted. On the other hand, we are in possession of a crown whose rights are unlimited, a crown held by the grace of God and not by the grace of the people, and which of its own free will has given away to the people a portion of its rights—an example rare in history."

The repudiation by Bismarck of the sentiments expressed in Arndt's famous patriotic song, "Was ist des Deutschen Vaterland?" meant much in the day that it was uttered. It was the song of the patriots of '48, who were striving for a united Germany governed, like England, by a king and a Parliament of the people, and the burden of the song was that not Suabia or Prussia, not Austria or Bavaria was the Fatherland of Germans, but it was the whole of Germany, wherever the German language was spoken. From this sentiment Bismarck deliberately and unequivocally disassociated himself, and he brought about his ears a storm of intense indignation and protest. He was referred to as the "Prodigal son of the German Fatherland." But he met this charge with his usual imperturbability.

"I am not a prodigal son," he said. "My father's house is Prussia, and I have never left it."

This idea of molding the German nation upon Prussian models and by means of the Prussian Army, was never absent from Bismarck's far-seeing policy, it is the red line that runs clearly through all his statesmanship. Away back in the early sixties, a short time before he made his famous "blood-and-iron" speech, he outlined his policy frankly to Disraeli, then leader of the English opposition, at a dinner given by the Russian ambassador to the Grand Duchess of Saxe-Weimar, so frankly that Disraeli was moved to warn the Saxon envoy, Count Vitzhum, who was present, to "take care of that man; he means what he says." On this occasion Bismarck said:

"I shall soon be compelled to undertake the leadership of the Prussian Government. My first care will be, with or without the help of Parliament, to reorganize the army. The king has rightly set himself this task, but he can not carry it through with his present councilors. When the army has been brought to such a stage as to command respect, then I shall take the first opportunity to declare war with Austria, burst asunder the German confederation, and bring the smaller States into subjection, and give Germany a national union under the leadership of Prussia."

How well he carried out that program history faithfully records. He rolled that Prussian military machine over the little unprepared German States and gave each of them in turn their dose of blood and iron. In due time he turned it against Denmark, on one of his ready-made pretexts of war, and grabbed Schleswig-Holstein. To carry out this phase of his imperialistic policy he made an active dupe of German Austria and a passive one of the then imperial France. When taxed with recognizing a "son of the revolution" by his alliance with Napoleon III, he waived the criticism aside by saying:

"It is true that we can not make an alliance with France without a certain degree of meanness, but very admirable people, even German princes, in the Middle Ages, have used sewers to make their escape rather than be beaten or throttled."

He wanted it always understood—at least obviously—that he did not make wars through malice or alliances through friendship. It was all in the Prussian game.

"I should be glad to fight against Bonaparte till the dogs lick up the blood," he avowed, "but with no more malice than against Croats, Bohemians, and Bamberger fellow countrymen," the clear inference being that if the blood of his countrymen stood in the way of Prussian domination, it would have to be shed, but "without malice." And it was.

EASY TO FIND WAR PRETEXTS.

He had no compunctions against civil war, with Germans arrayed against Germans, if necessary to the game, and one of his "long suits" was the manufacture of pretexts—good ones that would stand the moral tests. He prided himself upon his ability in this department of warcraft. At one time when the King of Prussia became involved in a dispute with the Elector of Hesse, the King sent the latter a peremptory autograph letter, which the elector, in the presence of the messenger, threw upon his table without opening. It was an act of grave discourtesy, bordering upon lese majesty. Bernstorff, at that time the King's minister, asked Bismarck's advice upon the matter, and Bismarck said:

"The fact that the elector has thrown a royal letter on the table is not a clever casus belli. But if you want war, make me your undersecretary and I will engage to provide a German civil war of the best quality in a few weeks."

Two years after his war with Denmark over Schleswig-Holstein he turned his military machine, then in the pink of condition, against his German-speaking ally, Austria, and by the bloody battle of Sadowa, in 1866, he forever settled the question of which of the two Teutonic nations was to be dominant in Germany, and again, by blood and iron, fixed deeper the foundations of the Prussian autocracy, which from that time on held the destinies of the German nations fast in a grip of steel. This war with Austria was Bismarck's own particular job. He undertook it deliberately as the only means of assuring Prussian ascendancy in Germany.

The time had come, he thought, for a "show-down" on the pretensions of Austria, and again he was ready with his pretext—he made the Schleswig-Holstein stand duty again for a pretext this time—it was right ready to his hand and under his astute manipulation it furnished forth in a very excellent casus belli. Again he was assisted by the tacit support of Napoleon the Little—a gentleman very much after his own imperialistic kidney, but much his inferior in diplomatic astuteness. He secured Napoleon's assistance with the assurance that he would help him a little later on "to extend the frontiers of France." This war with Austria was the big event of Bismarck's career—the culmination, in reality, of the policy foreshadowed in his speeches, that of uniting Germany by the power of the Prussian sword rather than by a revolution of the people, expressed in parliamentary speeches and constitutional enactments. He now set about the task of building up the new Germany, but first he had that little matter of repaying his ally, Napoleon, to attend to. He didn't like to rest under such obligations. But, unfortunately, it occurred to the empire builder that he needed those two little Provinces of Alsace and Lorraine in his business. They fitted in exactly in one corner of the new empire.

HOW HE REPAID FRANCE.

He devoted the next four years to organization and preparedness, and along about 1870 his machine was again on edge for new business. But this time he was a little hard put for a pretext. He was really under many obligations to Napoleon. So he kept on sparring diplomatically for an opening, and the fatuity of Napoleon finally furnished it for him. The king job in Spain fell vacant, and Bismarck knew the psychological moment had come. He backed a Hohenzollern for the place, which, of course, Napoleon opposed. One Hohenzollern in front of him was enough; he did not care to put another behind him. Napoleonized France assumed the grim visage of war, aided and abetted by Bismarck's agents at the French court, and notes and ultimatums began to fly back and forth between Berlin and Paris. And the world now knows that war might have been avoided had a certain telegram, dated at Ems, and written personally by the German Emperor, been sent to Napoleon as it was originally written, couched in pacific terms. But Bismarck, the pretext expert, attended to that. He censored the Emperor's telegram, cut out the "soft stuff," and sent it through as a defiance. A few days later Moltke asked his secretary to hand him that famous portfolio that contained the plans for the mobilization of the machine "if necessary for defense," and, of course, everybody is familiar with what happened at Sedan and how Bismarck was finally able to discharge all his little obligations to Napoleon by relieving him of Alsace and Lorraine and a few other things.

A great man was Bismarck, beyond a doubt, but one is prone to wonder whether some of his admirers who still love the Fatherland have forgotten that he would not let his Prussian soldiers sing that song, "Was ist des deutschen Vaterland?"

Collecting Taxes on Liquor is Buying Nickels at 37 Cents Each.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. CHARLES H. RANDALL,

OF CALIFORNIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 7, 1917.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, under the proposed schedules of alcoholic-liquor revenue the United States presents the ridiculous spectacle of buying its own nickels from the liquor traffic at the rate of $4.49 per dozen, or 37 cents each! It is needless to say that I am opposed to the transaction and that every Member of this House, wet or dry, should unite against such financial idiocy. There is nothing morally or financially sound in drawing revenue from any traffic or institution that brings disease, death, debauchery, or any other harm to the people. It is repugnant to every moral and financial sense. But if the liquor traffic actually paid one single little lonesome tinker's tin tirzy of net revenue that would be both holy and wise compared with the criminal folly which we commit in the pending revenue bill, for we submit to a national loss of $7.56 in good, clean, wholesome money for every polluted, blood-blistered, crime-cankered, tear-stained dollar that the traffic covers into the Treasury. Let us face the facts and forget custom, habit, prejudice, and politics and do business for the people of these United States on a business basis.

On page 189 of the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1916 the total amount received from internal revenue on spirits, including the per gallon tax on fruit, grain, and spirits, on distilled wines, the special taxes on retail and wholesale dealers, rectifiers, and manufacturers, and on worms, stills, and on every other item of internal revenue connected with the wine and spirit trade, is shown to aggregate a total of $158,682,439. On page 46 of the same report the total tax on fermented liquors, including the barrel tax, brewers' special tax, and special taxes upon retail and wholesale dealers, was $88,771,194. The special report (H. Rept. No. 45, 65th Cong., 1st sess.) proposes an additional tax totaling the sum of $151,000,000 on spirits, fermented liquors, and wines. The future annual revenue during the life of present and proposed revenue measures, the consumption assumed to remain unchanged, will be, therefore, as follows:

Receipts from spirits	$158,682,439
Receipts from fermented liquors	88,771,194
Estimated additional	151,000,000
Total	398,453,633

The liquor press and apologists have been mouthing the round sum of $500,000,000. I am quite willing to take that as the figure, though with the decreased consumption which will result from patriotic abstinence and with the added number of dry States it is not probable that actual experience will exceed a total of $300,000,000. But the liquor people have grief enough these days, and I am willing to join in tickling their vanity, and we will call their total annual contributions to the National Government an even half billion.

The tangible offsets against this sum make it look like two lead nickels.

1. With the world starving, and with 20,000,000 producers called to the trenches in Europe, the liquor traffic withdraws 107,000,000 bushels from the bread supply. This, by the authority of the best economists, would make 11,000,000 pounds of bread a day, or enough to supply the bread ration to more than 22,000,000 men. It is equal in nutritive value to the entire food demands of 7,000,000 people. Let me here introduce calculations, made within a month, by men in no way personally interested in the liquor question except as every patriot is interested in the measures that will contribute to the earliest possible victory for our arms and peace for our country:

According to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year ended June 30, 1916 (p. 138), there were used during that year for the production of distilled spirits in the United States the following materials:

Corn	bushels	32,069,542
Rye	do	3,116,612
Malt	do	4,480,588
Wheat	do	3,373
Barley	do	148
Oats	do	9,807
Other materials	do	68,822
Molasses	gallons	152,142,232

Omitting wheat, oats, barley, and "other materials," and reducing corn, rye, malt, and molasses to pounds, we get a total of 3,603,911,916 pounds of grain and molasses.

The census for 1900, volume 9, page 602, gives the following figures as to materials used in the manufacture of fermented liquors:

Corn	pounds	483,998,984
Malt	bushels	36,385,365
Barley	do	11,232,599
This amounts to a total of	pounds	2,260,266,146

These seem to be the latest positive figures available. The materials used in 1916 may be estimated as follows, though there is a possible margin of error: The production of fermented liquors for the year 1900 was 38,664,584 barrels. By 1916 it had risen to 58,633,624 barrels. (See Report of Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1916, p. 145.) The production increased 51.6 per cent. Assuming an increase of at least 50 per cent in the materials used, we get 3,390,399,219 pounds.

Combining the figures for the manufacture of fermented liquors and distilled spirits, we get a total of 6,994,311,135 pounds of grain and molasses.

This omits all minor ingredients and says nothing about the fruit and glucose used in the production of various other alcoholic beverages.

In a time of food shortage, when conservation of foodstuffs is an important public question, the 7,000,000,000 pounds of food materials which are used in these industries form an item which is worth considering.

We have reviewed the statistics submitted in regard to the 7,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs used in the manufacture of malt and distilled liquors in the United States. It is probable that as much as one-sixth of the total may be necessary for the production of denatured alcohol. At a low estimate of its calorific or fuel value the remaining five-sixths would supply the energy requirement of 7,000,000 men for a year.

The liquor interests have spread double-page advertisements blazoning the fact that the percentage of grain consumed is but 1 per cent of the total production—an amount so small as to be negligible. This is in marked contrast with their former boasts as great consumers of grain. In the Year Book of the United States Brewers' Association for the year 1914, page 156, the following claim is set forth:

In the course of the fiscal year 1913 grain and other farm products to the value of $113,513,971 were used in the manufacture of liquors. The full significance of this amount can best be appreciated if we compare it with the reports of the last United States census on the total value of the crops in certain typical States, which show that it exceeded the total combined crop values in the census year of Vermont, Maryland, and West Virginia; of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, and Florida; of Louisiana (with its great cotton and sugar interests), New Hampshire, and Utah, or of Maine, Connecticut, Delaware, Nevada, New Mexico, and Wyoming.

I venture to suggest that there is not an economist who would despise as negligible in the present situation the value of the entire agricultural output of any of these several groups of States. The patriotic "plant-the-plot" slogan robs childhood of play and age of rest, though their combined efforts will not approach the food value that the liquor traffic now admits that it absorbs in making a narcotic, habit-forming drug that gives neither strength nor health to any, but brings debauchery, death, and the pinch of hunger to hundreds of thousands of its users and their dependents. If some one would open up new acreage equal to that of any of these groups, he would be hailed as a national benefactor. But out of their own mouths shall they be judged.

The National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association makes even larger claims on page 21 of their Antiprohibition Manual for 1916, just last year:

According to the United States Statistical Abstract there are 300,000 farmers raising corn, barley, rye, hops, and fruits that go into the production of liquor. They receive in prices from the liquor interests of the country $200,000,000 annually. Destroy this market and you reduce their purchasing power by $200,000,000 a year. This means a corresponding reduction in the volume of all business—the output of the mines, mills, and factories. When you hear a prohibition speech you will imagine that only corn and only a small per cent of that is used in the production of liquor. They do not tell you the whole truth.

They never intimated that barley, rye, hops, and fruits go into the production of liquor. We are not afraid of the whole truth. The brewers and distillers of Peoria alone consume the entire surplus crop of Iowa and Illinois.

The Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association say they are not afraid of the whole truth. Well, are they brave enough to publish the fact that the net grain they destroy is equal to 5½ per cent of the total food units consumed by the people of the United States? Dare they put in the double-page advertisements that they use more than 10 per cent of the consumption of breadstuffs used in this country, or the equal of 13 per cent of the wheat we consume, or 25 per cent of the wheat we exported during 1916 when the foreign demand was unprecedented? They claim to be brave—I dare them—I double dare them to print these facts! And that is not the whole truth! The liquid narcotic poison which they make out of the grain destroys the physical tissues, mental acumen, industrial capacity, and moral integrity of hundreds of thousands of their customers to the untold material and moral loss to the Nation. That is truth. They know it is truth. I challenge and dare them to print it. They have the money to buy large space in the press, but they dare not tell the whole truth therein, in spite of their boasted bravery.

It is set forth that a part of the foodstuffs used by the traffic is recovered in the protein in the beer and the feeding of brewers' and distillers' grain and slops to live stock. The food value of the protein in the beer is of most doubtful character. To secure that protein the drinker must also ingest alcohol. And alcohol is a poison. It paralyzes and impairs physical functions to a degree that more than offsets any food value that would otherwise be derived from the protein. But making full allowance for it, and for the stock feed from slops and dried grain, the actual loss remains at nearly 8,000,000 pounds of bread daily. Calculating conservatively, call it only 7,500,000 pounds, the annual loss represented, counting the bread at 5 cents per pound, which is less than present retail cost, is $146,000,000. Please set that down as item 1 against the $500,000,000 revenue.

2. We need men as well as money. Possibly we need men the more. It might be possible to win a war without money, but not without men. The alcoholic liquor traffic destroys some men. There have been many wild guesses and some very careful estimates of the number. But here is an accurate calculation. It is neither a guess nor an estimate, but a thoroughly scientific conclusion. Mr. Arthur Hunter, the actuary of the New York Life Insurance Co. and the president of the American Actuarial Association, states that it has been mathematically demonstrated that the death rate among moderate drinkers is 80 per cent higher than among total abstainers of the same class.

In other words, where 100 total abstainers would die within the year, 180 moderate drinkers would die in the same time. Let me emphasize the totally impartial and highly scientific character of these findings. The actuaries who under Mr. Hunter made the exhaustive studies of the causes of death were not seeking to establish a theory. They were not "prohibitionists" nor "temperance men," but scientists. They sought the causes that hasten death. The purpose was not ethical or civic—it was wholly economic. They gathered accurate data for the more scientific selection of life risks. They were men trained and skilled in collecting of facts and in their scientific interpretation.

The total deaths in the United States during 1916 were 1,350,000. If one adult in five drinks moderately—taking no account of the hard drinkers—then of this number one-fifth, or 270,000, were drinkers or the children of drinkers. The excessive death rate among children of drinkers is higher than among their drinking parents. Apply the actuarial percentage to 270,000 and it reveals that the number of deaths due to moderate drinking in the United States is 120,000 annually.

Does $500,000,000 in revenue constitute a fair money equivalent for the commercial value of 120,000 lives? The commercial value of a human life is a moot question. Not a few States have set the value to be paid as damages in the cases of accidental death under circumstances that permit of the assessment of damages. None have made the figure less than $5,000. Some have set $5,000 as a minimum, while the maximum reaches $25,000 or is without limit. A few days ago there appeared a news item stating that a girl who lost half her arm in a railroad accident was awarded $15,000 damages by the jury. A man whose net earning capacity is $1,000 per year is worth $16,666, less depreciation, on a 6 per cent basis. On an assumed productive life of 30 years depreciation would be $555 annually, leaving the net commercial value of a man earning $1,000 net at $16,111. To be safely conservative let us count the net earning power of the average man at $500 per year. Then his commercial value on a 6 per cent basis is $8,333, and counting his productive life at 30 years. Depreciation brings his value to $8,056. It follows that the 120,000 lost annually through moderate drinking represents an extinction of $966,720,000 in commercial values annually.

Kindly mark that down as item 2 against the $500,000,000 revenue.

3. The liquor traffic absorbs the energy of labor. On page 21 of the Antiprohibition Manual for 1916, already quoted, the claim is made that the traffic consumes the products of 300,000 farmers. If it consumes their products it also consumes their time and brawn. At present prices the time of these men certainly is worth not less than $500 per year. The traffic also employs laborers, salesmen, managers, brewers, malsters, and such like. Prof. Irving Fisher, the political economist of Yale University, places the number of such employees at 289,000. That means that a total of 589,000 men were withdrawn from the useful arts and industries and their time, skill, and ability were absorbed to manufacture a harmful poison while the world faces starvation. That they labor with ardor and diligence is no factor. The thief does that. That they mean well and are honest does not bear upon the case. The dentist who pulled the wrong tooth was honest and well-meaning. It is self-evident that a man might better do nothing than to do harm. The financial, social, and moral result of the beverage liquor traffic is financial, social, and moral harm. Let everything be admitted that its friends and supporters claim for the good that comes from social, occasional, and temperate drinking, it still remains the undisputed and undisputable fact that on the whole the traffic works havoc to everything that is precious or worth while in life. Therefore, those engaged in it are worse than idle—they are harmfully industrious. The idle axman who receives wages is a parasite, living off the industry in which he has no share. But economically he is vastly better than an honest and industrious axman who fells productive orchards, makes kindling wood of mahogany furniture, or otherwise destroys the comforts or necessities of life. Those who make liquor for beverage purposes or who produce the materials from which it is made are destructively engaged. The less they do the better for society, and the more they accomplish by their destructive labors the greater is society's financial, social, and moral ruin.

Counting the 300,000 farmers at $500 each per year, and the 289,000 salary and wage earners at $1,000 each per year, the aggregate is $539,000,000. Please mark down $539,000,000 as the third count against the $500,000,000 revenue.

4. I repeat—we need men. The State of Massachusetts, in an official investigation, discovered the fact that the loss of time on account of arrests for drunkenness alone, counting no other crime or misdemeanor growing out of drink, aggregated 600,000 days per year in that State. Remember, this made no count of the men who lay off on account of drunkenness or who lost their position for that reason. It is only the time spent in jail, and an official estimate of the time required after getting out to connect with a new job. The population of Massachusetts is to that of the United States as 1 to 27. If the same ratio holds throughout the Union, the total loss would aggregate 32,400,000 days per year. With no insinuation against Massachusetts, but in the interest of conservatism, let it be supposed that the rest of the Nation experiences but half as much proportionate loss, the reckoning is the equal of 27,000 men for the entire year, representing, at $500, a money loss of $13,500,000. There is beyond question a much greater loss of valuable man power resulting from liquor-made tramps and idlers and from men demoted from positions of trust to menial and poorly paid jobs. In the absence of any reliable data no count will be made of these lost millions. And liquor also plays an important part in major crimes. A recent inquiry which covered every judge and every sheriff in several States brought an average estimate from these men, who are not as a rule prohibitionists in the usual use of the term, that over 65 per cent of all crime would not be committed but for liquor. A hundred such surveys have been made always with similar results. But I am not trying to make a case. I am willing to give the liquor business the benefit of every doubt. No observer would doubt that more than one-third of crime is a result of the use of drink and the environs of the traffic.

The Supreme Court of the United States, the most distinguished judicial body in the world, bound by the caution of that dignified office and the reserve of their judicial minds, recognize that more than half of the crime of the Nation finds its origin in drink.

The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these liquor saloons than to any other source. (137 U. S., 86.)

We can not shut out of view the facts within the knowledge of all that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor the fact established by statistics accessible to everyone that the idleness, disorder pauperism, and crime existing in the country are in some degree at least traceable to this evil. (127 U. S., 205.)

I presume to say that there is not a supreme court in any State of the Union that has not given expression to similar sentiments, but I shall quote but one from the North and one from the South. The Supreme Court of South Carolina (26 L. R. A., 353) said:

We do not suppose there is a more potent factor in keeping up the necessity for asylums, penitentiaries, and jails, and in producing pauperism and immorality throughout the entire country than liquor, and yet it is argued that it is to be placed on the same footing with breadstuffs and other ordinary commodities of life.

The Supreme Court of Indiana (6 Ind., 542) said:

That its legitimate consequences are disease and destruction to the mind and body will also be granted. That it produces from four-fifths to nine-tenths of all the crime committed is the united testimony of those judges, prison keepers, sheriffs, and others engaged in the administration of the criminal law who have investigated the subject. That taxation to meet the expenses of pauperism and crime falls upon and is borne by the people follows as a matter of course. That its tendency is to destroy the peace, safety, and well-being of the people, to secure which the first article in the Bill of Rights declares all free governments are instituted, is too obvious to be denied.

I might continue without end, but the traffic itself admits its guilt. Let their witnesses be sworn. Out of their own mouths will we judge them.

The Wholesalers and Retailers' Review, of San Francisco, the leading liquor paper of the Pacific coast, in its issue of September, 1907, said:

Any man who knows the saloon well can honestly say that most of them have forfeited their right to live. The model saloon exists chiefly in the minds of the editors of liquor journals, in the imaginations of a certain type of ministers, and in the mythical stories sometimes rehearsed at saloon men's camp fires. Unfortunately the average tippling house is a place of ill fame, a place of debauchery. With comparatively few exceptions, our saloons are houses of drunken men, profanity, and obscenity of the vilest possible type.

The Wine and Spirit Gazette, of New York, a leading eastern liquor paper, said editorially in its issue of August 25, 1902:

The saloon as conducted is a nuisance and a loafing place for the idle and vicious. It is generally on a prominent street and is usually run by a sport who cares only for the almighty dollar. From this resort the drunken man starts reeling home. At this resort the local fights are indulged in. It is a stench in the nostrils of society.

Charity for its offspring is the warrant for this "soft impeachment" of and sweet-voiced apology for the saloon.

But even the saloon, its guilty soul calling for the solace of confession, in a burst of frankness admits some few of its minor offenses. The following first appeared in the advertisement of a saloon keeper in Tombstone, Ariz. The State knew it was but half the truth, and voted dry. Then a saloon keeper in Sioux Falls, S. Dak., printed it, and South Dakota voted dry:

I am grateful for past favors, and, having supplied my store with a line of choice liquors, allow me to inform you that I shall continue to make drunkards, paupers, and beggars for the sober, industrious, respectable part of the community to support. My liquors will excite riot, robbery. and bloodshed. They will diminish your comforts, increase your expenses, and shorten life. I shall confidently recommend them as sure to multiply fatal accidents and incurable diseases. They will deprive some of life, others of reason, many of character, and all of peace. They will make fathers fiends, wives widows, children orphans, and all poor. I shall train your sons in infidelity, dissipation, ignorance, lewdness, and every other vice. I will corrupt the ministers of religion, obstruct the gospel, defile the church, and cause as much temporal and eternal death as I can. I shall therefore carry on my business with energy and do my best to diminish the wealth of the nation and endanger the safety of the State. As my business flourishes in proportion to your sensuality and ignorance, I will do my best to pervert moral purity and intellectual wholesomeness. Should you doubt my ability, I refer you to the pawnshops, the poorhouse, the police court, the hospital, the penitentiary, and the gallows, where you will find many of the best customers have gone.

Census Bulletin 121, the latest statement available, on page 8, shows that the population of the penitentiaries, jails, and workhouses on January 1, 1910, was 111,498. There were committed during the year 479,787 and there were discharged 454,389, showing 25,398 increase for the year. If one-half this annual increase has continued during the succeeding six years, it would bring the present total prison population to 187,692. If one-third of this number is charged to the liquor traffic at an annual wage of $500 each, the total is $31,282,000. And there remains to be charged a third of the cost of our criminal courts, the expense of our constabulary, including sheriffs, policemen, detectives, and secret-service officers. Criminals are like rats—it costs more to catch them than they are worth after they are caught. I shall not burden you with the process of finding this figure, but put it so low that the most conservative will raise no question. I estimate from official figures the total cost of these items at $108,000,000 per year, $36,000,000, or one-third, of which would be charged to the traffic. And I call attention to the fact that I have made no calculation for the cost and maintenance of penal and reformatory buildings, nor equipment, nor for the salaries of wardens and other attendants. Let that go in for good measure.

Every observer, including the Supreme Court of the United States and the liquor interests both hereinbefore quoted, admit that the liquor traffic is responsible for a large proportion of these items. The last available figures are found in Census Bulletins 119 and 120.

The total population confined in insane and pauper institutions is 290,974. The largest cost of poverty is not in the almshouses. But again, to be doubly conservative, charge but one-third of this number against the traffic, making no count for other paupers or insane than are confined in institutions, and making no charge for the cost, equipment, or care of the buildings, and only $500 per year for the loss of the productive labor and the public expense of that third, which makes a total of $48,495,500 annually. The items under this head: For drunkenness, $13,500,000; for crimes, $31,282,000; expenses of criminal courts, etc., $36,000,000; for insanity and pauperism, $48,495,500; making a total of $129,377,500. That is item 4 against the traffic's $500,000,000 revenue.

5. Prof. Aschaffenburg, the German scientist, in exhaustive tests found that a single glass of beer or its equivalent, taken with each meal, reduced the efficiency of typesetters by from 9 to 15 per cent. Tests in the Swedish Army, under Staff Surg. Mernetsch, developed the fact that the ingestion of 1½ ounces of brandy, or the equivalent of less than one glass of beer, with each meal, reduced the accuracy of marksmen by 30 per cent. The minister of finance of Russia found that prohibition increased the output in the mines by over 30 per cent. Manufacturers in this country have estimated, from actual experience, from 20 to 30 per cent increase of productivity under prohibition. Certainly, to count the lost production occasioned by drink at 10 per cent of the total annual national wealth produced would be conservative. I think no Member of this House would question it.

Irving Fisher, professor of political economy in Yale, places our total national production at $40,000,000,000 per year, and adds:

Prohibition, by keeping sober 100,000 or 200,000 men now incapacitated each day by drunkenness and by increasing the productive power of those who, while not drunk, are "slowed down" by alcohol, would speed up production probably at least 10 per cent (a manufacturer estimates it, from actual records, as over 20 per cent in his factory), which 10 per cent, if applied to the more than half of our national dividends now produced in "wet" territory, would add over $2,000,000,000 to our national dividends. It follows that the more than $2,000,000,000 now spent on alcohol and the more than $2,000,000,000 of national income which prohibition would bring could all be paid in taxes without making the people one cent poorer.

Dr. Fisher's figures show a loss of over $4,000,000,000 on the items of saving and increased production. I have no doubt that his figures are conservative. He is a conservative scientist of a conservative school. But through all of these calculations I have discounted even the most conclusive and unquestioned figures that I might raise no question of doubt in the minds of those in this House who are most devoted to the interests of the liquor traffic. And I respect their opinions. They look upon the traffic as a legitimate but much-abused business. I have sought to meet them on grounds that could not be dedebatable. Hence I will take but half of the amount named by Prof. Fisher and call this loss only $2,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I have not covered all even of the important financial items, but will close. Mark down as item 5 the sum of $2,000,000,000 against the $500,000,000 paid in revenue by the traffic.

The account then stands:

PROFIT.
Revenue paid by the traffic	$500,000,000
LOSS.
Item 1. Loss on foodstuffs	146,000,000
Item 2. Loss of commercial value of 120,000 lives	966,720,000
Item 3. Lost time of 589,000 farmers and wage earners	539,000,000
Item 4. Loss through crime and insanity and poverty	129,377,500
Item 5. Loss in production of wealth	2,000,000,000
	3,781,097,500

Mr. Speaker, this traffic stands ready with willing hands to pay a half a billion, more or less, into the Treasury. It is the ransom of a life which it confesses and all the wide world knows is forfeit. And, sir, this Congress may receive their jingling gold with equal satisfaction. But as surely as we make the unholy bargain the traffic's wolfish teeth will gnaw from the gaunt loins of this Nation, waxed lean through war, seven pounds for every one that it restores. I do not here speak of the unnatural crime of bartering the hearts and souls of our sons and daughters for the cankered gold. That is a story to parch the tongue of Lucifer himself. I speak in the cold metallic syllables of economic sense. The witless heathen who on the Ganges covered his black limbs with leeches and ate them when they had fattened on his blood was wise. He took back into his body all they had taken from it. We fasten on the lank limbs of our body politic the lecherous traffic, and give fawning thanks when it returns one drop of poisoned blood from seven it had sucked from our wholesome civic veins.

Gentlemen, we must not, surely we will not, continue this mad and tragic folly. In times of peace we are rich. Now there is war. Those who know conditions best say all must want and some must starve before we see its end. Till the war is done let this traffic that steals $3,745,097,500 a year stand aside, and let this Congress "without fear and with manly hearts" face the facts and do brave business for the people.

The Men in Gray—The Men From Dixie.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM J. SEARS,

OF FLORIDA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 9, 1917.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include two editorials, one appearing in the Evening Star, of Washington, of June 7, 1917, entitled "The men in gray," and one appearing in the Washington Times of the same date on "The men from Dixie."

The editorials are as follows:

THE MEN IN GRAY.

To-day's parade of the Confederate veterans was an inspiring sight to all the younger citizens. These men fought bravely and unflaggingly in the cause they espoused for a political principle that they believed to be right. They sacrificed everything for that cause, and when the war ended with defeat for them they accepted the verdict manfully and with a determination to work for the welfare of the whole country through a reunion of the States.

These men who march to-day, a pitiful remnant of the army in gray, were active, vigorous, and tireless over 50 years ago. There was no difference in quality between the troops of the North and those of the South. They were the same race, the same stock. They fought often hand to hand with mutual respect for one another, and yet with a determination to conquer. Now they are friends, the men of the two armies, and they often march shoulder to shoulder in fraternity, rejoicing in their reunion, but each cherishing the memories of the respective armies of which they were members.

Year by year the ranks of the veterans grow thinner as age claims its victims. The survivors of the fighting forces of the sixties are now but a few thousand and next year the number will be smaller, and so from year to year the line of those who march will grow shorter until in a painfully short time the last of the Confederate soldiers will remain alone and he, too, will answer the final muster.

This parade to-day comes appropriately immediately following the registration of the younger Americans for service in the greatest of all wars, a war that will tax the American resources as it has already taxed the resources of the most powerful nations of Europe, a war that will call for sacrifices as great, perhaps, as those made by the men who march to-day, or even greater. This procession of veterans in gray, escorted by men in blue and by troops representing the reunited country, in the Capital of the Nation whose existence was at stake when their war was raging, is a patriotic inspiration.

THE MEN FROM DIXIE.

To the strains of "Dixie," to "Maryland, My Maryland," to all the old, old tunes, the veterans of the Confederacy marched to-day in grand review.

Their souls swelled with pride of conquest, the conquest of love. Their steps quickened to heartbeats of gratitude, gratitude that in losing they had won, for the country was one country, and that one theirs.

There was not one of the gray-coated men but would have in the sixties willingly given his life if his cause might have been triumphant; if the forces of Dixie might have marched victorious up the Avenue. But now, 50 years afterwards, loving his cause as much as ever, no less devoted to the stars and bars than in the days gone by, he rejoiced that after all the country was not broken, that he was a citizen of united States and a part of a united people.

The Capital has never welcomed a parade so tumultuously. One continuous cheer rang from the Peace Monument to the White House. The rebel yell resounded from the throats of spectators thrilled by the wonderful showing of the veterans. Great roars of applause greeted every well-known officer, many of whom rode bareheaded, so continuous was the demonstration.

Never before, never again, in all probability, will the veterans of the Confederacy march in the Capital, but certainly every one of them will remember the wonderful reception that was given them, and everyone who saw them as they marched past will cherish a new sensation of supreme emotion and reestablished or renewed affections.

Old men in gray, you made a noble show. Hail, and farewell.

Why Do We Fight Germany?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. C. C. DILL,

OF WASHINGTON,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. DILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks I desire to insert in the RECORD the address of Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, before the Home Club, Washington, D. C., on June 4, 1917. It constitutes the best answer to the question, Why do we fight Germany? which I have read.

The address is as follows:

"To-morrow is registration day. It is the duty of all, their legal as well as their patriotic duty, to register if within the class called. There are some who have not clearly seen the reason for that call. To these I would speak a word.

"Why are we fighting Germany? The brief answer is that ours is a war of self-defense. We did not wish to fight Germany. She made the attack upon us; not on our shores, but on our ships, our lives, our rights, our future. For two years and more we held to a neutrality that made us apologists for things which outraged man's common sense of fair play and humanity. At each new offense—the invasion of Belgium, the killing of civilian Belgians, the attacks on Scarborough and other defenseless towns, the laying of mines in neutral waters, the fencing off of the seas—and on and on through the months we said: 'This is war—archaic, uncivilized war, but war! All rules have been thrown away; all nobility; man has come down to the primitive brute. And while we can not justify we will not intervene. It is not our war.'

"Then why are we in? Because we could not keep out. The invasion of Belgium, which opened the war, led to the invasion of the United States by slow, steady, logical steps. Our sympathies evolved into a conviction of self-interest. Our love of fair play ripened into alarm at our own peril.

"We talked in the language and in the spirit of good faith and sincerity, as honest men should talk, until we discovered that our talk was construed as cowardice. And Mexico was called upon to cow us. We talked as men would talk who cared alone for peace and the advancement of their own material interests, until we discovered that we were thought to be a nation of mere money makers, devoid of all character; until, indeed, we were told that we could not walk the highways of the world without permission of a Prussian soldier; that our ships might not sail without wearing a striped uniform of humiliation upon a narrow path of national subservience. We talked as men talk who hope for honest agreement, not for war, until we found that the treaty torn to pieces at Liege was but the symbol of a policy that made agreements worthless against a purpose that knew no word but success.

"And so we came into this war for ourselves. It is a war to save America; to preserve self-respect; to justify our right to live as we have lived, not as some one else wishes us to live. In the name of Freedom we challenge with ships and men, money and an undaunted spirit, that word 'Verboten,' which Germany has written upon the sea and upon the land. For America is not the name of so much territory. It is a living spirit, born in travail, grown in the rough school of bitter experiences, a living spirit which has purpose and pride and conscience; knows why it wishes to live and to what end; knows how it comes to be respected of the world, and hopes to retain that respect by living on with the light of Lincoln's love of man as its old and new testament. It is more precious that this America should live than that we Americans should live. And this America, as we now see, has been challenged from the first of this war by the strong arm of a power that has no sympathy with our purpose and will not hesitate to destroy us if the law that we respect, the rights that are to us sacred, or the spirit that we have stand across her set will to make this world bow before her policies, backed by her organized and scientific military system. A world of Christ—a neglected but not a rejected Christ—has come again face to face with the world of Mahomet, who willed to win by force.

"With this background of history and in this sense, then, we fight Germany:

"Because of Belgium—invaded, outraged, enslaved, impoverished Belgium. We can not forget Liege, Louvain, and Cardinal

Mercier. Translated into terms of American history these names stand for Bunker Hill, Lexington, and Patrick Henry.

"Because of France—invaded, desecrated France, a million of whose heroic sons have died to save the land of Lafayette. Glorious, golden France, the preserver of the arts, the land of noble spirit. The first land to follow our lead into republican liberty.

"Because of England—from whom came the laws, traditions, standards of life, and inherent love of liberty which we call Anglo-Saxon civilization. We defeated her once upon the land and once upon the sea. But Australia, New Zealand, Africa, and Canada are free because of what we did. And they are with us in the fight for the freedom of the seas.

"Because of Russia—new Russia. She must not be overwhelmed now! Not now, surely, when she is just born into freedom. Her peasants must have their chance; they must go to school to Washington, to Jefferson, and to Lincoln, until they know their way about in this new, strange world—of government by the popular will.

"Because of other peoples, with their rising hope that the world may be freed from government by the soldier.

"We are fighting Germany because she sought to terrorize us and then to fool us. We could not believe that Germany would do what she said she would do upon the seas.

"We still hear the piteous cries of children coming up out of the sea where the Lusitania went down. And Germany has never asked forgiveness of the world.

"We saw the Sussex sunk, crowded with the sons and daughters of neutral nations.

"We saw ship after ship sent to the bottom—ships of mercy bound out of America for the Belgian starving—ships carrying the Red Cross and laden with the wounded of all nations—ships carrying food and clothing to friendly, harmless, terrorized peoples; ships flying the Stars and Stripes sent to the bottom hundreds of miles from shore, manned by American seamen, murdered against all law, without warning.

"We believed Germany's promise that she would respect the neutral flag and the rights of neutrals, and we held our anger and outrage in check. But now we see that she was holding us off with fair promises until she could build her huge fleet of submarines. For when spring came she blew her promise into the air, just as at the beginning she had torn up that 'scrap of paper.' Then we saw clearly that there was but one law for Germany—her will to rule.

"We are fighting Germany because she violated our confidence. Paid German spies filled our cities. Officials of her Government, received as the guests of this Nation, lived with us to bribe and terrorize, defying our law and the law of nations.

"We are fighting Germany because while we were yet her friends—the only great power that still held hands off—she sent the Zimmermann note, calling to her aid Mexico, our southern neighbor, and hoping to lure Japan, our western neighbor, into war against this Nation of peace.

"The Nation that would do these things proclaims the gospel that government has no conscience. And this doctrine can not live, or else democracy must die! For the nations of the world must keep faith. There can be no living for us in a world where the State has no conscience, no reverence for the things of the spirit, no respect for international law, no mercy for those who fall before its force. What an unordered world! Anarchy! The anarchy of rival wolf packs!

"We are fighting Germany because in this war feudalism is making its last stand against on-coming democracy. We see it now. This is a war against an old spirit, an ancient, outworn spirit. It is a war against feudalism—the right of the castle on the hill to rule the village below. It is a war for democracy—the right of all to be their own masters. Let Germany be feudal if she will. But she must not spread her system over a world that has outgrown it. Feudalism plus science, thirteenth century plus twentieth—this is the religion of the mistaken Germany that has linked itself with the Turk—that has, too, adopted the method of Mahomet. 'The State has no conscience.' 'The State can do no wrong.' With the spirit of the fanatic she believes this gospel and that it is her duty to spread it by force. With poison gas that makes living a hell, with submarines that sneak through the seas to slyly murder noncombatants, with dirigibles that bombard men and women while they sleep, with a perfected system of terrorization that the modern world first heard of when German troops entered China—German feudalism is making war upon mankind. Let this old spirit of evil have its way and no man will live in America without paying toll to it, in manhood and in money. This spirit might demand Canada from a defeated, navyless England, and then our dream of peace on the north would be at an end. We would live, as France has lived for 40 years—in haunting terror.

"America speaks for the world in fighting Germany. Mark on a map those countries which are Germany's allies, and you will mark but four, running from the Baltic through Austria and Bulgaria to Turkey. All the other nations, the whole globe around, are in arms against her or are unable to move. There is deep meaning in this. We fight with the world for an honest world, in which nations keep their word, for a world in which nations do not live by swagger or by threat, for a world in which men think of the ways in which they can conquer the common cruelties of nature instead of inventing more horrible cruelties to inflict upon the spirit and body of man, for a world in which the ambition of the philosophy of a few shall not make miserable all mankind, for a world in which the man is held more precious than the machine, the system, or the State."

Resolutions Adopted By the Fraternal Order of Eagles Recommending the Purchase of $1,000,000 Worth of Liberty Bonds.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. GUY E. CAMPBELL,

OF PENNSYLVANIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 7, 1917.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a resolution adopted by the Fraternal Order of Eagles recommending the purchase of $1,000,000 worth of liberty bonds.

The resolution is as follows:

[Official circular No. 106.]

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., June 1, 1917.

To all officers and members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

BROTHERS: The executive officers and board of grand trustees met at Kansas City, Mo., May 29 and 30. Love of country and protection of home are fundamental workings of our fraternity. Our country is today passing through the greatest crisis of its history. It is engaged in a war "to keep safe the world for democracy." The underlying reasons which caused our country to engage in the present great struggle find support in every precept of our order. No man who has learned even the rudiments of the lessons taught by our fraternity can do aught else than give his unqualified support to our country at this time.

We believe that every Eagle wants to do his part as an Eagle, a man, and a citizen. The only question is how best can his part be done. We can not all go into the trenches and fight for our country and humanity. We can, by working unitedly together, relieve the burdens of those who are doing the actual fighting and assist our Government in the conservation and production of things which are necessary to the prosecution of the war to a successful issue. With this end in view, your grand aerie officers adopted the following resolution:

"The Fraternal Order of Eagles is preeminently patriotic in its purposes and teachings. Desireus of stimulating its membership to the highest ideals of citizenship and loyalty to country, its executive officers and grand trustees, in meeting assembled, promise and pledge its membership of nearly one-half million men to the accomplishment of the following objects:

"1. To subscribe for $1,000,000 of the liberty loan.

"2. To urge our members everywhere immediately to register for service and in every way to promote the efforts and support the officers having charge of enrollment for military service.

"3. To unite our membership and their families in serving our Government in its prosecution of a successful war and to lighten the burdens of our sons and brothers engaged therein, in order that the blessings of liberty, justice, equality, and human rights may be enjoyed by all men everywhere, to the end that true democracy and fraternalism may be enthroned in the hearts of men.

"4. To assume the dues of our members while in service and guarantee their benefits during the war.

"5. To create a patriotic fund, to be subscribed by our entire membership, from which shall be paid the premium upon a life-insurance policy of $1,000, payable as an additional death benefit to members losing their lives in any branch of the military service, and generally to recommend to the grand aerie the enactment of such laws as will generously and patriotically provide for the care of the families of our members who are serving their country."

As your grand worthy president, I indorse the foregoing resolution and call upon each member of our order to do his part toward the full accomplishment of the pledges contained therein. Subscribe, individually and as an aerie, as liberally as you possibly can to the liberty loan. Your aerie subscription may be made from the benefit fund.

We are loyal, true, patriotic American citizens. We stand stanchly behind our country in its war for the preservation of human rights and liberty.

Secretary will please read this circular at first two meetings of his aerie after receipt of same.

Yours, fraternally, in L., T., J., and E.,

REX B. GOODSELL,
Grand Worthy President.

Attest:

J. S. PARRY,
Grand Secretary.

A Sad War Monologue.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WALTER M. CHANDLER,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Wednesday, June 6, 1917.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted I insert in the RECORD the following poem written by Gen. SHERWOOD, our beloved and distinguished colleague, a veteran of the Civil War and chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

A SAD WAR MONOLOGUE.

[By Gen. I. R. SHERWOOD.]

It was in the wan war days of '64
That a young man who served in the Twenty-third Corps
Concluded to veteran a year or two more;
And as he had fought some battles before,
He did not fear danger, at least, he so swore.
Then he reenlisted in Joe Hooker's corps.
'Way down in Georgia, he went to the door
Of a planter to gorge his stomach some more,
When a bloodhound jumped at him and ruthlessly tore
The calf of his leg, so that bleeding in gore
He, limping, went back to the camp of his corps,
With his leg, as well as his pants, badly tore,
Which caused him his soldier life to deplore,
And to call back the lingering memories of yore,
Of the old district school with a girl to adore;
When he had a sweet time and gathered some lore,
And at night slept at home in the old country store.
Then his heart, like his leg got awfully sore,
And he made up his mind to soldier no more.
Then he picked up his traps, and his body he bore,
With his haversack filled with rations galore,
And, while his comrades were in a deep snore,
He left for the home of his boy days of yore;
Right home to his ma and the old country store.
And now his three orphans are sick and heartsore,
For his name has been borne for years a full score
As a deserter from Hooker's Old Twentieth Corps!

The Lakewood (Ohio) Idea—The Public School Industrial Preparedness League.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY I. EMERSON,

OF OHIO,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Thursday, June 7, 1917.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting some excellent suggestions made by Paul J. Bast, of Lakewood, Ohio, as to how the school children could be used to help the country in this war:

THE LAKEWOOD (OHIO) IDEA—THE PUBLIC SCHOOL INDUSTRIAL PREPAREDNESS LEAGUE.

The public schools of the land have been called "the backbone of the Nation." If they deserve this title in more than a theoretical sense they can now submit themselves to the acid test. They can now prove that the great school system of our land is an active and positive force in supplementing the country's endeavor to cope with the unusual situation in which the land now finds itself. It surely is not asking too much of the school to call upon it at this time to help bear the burden that is placed upon the Nation's shoulders now. Can the schools adapt themselves to the new situation and rise to help meet the industrial needs of the hour? Have the authorities vision enough to see the vast productive force which is bound up in school buildings, teaching force, and the millions of school children which compose our public-school system? Can the Government, the chambers of commerce, and the public be made to see the real significance of the hundreds of thousands of school boys and girls at work for the Nation? If this can be done, we will have forged a strong link in the chain of national preparedness. Young America will thus get a lesson in cooperation which will continue into the days of peace following this war. The boys and girls will begin to realize that their destinies are inseparably united with the welfare of the State and that the watchword is "service for service." That by serving the city, State, and the Nation they are serving themselves, and that the only pure-gold brand of patriotism is that kind which meets the need of the State at the cost of some personal sacrifice. Instill the nationalistic spirit into our industrial efforts, educate the worker to keep the common good in mind, and this country will ride on the crest of the wave to the markets of the world.

Give our school boys and girls an opportunity to feel that they are an integral part of our industrial life, and that upon them rests a responsibility which can only be discharged by unselfish devotion and service to the State. We must foster pride in production, both in quality and quantity, and when we stamp an article "Made in U. S. A." it should compare favorably with the best in the world. The earlier in the child's life this idea can be inculcated the more surely will this idea take root and grow. And to do this work under conditions that will not harm the child physically we set him to work in the school building, where the shorter working hours will be made up for by having a large number engaged in the work. It will be the proper kind of initiation to the sterner realities of life, and should the country have to make a last-ditch stand its young people will then be better prepared to step into the industrial life of the Nation and help carry on its work.

The object of the league is to mobilize the school children of the country for such industrial work as they can do, and school shops and domestic-science rooms and such equipment as the schools possess are to be placed at the disposal of the State and the Nation. Boys and girls from the ages of 12 to 18 years not otherwise employed could thus be employed to serve in the general scheme of national preparedness. Through this work we can help reduce to a minimum the serious interruption of industrial activities in our national life. The work was at first meant to be carried on during the summer vacation period, but there is no reason why the work could not be made a regular part of the school work if necessity demanded such a step.

The articles that at first suggest themselves are tents, cots, stretchers, crutches, splints, first-aid kits, hospital appliances, khaki suits, etc. As the work progressed other articles could be added. Parts of articles might be made at different places and assembled at a common storehouse.

The school boards would throw open the necessary building and arrange for the services of those who will supervise the work.

The chamber of commerce will lend its aid in equipping the shops with needed machinery and help in the industrial organization of the work.

The work must be carried on more or less on the basis of a small industrial plant, with its executives, office force, and shop force. Books would necessarily have to be kept and a strict account of all incoming and outgoing products must be had. Costs could be figured as to what a saving was being made to the Government, and would be the basis of making comparisons with other communities that were doing the same work. With the aid of a national sheet which would publish facts and figures about the work, a rivalry would spring up to keep the cost of production as low as possible. This paper would also disseminate new ideas and methods to help stimulate the work.

School-teachers with industrial sense who understand children should supervise the industrial establishment. These teachers could enlist the aid of trained workers, who for a short time would instruct the youthful worker in the practical technique of the work. Then for every district counting a certain number of schools a Government officer would act as inspector, thus putting the official stamp of approval on work well done. He would see that the specifications were being lived up to and his presence would give an air of authority and inspire respect.

The chamber of commerce of each community should give itself whole-heartedly to this work and cooperate with the school board in carrying out the plan. If the machinery and equipment is not given outright, the chamber should see that funds are raised for the purchase of the same. The interest the men and women show and the support they give to the cause will impress the young workers. The sense of father and son and mother and daughter standing shoulder to shoulder in a common work would give the community a feeling of solidarity that will be the finest asset of which the Nation can boast.

The work in any community would fall into three divisions:

1. Work in the shop.
2. Work in the sewing room.
3. Work in the domestic-science room.

The articles which could be made in the shop would be limited only by the equipment the schools possess and other machines that might be installed. With such automatic machinery as we now have much may be done.

The sewing room would not only take care of Red Cross work, but also do the sewing necessary to make cots, stretchers, tents, shirts, khaki uniforms, etc. Both boys and girls could be employed in this work.

In the domestic-science departments equipped with pressure cookers great quantities of vegetables and fruits might be canned. The gathering of such vegetables and fruit would be done by pupils in private automobiles and wagons. Pupils might even help orchardists and truck farmers gather their crops and for compensation be given a share of what they pick, which would be turned into the canning department of the school they represent. The growers, stirred by patriotic impulse, would surely contribute a small share of what they raised for such a purpose. Both boys and girls could be employed in this department.

The women of the community could be a real help and inspiration to the girls by supervising and helping in both the sewing and domestic-science rooms. In fact, the Red Cross work could be more effectively carried under such auspices than in any other way. The men in spare moments might come around to give the boys a word of encouragement and help out wherever they could. Under these conditions the spirit of enterprise and work would take hold of a community in a way that would be a revelation to its inhabitants.

For the active shopwork two shifts of four hours each would be employed, say, 20 boys to the shift—the shifts to work from 8 a. m. till 12 and from 12.30 to 4.30. These shifts could alternate on morning and afternoon work every other week. The number that could be handled in a shift would, of course, depend upon the kind of work, the size of the shop, and the amount of supervision.

In recognizing the work of the pupils, school credit should be given for the time they spend on this work. Recognition by the Government should be accorded by presenting each juvenile worker with an insignia to show that he has volunteered for service. This will make him a member of the governmental service, in which he will enlist and from which he will get his honorable discharge when no longer needed for such service. This should be done so that the organization of the work could not suffer through too many changes in the personnel of these working groups.

But attractive as the plan may appear, nothing definite can be done until the chambers of commerce and the school boards can get the cooperation of the War and Navy Departments. These departments will have to determine what is most needed and in what quantities. This information, along with specifications, would be given to a bureau with an office in Washington, D. C., which bureau would then get in touch with the communities which were undertaking such work. Of course, the details of furnishing the raw materials and other questions of organization must be left for the time when the organizations primarily concerned can come to some kind of an understanding. The greatest obstacle to be overcome is to convince the governmental authorities that this is no trifling movement, but that a great potential force can be set in motion if only the proper agencies will cooperate.

The criticism has been made that articles manufactured by boys and girls from 12 to 16 years old would not be high enough in quality to be acceptable. The industrial world has utilized such youthful workers in the past before it became illegal to do so, and what the industries have done the schools, at least in a measure, can do, but under conditions that will not impair the child's health. If we can not under proper supervision do in a school what we expect the pupil to do when he enters the industrial life, then the sooner we find it out the better. If we are not developing a high-grade adaptability in the pupil to meet conditions after he leaves school the sooner we face ourselves with that shortcoming the better.

But above all material considerations will this plan build for the future. Forgetting self for the time being and enlisting under the colors to do some service for the State will give the boy or girl a viewpoint and a vision of civic duty that will leave a lasting impression. Having got the idea that his interest as a worker is bound up in the interest of all, we shall begin to rally around the standard a unified army of workers and producers which will be the best insurance the United States can have for the industrial supremacy of the future. Let us hope that our patriotism will be of a kind that will brush aside our prejudices and that will weld us into a coherent industrial unit. Let us fashion and shape our work-a-day life so that it will be a living monument to the genius and common sense of the people of these United States. May the future find us linked to one another in a kindly spirit of industrial companionship Let everybody help in the reconstruction who has vision enough to comprehend.

PAUL J. BAST.

LAKEWOOD, OHIO, May 22, 1917.

"Kick Congress, It's Down," Says L. Y. Sherman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. WILLIAM R. WOOD,

OF INDIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 12, 1917.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a copy of a letter written by Senator SHERMAN to the editor of the Chicago Tribune on what this Congress has done and what the press and others try to do to Congress.

The letter is as follows:

"KICK CONGRESS, IT'S DOWN," SAYS L. Y. SHERMAN—WRITES CRITICISM OF PRESS, THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY, AND LAWMAKING.

An editor of the Tribune yesterday received a letter from Senator LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN containing some candid comments on Government, newspapers, Congress, despotism, the Constitution of the United States, etc.

The letter follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1917.

DEAR SIR: There is considerable current criticism about superabundant talk in Congress. It is quite fashionable now to take it out on Congress whenever anything happens. One can not blame most critics for doing so when it begins at the White House. Whenever anything goes wrong, the President shovels it off on to Congress. If Congress does not obey his directions, charge it with incompetency. If it does obey his directions and calamities result, jump on Congress for not having enough sense to have detected the error while the bill was being railroaded through.

Just now nothing is so fashionable in Washington as a presidential dictatorship. Nothing is so needless as an investigation of anything the President orders Congress to do. Congress was not intended to be a deliberative body, it was designed by the fathers to be a parliamentary rubber stamp to register either the directions of the Executive or precipitately to run to cover every time a clamor stirs in some part of the country.

FROM PILLAR TO POST.

Between the vocal activities of orators with inflamed throats and editors with brain storm, Congress will spend its time jumping from pillar to post and keeping its ear glued to Mother Earth listening. It is not to be presumed that a Member of Congress has any sense. Presumably, appearances are against him, of course. If he had any sense he never would have run for Congress. No Representative or Senator ought to exercise any independent thought or talk more than 10 minutes per session on any given subject.

Congress convened April 2. Since that time more actual legislation, measured by the gravity of the questions involved, the lives of men affected, or appropriations made, has been passed than in any other like period in American history. The declaration of war passed. There was no undue debate preceding it. It was largely a condition presented by the President and uncontroverted by most Members of Congress.

THE ARMY ACT.

The army act followed. It contains a conscription provision. It is the substance of the law. Whatever may have been our traditions, our history, and our practices in past wars, we turned our backs on it all. I do not wish to discuss this question save to remind my friends that we were told all of our former wars were failures, that the volunteer was not a good soldier, it might possibly be granted he was a patriot, but he could not fight. So, following the President and most of the metropolitan press, the draft law was passed. It was natural it should provoke some discussion not only in the House but longer in the Senate.

Many editors were intensely provoked at the delay. The President could scarcely contain his indignation. Certain Regular Army officers were vociferous, although they are not supposed to attempt to instruct Congress in its purely civil duties. Nearly all of those so vociferous in their outbursts were mainly desk generals who fight the country's wars in the departments here. There were many good Regular Army officers who favored conscription, but they did not make themselves offensive in urging their views, and for whom no criticism is intended here.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

Then came the deficiency appropriation bill with something like $3,500,000,000. The allies came also. The French commission aroused the sympathy and manly impulses of our countrymen. They are fighting for their country and their homes.

Some of the appropriations have gone to France. The British came through Mr. Balfour and his associates, and while they did not arouse the sympathy they reached the deliberate judgment of those in authority, and in addition reached the Public Treasury for many millions. The Italians arrived. They, too, have been loaned some money. The Russian Government came in for a liberal check. We seem to be financing the allies right along. We all hope that the Russian check will not fall upon barren ground and a separate peace follow with Germany.

A bond issue of $5,000,000,000 3½ per cent bonds and $200,000,000 3½ per cent certificates was provided for. Food-control legislation was demanded. The consumer was much in evidence. High prices were oppressing him. There remains out of all the volume of war legislation but two important measures, the creation of a food dictatorship (presumably Mr. Hoover) and the revenue bill to lay taxes to meet the tremendous expenditures referred to.

TAX POWER ALONE REMAINS.

All the other legislation has been enacted since April 2 last, some of it, I think, inconsiderately and unwisely. Some of it has been railroaded through under Executive whip and spur. If anything remains to complete the abdication of its powers by Congress, it is the delegation of the power of taxation to the Executive or some subordinate. This is the only thing left, as it is conceded Mr. Hoover will be food dictator.

I submit that with appropriations running into billions, with a conscription act that may take every man of fighting age before peace is concluded, with a declaration of war preceding it all, that two months of congressional legislation surpasses in parliamentary activity any other creative period in the history of our country. Of course Congress has talked some. It has had 60 days in which to commit this country to war and provide for at least 12 months' supplies to sustain it. It has committed the country further to the greatest war in history. It committed us into the abandonment of American policy and entangled us with the feuds and rivalries of a thousand years of European controversy. The end no one but the Deity knows.

NOT CRITICIZING THE WAR.

I am not criticizing the war. I shall support it in all reasonable ways by my vote here. I submit, however, that Congress in two months has done a good deal more than talk. I think it might well have talked more and done less and served the country better at last. Still Congress is now and has been since April 2 the butt of every agitator on the platform and nearly every metropolitan editorial writer. Why not insist that Congress be abolished? Abrogate the Constitution. It is obsolete by nonuse in this administration, anyhow.

Let us join with the allies who have no written constitution. England's constitution is an act of parliament. It is omnipotent. The king's veto power has not been exercised for 300 years. If we are aping royalty and loaning our money this way, we have got it wrong end foremost. When we bought into a bankrupt concern, if stories from across the sea are to be credited, we ought to have committed more power to Congress instead of having Congress delegate all its powers to the President.

THE PRESS CENSORSHIP.

When Congress was holding up the press-censorship feature it was engaged in a highly laudable pursuit. No Member could talk too much on that hated measure. Was not a free press the very corner stone of popular government? We would shed our blood, indeed, as freely as newspapers shed printer's ink for the liberty of the press and of free speech.

Don Quixote became a piker alongside of the clamorous outburst against the President's demand to curb the press. I failed in a single newspaper to notice that Congress was talking too much on that subject. For once all the editors, from the metropolis to the crossroads, agreed that Congress was doing its duty. Its Members, too, were astonished to see their names in print, and to read that they were the noble apostles of liberty.

Now that this danger affecting the fourth estate is passed Congress is wasting time. It exasperates the editors exceedingly to have them talk about a few billion dollar bonds and appropriations, about fixing prices of food, about confiscating everything the farmer, stock raiser, and market gardener produces.

ASSAILS FOOD AGITATION.

"Speed up" is the demand. Fix a maximum price for human nourishment. Compel a farmer to produce. Compel him to work 24 hours a day instead of 16, which he is now working. Compel him to sell at a certain price. If he refuses, take it away from him, but still make him produce. What is a farmer anyhow but a rube to raise grub for the dwellers in cities to consume? Nobody needs any consideration but the consumer. Everybody now is patting the ultimate consumer on the back. The average consumer whose clamorous voice is heard at the Capitol never produced enough foodstuff to keep his pet poodle in average canine health. It makes me weary to hear agricultural experts who do not know a goat from a cow talk about speeding up production of foodstuffs. It is about as sensible, though, as the vast clamor about speeding up Congress.

I am ready to turn prophet on one thing. The Members of Congress know more about public sentiment than the members of the Cabinet and the President. Not meaning to be personal, many of them know more about it than those who write the criticisms invoking maledictions on Congress for not running amuck and looking wild eyed every time the President says anything.

ONE AUTHENTIC RECORD.

For my part, I would vote to abolish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if that were all there was to it. At present it is about the only place that a printer puts in cold type the truth about Congress. Without it the newspapers, which have just escaped through Congress having Uncle Sam choke them into silence, could print what they please about Congress. There would be nothing of record to deny it. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD serves the useful purpose of actually recording what happens in Congress, together with keeping dates, roll calls, hours of continual work, and committee responsibility where they can be proven.

If executive satellites were to be heeded and the President obeyed, civil government would end. We would delegate all power to the President and an uncensored press. The President would become the sole governing power, to be regulated only by a free press. The rest of the people could take the chances and Congress could go home. What's the use of it, anyhow? If we are to be destroyed, I would prefer destruction at the hands of a foreign invader rather than domestic usurpation or inability for self-government.

GIVES OWN STAND.

I shall vote to continue here the rule of law under the Constitution. I shall vest proper war powers in the military and naval authorities to use those branches of the public defense. To raise armies, however, is a purely civil congressional power. It is not military. I shall reserve the right to use my judgment on a civil question as a Member of Congress in accordance with my lights.

If you get tired of reading this letter before you reach the end, consign it to oblivion or the wastebasket. I am writing you of actual conditions here. If this country is to be preserved, I think Congress is about as likely to have a hand in it as any other governmental authorities outside of the people of our country. I have had this in my system for some time. If I could have visited Chicago I would have talked it out to you at much more length even, if you had survived long enough. I am now writing a small portion of it.

Our revenue bill is not out of committee. When it gets into the Senate there is more talking to do. The writer expects to disturb the atmosphere and consume some time unless the bill is very materially amended.

Very truly, yours, L. Y. SHERMAN.

Flood Control.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. RILEY J. WILSON,

OF LOUISIANA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 12, 1917,

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, when this amendment was under discussion in the Senate the question was several times asked as to what provision had been made and as to what steps had been taken by the States and other local interests affected to meet the provisions of the flood-control law in the way of providing the funds required of such interests. It was shown that the State of California, through its legislature, had already authorized the expenditure of $500,000 for the present fiscal year, this being the amount required of that State in accordance with the estimate made by the War Department.

While I have not endeavored to obtain the exact data, except as to my own State, I understand that all the local interests have made like provisions to meet the terms of this law.

The flood-control bill was passed by the House of Representatives on the 17th day of May, 1916. The Legislature of the State of Louisiana was then in session, and following the passage of that act the following additional bond issues were promptly provided for in that State through its various levee boards, viz:

The Tensas Basin levee district, by act approved June 19, 1916	$350,000
New Orleans levee district, by act approved July 6, 1916	1,000,000
Red River, Atchafalaya, and Bœuf River district, by act approved July 16, 1916	250,000
La Fourche Basin levee district, by act approved July 6, 1916	250,000
The fifth Louisiana levee district, by act aproved July 5, 1916	1,000,000
Atchafalaya Basin levee district, by act approved July 5, 1916	1,000,000
Making a total additional bond issue of these various leevee districts of	3,850,000

This speaks well for the wisdom and foresight of the Louisiana General Assembly and for the present State administration. The promptness with which the terms of the flood-control act were amply met serves to illustrate how necessary was this legislation and indicates the intense interest of our people in this problem.

In addition to the funds provided for above under law already existing, the State of Louisiana pays directly for levee construction annually seventeen-twentieths of a mill on the assessed valuation of all the property of the State, which will provide an annual revenue of $600,000, or a total during the five-year period covered by the flood-control act of $3,000,000, making a grand total, already authorized and provided for in that State, of $6,850,000.

So, Mr. Speaker, the appropriations authorized under the provisions of the flood-control act should not be for one moment delayed on the assumption that the local authorities in the Mississippi Valley will in any respect fail to discharge the burdens placed upon them under the requirements of this law. While the weight of taxation will bear heavily throughout that section, this is the opportunity which our people have long sought, and I want to assure this House that while it will be a herculean task, they are now meeting, and will in the future continue to meet, promptly and gladly every provision and requirement in this law.

It must indeed be most gratifying to the country, and especially to the people of the Mississippi Valley States and the State of California, that the Congress is proceeding immediately to appropriate under the provisions of this law for the all-important work for which it provides.

Although this is an extra session of the Congress, the work of which is limited to war measures, and while this has not been discussed as a war appropriation, yet we all know that no wiser step has been taken toward fundamental preparedness, for there is no region in the world of like area capable of producing in such quantity the raw products for food and clothing as the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River; neither is any waterway on the globe capable of rendering greater service to commerce.

The Proposed Nathan Hale Monument in Washington.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. AUGUSTINE LONERGAN,

OF CONNECTICUT,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Saturday, June 9, 1917.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, on May 5, 1917, I introduced in the House of Representatives a bill asking for an appropriation of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be needed, to pay for the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a suitable memorial to Nathan Hale, the Revolutionary patriot.

He is a product of Connecticut, having been born at Coventry, in that State, June 6, 1755, and I incorporate in my remarks a news article and editorials from a few Connecticut newspapers:

[Article from the Hartford Daily Times of Wednesday, June 6, 1917.]

Nathan Hale, native of Connecticut, martyr spy of the Revolution and Yankee schoolmaster, was born 162 years ago to-day. He has often been called Connecticut's noblest son. The schoolhouse in which he taught in East Haddam has been preserved to history, chiefly through the efforts of former United States Senator Morgan G. Bulkeley, of that town, and is the shrine of the Connecticut Society, Sons of the American Revolution. Near by it, on the bank of the Connecticut River, is the monument to the memory of Gen. Joseph Spencer, also of Revolutionary fame, and over all are flying every day, rain or shine, the Stars and Stripes.

A call to the young men of the Revolutionary patriot's native State to rally to the colors is made in Hale's memory by William Howard Taft, former President of the United States.

[Editorial from the Hartford Daily Times of Wednesday, June 6, 1917.]

NATHAN HALE—AND OTHER COLLEGIANS.

To-day marks the anniversay of the birth of Nathan Hale—the Nathan Hale whose regret was that he had but one life to give for his country. He was a Yale man.

To-day sees hundreds of other Yale men animated by the same spirit which moved Hale to take up arms for his country and for liberty. They serve their country and liberty gladly and proudly and well. To-day also sees some other Yale men of a different kidney. The opprobrium bestowed upon the Collegiate Antimilitaristic League ought not to be visited in too large measure upon Yale. Yale contributes in only small degree to its pernicious activity. But here in Connecticut where, in spite of the institution's national character, we feel Yale particularly our own dear possession, the smallest taint in its traditionally splendid spirit causes us distress acute and intense.

The right of the individual to think for himself and to be true to himself is one of the principles most valuably taught and most valuably maintained by our institutions of true culture. The conscientious objector to war is not to be hotly condemned because of a war's popularity. At Yale or elsewhere, he is a serious problem demanding serious and sober condemnation. We can not justly or wisely trample over him with a preparedness parade or smother him in a burst of bitter condemnation born of our exalted devotion to the cause in which we believe. Until we know otherwise we must believe him honest.

Such being the case we must take sober thought on how we shall deal with him, remembering that for our sake we must preserve to him liberty of conscience just as we must prevent him from working detriment to the public weal. We must, of course, insist that he behave logically. If we discover him selfishly false or actuated by mere hysteria or sentimentality we need have no consideration for him. We may even, in movements of just indignation, bestow upon him all those penalties of excoriation and discipline of which he stands in prima facie desert.

The young pacifists of Yale and elsewhere are in a peculiarly susceptible and impulsive stage of life. They take to odd notions just as they take to odd fashions in clothing. Privately we suspect most of them who figure in the present mess of being little fools rather than lunatics or traitors. They think they are horrified by the thought of killing in war. Those of us who are older know we are horrified by the thought of killing in war. Also we know that the near 2,000 years which have passed since the Divine Apostle of love and justice came among us have not brought us to that proper stage of spiritual development where we can work all the great remedies which must be worked for the advancement of man without the horrible thing of killing in war. We know that there are things more horrible than killing in war. We know that killing in war can stop them. We know, in our ignorance, no other way of stopping them. So we go about the horror of killing in war. We have no confidence that the tiny group of intellectually unstable college undergraduates, unwashed opponents of all government, and eerie sentimentalists can show us a righteous way for its avoidance. We kill or are killed for a faith, for the good of those that come after us, to make the world increase in righteousness.

All that is good in most of us tells us now that we must fight and kill. We can not permit that our task shall fail of accomplishment because of opposition by the few whose enlightenment differs from ours. To permit failure would be to abandon conscience. With the "conscientious" objector we must deal in rigor when he is mendacious, in pity when he is hysterical, in understanding when he is sincere, but at all times in firmness and in resolve that he shall not harm the great purpose at which we have put our hand.

It must be with regret that we see the college of Nathan Hale and other colleges producing in their undergraduate ranks products of what must seem to most of us distorted mentality. When we see preceptors whose activity seems to contribute toward this product we must consider very gravely the wisdom of permitting them to remain at large. Prof. William Lyon Phelps, of Yale, may have been done something of an injustice. Charges have been made against him which are not literally true. But we must remember Prof. Phelps's avowed attitude, as so strikingly voiced in his remarks at the time of Dr. David Starr Jordan's visit to New Haven. And with Yale and the rest of the United States of America at war we must question whether Prof. William Lyon Phelps, as an accredited representative of Yale instruction, does not retard the progress of the United States of America and of Yale.

[Editorial from the Hartford Evening Post of Wednesday, June 6, 1917.]

NATHAN HALE DAY.

This is Nathan Hale Day. On June 6, 1755, was born the child to become the schoolmaster who declared at the gallows where he was executed as a British spy on September 22, 1776, "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country."

It is by no means inappropriate that on this day when we are checking up our response to America's call upon her young men for aid in a time of stress similar to that in which Nathan Hale lived and died we should pause to give attention to the fact that this is the anniversary of his birth.

Nathan Hale lived a short 21 years and achieved immortality. The one hundred and sixty-second anniversary of his birth has inspired ex-President Taft, who is an instructor at the institution where Hale was graduated, to sound a call to the colors for the patriotic young men of Hale's native State:

"The Prussian autocracy by its ruthless and defiant violation of the rights of our citizens upon the high seas left no course open to us as a self-respecting Nation but war. Being in, we find ourselves necessarily in league with England, France, Italy, and Russia to strike down the military autocracies of the world whose continuance in power will be a constant threat to the future peace of the world," says the ex-President.

"We are thus engaged in a gigantic struggle to make the world safe for democracy, as President Wilson says, and to secure a just and permanent peace.

"For no higher cause did a nation or a league of nations ever wage war.

"We hope for speedy success through a collapse of the autocracies and the coming into their own of the German, Austrian, and Hungarian peoples; but the war may continue. We must win it. We must prepare, therefore, for a long, hard struggle. We must lay immediate foundations for an army of a million men over and above the projected 750,000 of the Regular Army and the National Guard.

"The war must be fought by our young men. They must constitute a very large part of our armies. To them our great cause must appeal. In their hearts must love of country prompt to great deeds of courage and sacrifice.

"No other character in our history glows with the inspiring fervor for American young men like that of Nathan Hale. During the darkest hours of our struggle for independence Hale came forward and 'resigned his life as a sacrifice to his country's liberty.'

"His last words, 'I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country,' should be on the lips of every young man of our country to-day. No one knows where his dust lies buried, but his spirit speaks from his unknown grave and calls every man to the service of the flag.

"Hale's last words have become immortal. Every schoolboy knows them. He left another message, little known but timely, for us. His intimate friend and companion in arms, Capt. William Hull, urged him by every possible argument not to hazard his life by going into the lines of the enemy. Hale listened quietly. When his friend had finished, he said:

"'I am fully sensible of the consequences of discovery and capture in such a situation, * * * yet I wish to be useful, and every kind of service necessary to the public good becomes honorable by being necessary. If the exigencies of my country demand a peculiar service, its claims to perform that service are imperious.'

"Born of his self-reliance and consecration to the service of his country, those few words, 'I wish to be useful,' should be taken to heart by every young man who is hesitating to-day to join the colors.

"Military necessity knows nothing of what is labeled dangerous or disgraceful. If a thing has to be done in war it has to be done, and some brave and capable soldier has to do it. This young Hale died for duty's sake, for his country's sake, but he still lives in his buoyant and immortal youth."

Upon this day of all days it can do no harm for Americans to pause for a moment and consider the short career of Nathan Hale, who, by an ignominious death, was translated from a mere patriot into a national hero.

[Editorial from the Rockville Journal of Thursday, June 7, 1917.]

NATHAN HALE.

Yesterday, on the one hundred and sixty-second anniversary of the birth of Nathan Hale, Connecticut's noblest son, who was born in Coventry, Tolland County, June 6, 1755, a notable tribute was made by William H. Taft, which is printed by permission of the New York Sun. Said ex-President Taft:

"No other character in our history glows with the inspiring fervor for American young men like that of Nathan Hale. During the darkest hours of our struggle for independence Hale came forward and 'resigned his life as a sacrifice to his country's liberty.'

"His last words, 'I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country,' should be on the lips of every young man of our country to-day. No one knows where his dust lie buried, but his spirit speaks from his unknown grave and calls every man to the service of the flag.

"What manner of man was he? He was of medium height, well built, and of fair coloring. He excelled in contests of running, leaping, wrestling, firing at a mark, throwing and playing ball; he was fond of hunting and fishing; he was clever with his hands. It is recorded by Stuart that he once said in jest that 'he could do everything but spin.'

"Such accounts as we have of Hale bring before us a handsome, frank, and lively fellow of winning naturalness. He belonged to the epic age of homespun; he came from sturdy stock; he was country bred; there is no reason for believing that he was in any way different in appearance or breeding from the average country boy brought up on a farm by God-fearing, hard-working parents.

"Nathan Hale was born at Coventry, Conn., June 6, 1755, the fourth son and sixth child of the 12 children of Deacon Richard Hale, an energetic farmer, a man of sturdy character and public spirit. On both sides the inheritance was of the best old New England stock.

"He was prepared for college by the village minister and entered Yale in 1769 with the class of 1773. It is plain from the evidence at hand that he was one of the foremost figures in his class. His energetic personality, serious-mindedness, skill as an athlete, and his ardent temperament made him a marked man.

"After graduation in 1773 he taught school in East Haddam for a few months; leaving there in March, 1774, became a preceptor of the Union Grammar School in New London, where he was teaching when the war broke out. Ardently patriotic, he enlisted and served as first lieutenant in a Connecticut regiment throughout the siege of Boston.

"In March, 1776, he went with his regiment to New York and served there until his untimely end, meanwhile having been commissioned a captain in the Continental Army. In September, 1776, Washington had called on Hale's colonel for information of the enemy's strength and position and the colonel called on Hale. He started on his hazardous mission about September 12, crossing the Sound at Norwalk.

"Nothing is known of his experiences in the enemy's lines. He was executed in New York somewhere about Third Avenue and Sixty-fifth Street on Sunday, September 22, 1776, 141 years ago.

"Hale's last words have become immortal. Every schoolboy knows them. He left another message little known, but timely for us. His intimate friend and companion in arms, Capt. William Hull, urged him by every possible argument not to hazard his life by going into the lines of the enemy. Hale listened quietly. When his friend had finished he said:

"'I am fully sensible of the consequences of discovery and capture in such a situation, * * * yet I wish to be useful, and every kind of service necessary to the public good becomes honorable by being necessary. If the exigencies of my country demand a peculiar service, its claims to perform that service are imperious.'

"Born of his self-reliance and consecration to the service of his country those few words, "I wish to be useful," should be taken to heart by every young man who is hesitating to-day to join the colors. Hale did not wait to have this and that question decided for him. He did not ask what Washington's policy was. He did not consult his family and friends. He decided for himself. He had enlisted in the service of his country, and anything pertaining to that service he felt was in his day's work.

"Military necessity knows nothing of what is labeled dangerous or disgraceful. If a thing has to be done in war, it has to be done, and some brave and capable soul has to do it. This young Hale died for duty's sake, for his country's sake, but he still lives in his buoyant and immortal youth.

"From the supreme moment in the orchard on that September morning Hale passed from an engaging and capable personality into an ever-living hero. He calls to all young men to do their part as he did his. The lesson of his life is not that he was hanged as a spy, but that he saw his duty manfully and stepped bravely forward with no other thought in his heart than to be true to his country and to his God.

"To drum beat and heart beat
A soldier marches by;
There is color in his cheek,
There is courage in his eye;
Yet to drum beat and heart beat
In a moment he must die.

"From fame's leaf and angel's leaf,
From monument and urn,
The sad of earth, the glad of heaven,
His tragic fate shall learn,
And on fame's leaf and angel's leaf
The name of Hale shall burn."

Letters of A. B. Thornhill, President of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of the State of Virginia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HENRY D. FLOOD,

OF VIRGINIA,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 11, 1917.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a letter from Mr. A. B. Thornhill, president of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of the State of Virginia, and also a letter addressed to him by the Virginia Agricultural Council of Safety. The letters are as follows:

FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., June 7, 1917.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR HAL: I am handing you herein inclosed copy of a letter of which I have the original, delivered to me yesterday by the Virginia Agricultural Council of Safety at a meeting held in Richmond, with instructions to deliver you a copy.

We have held a conference here in this city to-day of the Farmers' Union, in which some 15 States are represented, and before whom Mr. Hoover appeared last night giving an outline of the method of the administration in handling the food problem, which is in most respects entirely satisfactory to the conference.

We are being called upon to produce more largely than ever before of the food products, and I believe it is the earnest determination of every member of our organization to do his best for an increased production of food products, but we are handicapped more seriously than probably you can imagine by the uncertain and unsatisfactory condition of the fertilizer situation. We are also confronted by the disorganized, restless, and unsatisfactory condition of the labor, having lost at least 300,000 of the colored laborers from the South, from the farms, within the last year, and we must do intensified farming if we are to meet the obligation imposed upon us by the administration, the chief element of which you will readily see is a higher-grade fertilizer at a more economical cost.

About a year ago a bill was passed making appropriation and provision for the extraction of nitrates from the atmosphere, which would give us a 60 per cent plant food at a greatly reduced cost; in fact, it has been developed before the committees in hearings on this subject, that it would cut the fertilizer bill of the country in half. There was also a provision made in the way of an appropriation of $11,000,000 for an armor-plate plant about the same time, and that has been established. So far as I am able to learn, practically nothing has been done for the establishment of this nitrate plant.

The farmers of the country are very much in earnest about this matter and are eager to know what we may expect along this line. I am writing to ask that you use your best influences with the interdepartmental board for immediate action on this matter. I am writing to you because I do not feel like taking up your time for a personal call now, which I propose to make at a later date, hoping at that time to be able to ascertain what the farmers may expect as to when and where something will be done, that I may have something to take back at that time to the Virginia farmers in the way of definite data as to the status of the situation.

I am glad to be able to say to you that in all of my meetings with the farmers over the country I am sure that no other class of citizenship will prove themselves more patriotic in this great crisis, and I have been assuring them that our public men will give their best energies to giving them all needed relief in this stress. We have instructed a committee to present ourselves before the President, offering our utmost efforts of service to the Government at this crisis.

With the danger of gambling with the food products removed, and a fertilizer of proper grade and at reasonable cost, we promise as farmers to feed the world.

Yours, sincerely,

A. B. THORNHILL.

P. S.—I inclose you a copy of the nitrate provision.

FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA,
Richmond, Va., June 6, 1917.

To the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Virginia.

GENTLEMEN: At a meeting of the Virginia Agricultural Council of Safety of the State of Virginia at Richmond to-day Mr. A. B. Thornhill, the president of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of the State of Virginia, has discussed with us some very important phases of the fertilizer needs of the country, and we have been so impressed that the undersigned most respectfully urge each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from Virginia to aid in every possible way they can, that the farmers of the country be relieved as far as possible from their fertilizer burdens, in the location of the Government nitrate plant and the selection of a process that will give fertilizers of higher grade and at cheaper prices in times of peace and at the same time furnish the Government needed nitric acid for explosives.

The provision for a Government nitrate plant that would produce materials for explosives and useful in manufacturing fertilizers was passed and became a law more than a year ago.

At the end of the Civil War there was a labor revolution in the Southern States. Fortunately its solution was found, for the most part by the introduction and use of commercial fertilizers, and economists can not now find, in the light of facts since the Civil War, neither can they imagine or conjecture just how the economic question of labor after the Civil War for growing crops in the Southern States, especially cotton, would have been solved but for fertilizers that started to be used in increasing quantities in the early seventies.

At the present time there is the most serious farm-labor problem in the Southern States since the Civil War. Negro farm labor is leaving the South by thousands and going to railroads and factories in the Eastern and Middle Western States where the labor wage is higher than negro labor can earn on farms in the Southern States. Statistics gathered by the Colored Citizens' Virginia Patriotic League of Richmond, Va., show that some 309,000 negroes left the South between September 1, 1916, and May 1, 1917. The Pennsylvania Railroad has brought over 40,000 colored laborers for employment on its lines from the Southern States in the last 16 months. Southern negro farm labor is becoming seriously disorganized, demoralized, and restless. The solution of this serious question of the withdrawal of colored help from southern farms is to be found by these farms receiving higher grade, cheaper fertilizers, and there is no other solution for it.

Therefore, if the Government nitrate plant can be located where it will in the largest degree serve the fertilizer-using farmers of the country, and if a process for producing nitrogen can be selected and the farmers can receive higher grade, cheaper fertilizers compounded of nitrogen and phosphorus, then the result will be increased yields per acre on farming lands in the South and in the other fertilizer-using sections of the country, and finally a reduction in the high cost of food.

The Government has appropriated $11,000,000 to free itself from the domination and monopoly of the Armor Plate Trust, and already an armor-plate plant location has been made. We submit to you that it is more necessary to have cheaper fertilizers and cheaper food crops than it is to have cheaper armor plate, and it will be far more in the interest of public welfare that the farmers of this country be freed from the Fertilizer Trust than that the Government can be freed from the Armor Plate Trust.

The real significance in the use of fertilizers is seen only when we translate its use into terms of labor efficiency, and the history of the use of fertilizers, especially in the South, demonstrates how more fertilizers instead of more labor is one of the greatest economic needs of the present time.

We believe that you who represent the farmers of Virginia can perform for Virginia no greater service at the present time than to take an interest, as we respectfully urge you, in the location of the Government nitrate plant and the best process that will most highly serve the farming interests of the country with a supply of cheaper and higher grade fertilizers. We have requested Mr. Thornhill to show each of you this statement signed by us, and to leave a copy of the same with you. We most respectfully appeal for as immediate action on your part as you can possibly give.

The magnitude and importance of this subject we ask your assistance about can not be, we feel, more forcibly impressed upon you than for us to remind you that, according to Government crop reports, the total fertilizer bill of the country for 1914 amounted to $185,000,000. Of this total, $86,395,000 was for nitrogen, $69,005,000 for phosphoric acid, and $29,600,000 for potash, the total for nitrogen and phosphoric acid amounting to $155,400,000. Mr. Thornhill has shown us that in hearings before the Military and Agricultural Committees of the House it was stated by authorities upon the subject that if certain plans could be carried out in cooperation with the Government fertilizers compounded of nitrogen and phosphoric acid could be produced and sold at one-half what the farmers have been paying for them. If such a great result could be accomplished, it would revolutionize agriculture in the Southern States, for of the total bill for fertilizers in 1914 of $185,000,000 the Southern States paid between $80,000,000 and $100,000,000 of this bill.

With such a statement of facts as these, we have every confidence that you will make every effort to secure this result.

Yours, truly,

[Public, No. 85—64th Cong., H. R. 12766.]

An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes.

SEC. 124. Nitrate supply: The President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to make, or cause to be made, such investigation as in his judgment is necessary to determine the best, cheapest, and most available means for the production of nitrates and other products for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products by water power or any other power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest to use; and is also hereby authorized and empowered to designate for the exclusive use of the United States, if in his judgment such means is best and cheapest, such site or sites, upon any navigable or nonnavigable river or rivers or upon the public lands, as in his opinion will be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this act; and is further authorized to construct, maintain, and operate, at or on any site or sites so designated, dams, locks, improvements to navigation, power houses, and other plants and equipment or other means than water power as in his judgment is the best and cheapest, necessary or convenient for the generation of electrical or other power and for the production of nitrates or other products needed for munitions of war and useful in the manufacture of fertilizers and other useful products.

The President is authorized to lease, purchase, or acquire, by condemnation, gift, grant, or devise, such lands and rights of way as may be necessary for the construction and operation of such plants, and to take from any lands of the United States, or to purchase or acquire by condemnation materials, minerals, and processes, patented or otherwise, necessary for the construction and operation of such plants and for the manufacture of such products.

The products of such plants shall be used by the President for military and naval purposes to the extent that he may deem necessary, and any surplus which he shall determine is not required shall be sold and disposed of by him under such regulations as he may prescribe.

The President is hereby authorized and empowered to employ such officers, agents, or agencies as may in his discretion be necessary to enable him to carry out the purposes herein specified, and to authorize and require such officers, agents, or agencies to perform any and all of the duties imposed upon him by the provisions hereof.

The sum of $20,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, available until expended, to enable the President of the United States to carry out the purposes herein provided for.

The plant or plants provided for under this act shall be constructed and operated solely by the Government and not in conjunction with any other industry or enterprise carried on by private capital.

In order to raise the money appropriated by this act and necessary to carry its provisions into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the request of the President of the United States, may issue and sell, or use for such purpose or construction hereinabove authorized, any of the bonds of the United States now available in the Treasury of the United States under the act of August 5, 1909; the act of February 4, 1910; and the act of March 2, 1911, relating to the issue of bonds for the construction of the Panama Canal, to a total amount not to exceed $20,000,000: Provided, That any Panama Canal bonds issued and sold or used under the provisions of this section may be made payable at such time after issue as the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may deem advisable, and fix, instead of 50 years after date of issue, as in said act of August 5, 1909, not exceeding 50 years.

The Dehydration of Fruits and Vegetables.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. MURRAY HULBERT,

OF NEW YORK,

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Monday, June 11, 1917.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, on May 28, 1917, I brought the fact to the attention of this House that, under the authority conferred by H. R. 4188, known as the food-survey bill, the Department of Agriculture proposed to use 20 or 30 experts in the Bureau of Plant Industry in dehydration, in which connection the Bureau of Chemistry would cooperate very closely, and an appropriation of $50,000 was authorized for the purpose of doing that class of work.

The New York Globe has been rendering a great patriotic service as an agency for the dissemination of information upon the subject of pure foods, having secured the able services of Alfred W. McCann, who is a recognized authority and a noted publicist and writer upon the subject of pure foods.

The Globe has opened its columns to the discussion of the subject of dehydration, and Mr. McCann has received hundreds of letters daily from all parts of the United States, showing the widespread interest in this subject. It would take a great many columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to print all of these communications, which, however, with his permission, I propose to submit to the Committee on Agriculture for their information.

Under leave granted me on June 6, I insert a communication received by me, which is typical of the thousands that have been addressed to the Globe:

30 SOUTH THIRTEENTH AVENUE,
Mount Vernon, N. Y., June 6, 1917.

HON. MURRAY HULBERT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We must have whole-wheat flour and dehydration—not sulphur drying, which is harmful, but genuine dehydration. Heretofore, on account of slowness and cost of transportation, millions of tons of good foods have rotted. For the sake of the starving world we must have it. Schools are teaching it to the pupils.

Very truly, yours,
S. M. WYLIE,
High-School Teacher.

Unlike the necessity for preparedness, the increase of the Navy, the reorganization of the Army, the development of aeronautics, the upbuilding of the merchant marine, and a food survey, and the Federal control of food products, I hope that Congress will not be the last to realize the importance and the necessity for the development of dehydration as a means of food conservation.

The Ohio and Missouri Rivers—Enormous Waste for a Delusive Commerce.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. JAMES A. FREAR,

OF WISCONSIN.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Tuesday, June 12, 1917.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, for four years I have endeavored to expose the farcical river and harbor omnibus bill. Members of the House have been importuned by their constituents to vote for this bill simply because of some local project in which the people of his State are interested. A Member showed me, yesterday, some 20 telegrams from leading political and business people of his State, demanding that he vote for the entire bill because of one project located within his State. Other Members on the floor have said to me that they must support the bill because of some project in which the people of their district or State are primarily interested. That is why the bill is called a "pork-barrel" bill and that is why Congress must get away from the system if we would avoid the criticism which justly comes from the support of the annual "pork-barrel" measure.

I have placed in the RECORD some statistics regarding the Mississippi River in order to show where a vast amount of money has been wasted in the past and will be wasted by the passage of this bill through unbusinesslike expenditures of public money by Army engineers. Because of matters discussed in general debate I desire to submit statistics regarding two further projects, one of which—the Ohio River—carries $5,000,000 in the bill before us, and the other—the Missouri River—carries $1,000,000 on one particular project.

On June 8, in response to my statement that the Ohio River formerly carried 13,000,000 tons of commerce, based on engineers' reports, whereas now it only carries 4,000,000 tons, so far as can be ascertained from the same reports, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] objected to the statement because of the fact that ferriage statistics were now deducted by the engineers from the total river traffic. I have always favored open-channel work in order to accommodate local river traffic, but the enormous waste of public moneys through the annual river and harbor bill can only be brought to public attention through the constant presentation of facts, based on official statistics instead of on the judgment of waterway theorists, and in order to learn what return the Government receives for its vast expenditures on the Ohio I submit some official statistics.

Briefly, the Ohio River has had appropriated for it to December 1, 1916, irrespective of the sundry civil bills since that time, $59,377,395, or nearly $60,000,000, and in order to build the remaining locks provided for in the original act, presumably from $35,000,000 to $50,000,000 more will be needed, based on past and increasing expenditures. Construction costs are doubling and this may be a moderate estimate of future expenditures on the Ohio River. There is not an old riverman on the Ohio, so far as I am informed—and I have discussed the matter with many persons—who will not bear witness to the statement that the Ohio River's actual commerce of to-day is less than one-half and possibly not one-tenth of what is was 40 years and more ago, prior to the beginning of the Ohio River improvement by the Government. Statistics are not available, but I desire to offer a brief statement of the Ohio River traffic for the year 1915, as found on page 2815 of the Engineers' Report for 1916. I also append a brief statement of the cost of labor at locks and the commerce statistics, as follows:

Statement of expenditures for operating and care of locks and dams, Ohio River, Pa., W. Va., and Ohio, during the fiscal year 1916.

Salaries and wages of regular hired labor force	$148,553.97
Miscellaneous supplies and services	23,864.46
Miscellaneous repairs	32,469.33
Contingencies	4,586.33
Total	209,474.09

COMMERCIAL STATISTICS—CLASSIFIED STATEMENT OF THE TRAFFIC ON THE OHIO RIVER FOR THE CALENDAR YEAR 1915.

[Commerce is estimated by taking the tonnage which passed Lock and Dam No. 1 and the tonnage originating between Locks Nos. 1 and 10 which did not pass Lock and Dam No. 1.]

Items.	Short tons.	Ton-miles.	Value.
Barges, steel	7,800	142,800	$232,000
Boats, steel	235	11,985	21,150
